Now isn't it reasonable that the right way to cure a cough is to build up your strength again?

Mr. Patrick Wren of N. Birmingham, Alta., knows about this. He says, "I caught a bad cold a year ago and had a bad cough for a long time, but Vinol relieved it completely and built up my health. Vinol is the best medicine I ever used, or heard of for coughs and colds."

This splendid cod liver and iron remedy does not smell or taste like cod liver oil, but is so delicious that children love to take it. Yet it has the strengthening value of cod liver oil, with tonic, blood-building iron.

Chronic bronchitis yields to Vinol because it builds up the system in all weakened and rundown conditions. You can get your money back any time if Vinol does not do all we say.

MAN ON MURDER CHARGE COLLAPSES IN THE COURT

Faints When Charge is Read and Again at the Sight of His Little Child---Finally Falls Prostrate in Gaol Yard and Case Has to be Adjourned.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, ONT., DEC. 15.—Big Daniel Reynolds, over six feet tall, broad in proportion, and weighing over two hundred pounds, arraigned this morning, charged with murdering Bert Colver, with an axe, fainted, and fell flat when the charge against him was read; after being revived he caught sight of his six-months' old child in the corridor, and collapsed again. In the prison yard, where he was taken for fresh air, he fell on his face, blackening both eyes, and mutilating his cheeks terribly. Finally, Magistrate Chittick had to postpone the hearing of the investigation until the twenty-second instant.

THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE IS RECALLED

Mr. Edward Green Shows Examiner Letter Written by His Brother in 1858 in Which He Tells of Participating in That Immortal Feat---A Graphic Description.

Some historic manuscript was unearthed this morning, in the form of a letter dated 22nd March, 1858. In this letter, which was written to Mr. Edward Green, of Water street, who was at that time a Sergeant Major in the 5th Dragoon Guards, a description of the famous charge of the Light Brigade, at the Battle of Balaclava, is given. This day's fight is said to be the hardest ever recorded in history. The writer, though only 20 years of age, was very little under six feet in height. He was engaged with the heavy brigade, on the same field of battle with the Light Brigade. (The term 'Heavy Brigade' may be associated with the 5th Dragoons).

While the letter is, in some parts, torn, and the ink faded, for the most part the characters are plainly discernible, and those who have a liking for military history, will be interested in the following extract:

"I lost my horse in that glorious charge, and had to fight my way out on foot, but thanks be to Providence, I escaped through all without any injury worth noticing; I, of course, got another horse, when I could, and joined in again. We lost very few in that charge—two men killed, and about 22 wounded, many of whom died afterwards from their wounds. We had 27 horses killed and wounded. This was in the 5th alone, but we were more lucky than our neighbours, the Light Brigades, for they were completely cut up in about 3 hours after we had our charge. It was a sad sight to witness their appearance after their charge, coming out of it by twos and threes, some on horse back, but nearly all on foot. It was an unfortunate day for them—poor fellows; but it put such a check on the Russians that they would never attempt another attack with us in the open field again.

CHRISTMAS SUGGESTIONS AT PETERBOROUGH HARDWARE CO.

SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY

To a number the advent of Christmas is looked upon with many misgivings. With its advent comes that oft-repeated and sometimes vexatious question, "What shall I get for Christmas?"

The custom of Christmas gifts is an ancient one, dating back nearly two thousand years ;and as no authority has been able to advance any reasonable theory why the custom should be abolished it has been taken for granted that it is a necessary one. To a great many shoppers it obtains as being a necessary evil, especially when it devolves upon one to purchase Xmas presents for the entire family and a portion of the community besides. The difficulty of successfully accomplishing this so-called arduous task would probably not be so great were they to call at the Peterborough Hardware Company's headquarters on George Street when out on their shopping campaign. There they would find a large and well assorted stock of Xmas goods.

A visit to the store will reduce your shopping anxiety to a minimum. You will find here displayed a large and tastefully arranged assortment of goods suitable for Xmas presents. It would be invidious to select any particular line for comment, as each and every article of the immense stock represents "Quality."

We cannot conclude this article without making a passing reference to the beautiful display of silverware which is to be seen here. This consists of knives, forks, spoons, percolators, chafing dishes, and many other lines of high-grade silverware, also including the finest selection of shaving and toilet articles in the city. Each and every article carries with it a guarantee of good value, and is a marvel of beauty and perfection. These and many other items are unusually appropriate at this season, and at the special prices quoted they are especially attractive to housekeepers and others.

The Peterborough Hardware Co. have built up an enviable reputation for themselves, as regards prompt and efficient store service. Are you ready for the Christmas rush? queried the Examiner. A question which was answered in the affirmative, and backed up by the assertion that ample provision had been made to handle the Xmas trade, which promises to be unusually heavy this year.

Only a few days remain till Christmas, and it behoves Xmas buyers to get out and shop early. There is no more opportune time to purchase that present for husband, wife, sweetheart, or whoever it may be, than now. And there is no store in the city better adapted to supply these wants, at prices to suit every purse, than the Peterborough Hardware Company, George Street.

Majority Is 622

Official Figures for Election Made by Returning Officer

Sheriff Hall, returning officer for West Peterborough for the Provincial elections, has made his official returns, which show that Mr. Peck's majority is 622. The unofficial figures as given on Tuesday were for the most part correct, but a few corrections have reduced Mr. Peck's majority a little. The complete figures will be given to-morrow.

Got Away With $2,500

DUNKIRK, N. Y., DEC. 15.—"Have one on us," said three men who entered the saloon of Alexander Matuschitz at noon to-day. While the proprietor's back was turned they put knockout drops in his glass, and before he recovered, carefully blew open his safe, abstracted twenty-five hundred dollars in cash and got clear away. There is no clue.

30 DAYS IN GAOL

Still Another Blacklister Figures in the Police Court This Morning

OTHER OFFENDERS

Michael Fallon appeared in the police court this morning on a charge of being found under the influence of liquor last night while on the 'Indian' list. Another man was charged with purchasing on behalf of Fallon, intoxicating liquor.

Fallon when put in the witness box, related the familiar old tale of having met a stranger on Charlotte street, who, following a query as to where the G.T.R. station was, walked on. He had proceeded but a short distance, when he turned back and asked Fallon if he would like a drink. Fallon replied in the affirmative and the stranger pulled out a large flask and handed it to the prisoner, who drank about half the contents. He denied having met the other defendant late in the evening after he had procured the liquor from the stranger on Charlotte street.

"If you are going to lie, lie consistently," admonished His Worship, after the prisoner had made several contradictory statements regarding his movements during the evening. He also swore than no arrangement was made with the other man to procure liquor.

Detective Newhall, when put into the box, gave his evidence as follows: "I first saw Fallon and the other man about 8.10 on George St. The latter went into a hotel and was followed by Fallon, who entered by a rear door. They proceeded to the wash room and a whispered conversation took place which was overheard by us. Prisoner then went out and returned later carrying something under his coat. We overheard Fallon saying something about a drink of whiskey and three bottles of beer. Fallon then came into the yard and was later followed by the other man.

At this juncture the two men were arrested by P. C. Kidd. One of them put up a strong fight, but was soon overpowered by the officers.

P. C. Kidd, when put in the box, corroborated Newhall's evidence and added that when Fallon was arrested he noticed a strong odour of whiskey off Fallon.

No defence was offered. The man charged with supplying liquor was given a chance to tell his story in the witness box, but declined the invitation.

The man that supplied the liquor was fined $50 to be paid forthwith, in default of payment 30 days in gaol with hard labour.

His Worship imposed a fine of $20 in Fallon's case, to be paid forthwith, and in default of payment 30 days in gaol at hard labour.

It was John Welsh's second appearance before Magistrate Dumble within a week. Drunk in a public place was the charge. He was fined $2 and costs, amounting in all to $5.85. As he had no money he will spend a week on the hill.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

FRIDAY, DEC. 15, 1911

MUDDLE AND MUD.

In some parts of the country, the farmers are plowing. That's nothing remarkable. The people of Peterborough, right in the heart of the city—on its main street—are ploughing through a deep layer of mud. If the thousands of dollars that have been wasted on George street, had been put on in the form of good, substantial street metal, mixed with brains, and the application of the first principles of permanent road-making, we should have had something besides mud for our money. But the world over, in street building, muddle makes mud at the right season. Who dares stand on a street corner and assert that we have effective municipal government in Peterborough, now, or for the past twenty or thirty years?

BEAUTY OF TRADE RESTRICTION.

The Winnipeg Tribune recites the experience of Mr. Roderick McKenzie, a farmer, near Brandon, who recently shipped two carloads of barley to the United States, and after paying $764 in duty, received $614 more than if he had sold it in his home market. The Tribune after pointing out that the defeat of reciprocity has meant a loss of nearly $1,400 to the grower of that quantity of barley doing business in the natural way, remarks: "That's what the old song 'Rule Britannia' sung in Ontario is costing." It was only the tune and form of "Rule Britannia" that was used; the words were "Rule Combinia—the trusts shall rule the slaves." They tell us that reciprocity is dead, but the vicious effects of its destruction, live in vigorous form.

MR. BOURASSA SPEAKS.

Hon. Mr. Graham will probably be returned to the Dominion House for South Renfrew without a contest, according to the local arrangement between the two parties. The matter was in doubt for some time. The Conservative machine at Ottawa demanded that in spite of the arrangement, which gave Mr. McGarry the Ontario seat without opposition on condition that Mr. Graham's return should not be contested, Mr. Graham should be given the bitterest kind of opposition. But the arrangement between the local parties, will be carried out. Mr. Bourassa, the master of the Borden administration, has spoken. In his paper, Le Devoir, he says that it is only right and fair that the agreement reached by local Conservatives and Liberals, should be respected. That settles it. If Mr. Borden yielded to Mr. Bourassa's demands in the matter of the formation of his cabinet, and in matters of national and imperial policy, surely Mr. Bourassa will have his way in the matter of a petty bye-election

TRADE DISLOYALTY.

Canada's total trade in the past fiscal year with the United States was $388,440,000, and with Great Britain $242,742,000. On the theory of the anti-reciprocity spellbinders, our loyalty must be in great danger, and a large proportion of the commercial interests of Canada and disloyalty trading—presumably at a profit—with the United States, and neglecting the British market. During the last fiscal year Canada's trade with the United States increased 61-2 millions, while out of a total increase in our trade with the world of 76 1-2 millions, the increased trade with Great Britain was only 2 1-4 millions, thirty times less than our trade with the United States. An increase of trade with the United States 30 times greater than that with Great Britain, shows that there is still some work for the flag wavers to do, the gentlemen who told us it was disloyal to have larger trade upon easier conditions. We still have a big trade with the enemy, tremendously increasing. What are the flag-flappers going to do about it?

MIGHT BE GREATLY IMPROVED.

The Conservative press is rather proud of the earnings of the Provincial railway—it shows a great increase in gross and net revenue. If, however, the Whitney government had taken energetic measures to settle the lands and develop the resources of New Ontario, the revenue of the Provincial railway would have been very much greater. The produce of the farm would have needed transportation, and to thousands of homes and farmsteads, the railway would have carried the ploughs, the reapers, the mowers, the stoves, the furniture, the hardware, the dry goods, etc., that would have meant added business for that manufactures the supplies of hu-creased operation, increased employment and increased payment of wages to every factory in older Ontario, that manufacture the supplies of human needs in a civilized and prosperous community. One would hardly think that the opening of New Ontario would mean much to an industry like the Canadian General Electric Company; yet one sees in the advertisement pages in an engineering journal, in the advertisement of the Cobalt Electric Company, the cut of a huge generator, recognizable from the picture as a product of the shops of the Canadian General Electric Works in Peterborough. If New Ontario had not been "discovered"—explored by the enterprise of a Liberal government—if a Liberal government had not built the Provincial railway—both of which were opposed by Sir James Whitney—there would have been no order for generators from New Ontario, or for the mining machinery that older Ontario now supplies. Premier Whitneys' government, has in respect of our north country—as one of its own Conservative organs charges, been "asleep." All it has done, or the most it has done, is to consider the revenue producing end of it, to suck revenue from it and refuse to return it, or a fair or even decent proportion, in the form of improvements, such as a people in new communities demand. But the end of this supineness and indifference is at hand. The little band of Opposition members in the House will stir the seven year sleepers and keep them awake, if they don't force them to do something besides practise political statics.

THE GRIP OF THE COMBINE.

The Borden government went into power by the help of opposition to reciprocity as one of the many factors. The west strongly declared for it and is suffering from the effects of the rejection of trade facility. Wheat in Minneapolis is 14 cents higher than in Canada. The Borden government not only represents injustice to the west through popular opposition, but it takes a hand on its own account. Ever since the Foster tariff of 1894, rough lumber has been admitted into Canada from the United States free of duty. Under the customs definition, partially undressed lumber has been admitted as rough ever since 1894. Now, notice the hand of the lumber combine, clasped by the hand of a government created largely by combine influence. Immediately after the elections, the British Columbia lumber mills combine raised a question as to the interpretation of the Customs Act and succeeded in securing from the new Minister of Customs, an interpretation that provides for the reimposition of duty upon a large proportion of the rough but partially dressed lumber which has been regarded as rough, and so admitted free for the past seventeen years. The Minister of Customs defended his action as being in accordance with the Act. The Liberal opposition contended that the interpretation of the Act was a matter of opinion, and that if there were any doubt, then the struggling western settlers, not the combine, should have the benefit of the doubt, as had been given by the Conservative government from '94 to '96, and the Liberal government subsequently. But to no avail. The power of the lumber combines was paramount and the western settler is prevented from getting cheaper lumber, by the amount of duty imposed—25 cents on the dollar. The duty has to be paid and the lumber combine of British Columbia is enabled to increase its prices to the western settler twenty-five per cent. and handicap the western setler to that extent in his contribution to the development of the country, to the creation of a market for the manufactured products of Eastern Canada. That is one thing many of the electors of Canada were stampeded into voting for—the benefit of the combines — which they were told, and foolishly believed, they were voting against.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND THE UNIVERSITY.

People who have been in doubt as to the infectious and contagious character of political hydrocephalis — big-head, associated with abundant dilution of grey matter, and the scorn of the people that go with it—can no longer be in doubt. At a recent arts dinner, the editor-in-chief of 'Varsity, the "organ" of Toronto University, in responding to the toast of "The Press," said that every effort should be made to meet King Demos on his own grounds and "fight him tooth and nail." "King Demos," following a reference in a previous speech by Dr. Hutton, refers to the press as the typified voice of the people. When we hear a prominent man associated with the Toronto University, scoff at the people and urge "fighting them tooth and nail," we can easily trace the inspiration of his action to Sir James Whitney who, in his attitude and utterances, shows such a great contempt and scorn for popular rights, or the right of anybody to hold an opinion counter to his own. Sir James has shown the measure of his sympathy with the people, by his action of endowing the University in the proportion of $150 to $1, as compared with the Public schools. No one objects to generous support of our great seat of learning, Toronto University; it deserves liberal government subvention, but not at the expense of the Public school system of the Provincial railway and in-as an unfair, policy. If the preparatory, the primary schools, the colleges of the common people, are starved, the popular supply of students for the University will in time be cut off, and only the sons of rich men, who can stand the expense of a preparatory college, will be available as students. The editor of 'Varsity has caught the spirit of Sir James, contempt of demos—the people. The Provincial University is closely related to the Public school—they are interdependent. High school teachers, trained in the University, are necessary for the preparation of teachers for our Public schools. The round is thus made, and the proper relation should be maintained. By all means keep the University up to the mark, but by all means keep the Public schools, for whose efficiency the University in chief exists, also up to the mark; don't gorge the one with money mark ;don't gorge the one with money and starve the other. Neither one should be financially spoon-fed, at the expense of the other.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

In last Monday's elections, the Conservatives of Ontario who fell short of polling three-fifths of the vote, elected four-fifths of the members. Where would Sir James's majority have been if he applied the three-fifths strangle to his candidates, as he applies it to local option votes.

For four years longer the man who builds a house in Peterborough will be fined for his enterprise, and the speculative holder of land will be encouraged to look idly on and see his his property increased in value through the expenditure on new buildings by his neighbours, and at the same time enjoy comparative immunity from paying his fair share of taxation.

A CLOSE SHAVE.

(Montreal Herald)

Sir James Whitney and Mr. Foy, between them, pretty nearly did for their cabinet colleague, Hon. Dr. Rheaume. He has pulled through his election by a bare majority of seven votes, and will be fortunate if he still holds them after a recount. He may lose altogether.

This result was produced by the way Sir James and Mr. Foy handled the bi-lingual schools issue. They seemed to forget that they and Dr. Rheaume were in the same boat. When Mr. Foy was elbowed out of South Toronto he took refuge in North Toronto, and when the bi-lingual school issue looked to be making trouble for him he took the easiest way of getting himself out of trouble, and the declaration that got him out got Dr. Rheaume in, for it was an uncompromising denial that the French speaking people of Ontario have any right at all to have their children taught in any tongue but English. Sir James Whitney, when he was cornered, denied that there were any bi-lingual schools at all, which statement it took some nerve to make, as an inspector appointed by Sir James a year ago, is about ready with his report on three hundred of them. It is not, perhaps, surprising that the people in Dr. Rheaume's county, like those in Prescott, Russell, Sturgeon Falls, and Glengarry, should take it into their noddles that they can expect any sympathy to expect from the Whitney Government.

An Adventure With Baboons

New York, Dec. 13.—According to the crew of the British freighter Kassenga, which arrived at New York the other day from Calcutta, a midshipman named G. W. Gregga had a thrilling adventure with baboons in East Africa that will make him careful about walking at night in tropical jungles in the future.

While the ship was lying alongside the pier at Mombassa, where Col. Roosevelt landed for his African expedition, Gregga, according to his story, took a moonlight walk inland one fine night. He heard the zebras calling to their first born and the secretary birds high up in the palm trees, keeping a look-out for wild animals that might come down from the near-by hills.

The sailor had a small revolver with him and did not feel afraid. The fascination of the moonbeams shining through the rich tropical foliage lured him to go further from the shore than he had intended. He was about to turn back when, to his astonishment, he suddenly found himself surrounded by a small army of baboons of all sizes. They chattered to each other and pulled and pushed him through the dense undergrowth into the thick of the jungle to what appeared to be their camp. There they were met by more baboons, which swung down by their tails from the mango trees and peered into the midshipman's face to see what he was like.

"I was afraid to move," said Greggs. "Several of the more curious baboons came up and tore off pieces of my clothing, apparently for souvenirs. I closed my eyes. The simians allowed me to lie down on a rough bed of grass, but never removed the guard that surrounded me. I was fed with wild bananas and nuts, and that was the only food I saw in the baboon village while I was there. I could probably have made my escape, but I did not dare to run any risks.

"The baboons seemed to have a small vocabulary of their own, and it was uncanny to watch them walking about, and the females washing their children with far more tenderness than many human beings. I remained with the baboons for two nights and two days, and on the third night I was rescued by a party of my shipmates headed by the bo'sun.

"The shouts of Ahoy there, Greggs, where away, shipmate!" sounded like sweet music to my ears. When the baboons heard the noise they fled to the tall trees, and I saw them no more."

IRISH TOBACCO

Perhaps the time is not far off when Irish cigarettes will be the proper thing to smoke. It all depends on the working out of the economic problem involved in the cost of curing, marketing and manufacturing, since it is proved by experimental plantations in Meath and in other parts of Ireland that the fragrant leaf of good quality can be raised in the Emerald Isle. Really there was no need of the current experiments which Sir Nugent Everard and other growers are making to demonstrtate the adaptability of Irish soil to tobacco culture. Up to eighty years ago tobacco was commercially cultivated in Wexford. From a few plants surviving from the old days in Wexford gardens have come the slips that are now making about 120 acres of tobacco lands objects of a good deal of attention to Irish agriculturists. The revival of the industry is contingent not on the soil but on the profit the investment nets. For the present, Irish pipe tobacco, Irish cigars and Irish cigarettes enjoy a patriotic vogue in Dublin, but when the novelty departs and foreign competition, alarmed by the experiment, begins to cut prices to hold the market, the rub will come. Then will Irish tobacco culture either become a permanency or sink back into a memory like unto that which clusters about the name of Wexford.—Boston Transcript.

A WIRELESS-OPERATED BOAT

There was exhibited on the Danube at Vienna, during the last week, a boat which is controlled by wireless electricity from the bank, without any person being on board.

This boat is described as being constructed on the system of Wirth, Beck & Knauss, of Nuremberg, Germany. It has attracted many spectators—military, scientific and simply curious—who pay a small sum for admission to the immediate vicinity of the operator on the bank. The boat carries a storage battery which furnishes its motive power, the "system" or invention consisting in the adaptation of wireless electric waves of different lengths to the control of the motive power, steering gear and other mechanism. This system, it is also claimed, will prevent disturbance by electric waves elsewhere generated within the same sphere of influence.

At a recent exhibition the boat was manifestly operated without other control than that exercised by the manipulator of the wireless mechanism on the bank. It moved forward and back, turned right and left, described figures, was guided to definite points, rang bells, exhibited flags and lights, fired guns, etc., giving proof of effective control. The mechanism is, however, far from perfect; the speed is not great, the responses to the operator's will are hesitating and inexact, and the range is limited to a few score yards. The exhibition, in fact, was notable only as the beginning of the development of a mechanism of possible great importance.—Consular Reports.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"I live for those that love me,
For those that know me true,
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And waits my coming, too;
For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the wrongs that need resistance,
For the future in the distance,
For the good that I can do."

—G. L. Banks.

Is personal happiness your only ideal and ambition?

When I meet with anyone who is disappointed and disgusted with life, who says, "What are we here for anyhow? I can't see much sense in it," who tells me that even when his dearest desire and ambition has been satisfied, he has soon wearied of the gratification, I always want to ask him that question—

"Is personal happiness your only ideal in life?"

Do you know, I think that that is the trouble with a great many people. It is the reason they are dissatisfied and feel that something is lacking in life—their one ideal is personal happiness.

To be sure, they may seek it in ways which do not at once appeal to us as unselfish. For instance, one man's chief aim is to win some high office. We say it is a worthy ambition, and applaud him when he succeeds. And yet absolutely his own motive was desire for personal happiness in the honour and envy of other men.

Another man is in love. He will make any sacrifice to win the woman he loves. He dreams by night of the little home he is to make for her and himself and works for it by day. We call his sacrifices unselfish, but in the last analysis has he any aim or motive except personal happiness?

Another man studies so diligently at college that he graduates with the highest of honours. He is praised for his persistence and application, but after all did he have any ideal beyond personal happiness in his efforts? Probably not.

I fancy I can hear some folks protesting that this is all nonsense, and saying that, of course, no one has any ideal beyond personal happiness, if I make such an all-inclusive term.

Perhaps they are right, but I can't think so. I believe there are many people who really do live, to some extent at least, "for the future in the distance, for the good that they can do."

When any man looks ahead and finds that the only plans he is making for his whole life, the only ambition he has, the only care he has are plans, ambitions and cares for personal happiness, I think he is in a bad way.

Whether he gets what he wants or not, he is sure to be a failure. He is sure to be saying sooner or later that life is empty and meaningless, stale and unprofitable.

"Often when you look for one thing you can find another," I wrote the other day, and this is one of the occasions when that is true.

Seek solely for personal happiness and you will probably miss it.

Seek to be worth something in the world. Have an ideal of work well done, of social service, of helping the life force by your life to get a little nearer the ideal type it is trying to produce, and I firmly believe you will have a fair chance of finding personal happiness as a by product of the greater gain.

Is my only ideal in life personal happiness?

Surely that is a question we all ought to ask ourselves once in awhile.

GOLD HOARD HIDDEN NEAR MAN'S BODY

ST. JOHN'S, QUE., DEC. 13.—The mysterious possibilities connected with the discovery of the skeleton of a man in the woods near St. Luc on Sunday last have increased with the discovery, beneath a stump nearby where the skeleton mouldered of a little hoard of gold, amounting to $330. Even after all clues have been discussed by a jury empanelled by Coroner Chevalier, however, the man's identity remains still unguessed.

The weather and the creatures of the woods had long since stripped the flesh from the bones. The material of the clothes which had once covered the body, lay in scraps about it, and the watch which the dead man had worn in life, had fallen through his skeleton and was almost washed underneath the ground by successive rains. The timepiece had a French movement. A set of prayer beads and a prayer book were the only other articles discovered. It is assumed from the presence of these that the man was a Roman Catholic, and his funeral service will be conducted in the St. Luc church to-morrow morning. The body will then be placed in the parish vault at the coroner's disposal, until next spring.

The story of the skeleton is a constant topic of discussion in the vicinity of the long undiscovered tragedy. It will pass into history as one of the weird countryside tales which finally developed into masterpieces of the mysterious.

It is thought very strange that nobody in the vicinity can even guess at the man's identity. Nobody remembers having ever seen in the vicinity anyone who might be he. The body might have been dropped from an airship, so unaccountable is its presence in this not very thickly settled district.

MR. GILLESPIE NOT A CANDIDATE

Ald. Bradburn has the mayoralty field to himself so far. Although a deputation waited upon Ex-Ald. Geo. A. Gillespie urging him to become a candidate, Mr. Gillespie in an interview yesterday, authorized the Examiner to say definitely in his behalf, that he will not be in the field.

Ald. Buller has arrived at the same conclusion.

Both of these gentlemen were mentioned as possible candidates, and it looked, for a while, as if there was going to be a three-cornered fight.

CIVIL ACTION BEING HEARD

After the case of the Crown vs. Crouter had been disposed of this morning, the case of Thos. Harrison, Fraserville, vs. the Toronto Bank, was proceeded with.

Mr. W. H. Moore is representing the Bank, while Mr. S. T. Medd represents Harrison. Mr. Medd briefly outlined the case to Judge Huycke prior to evidence being taken, stating that it was a suit brought by Harrison to decide the question "whether the estate of the late Mrs. E. Harrison is entitled to the goods on the farm, and which the defendants' sold, claiming they were the property of the husband."

HAIR HEALTH

If You Have Scalp or Hair Trouble, Accept This Offer.

When we promise your money back for the mere asking if Rexall "93" Hair Tonic does not do as we claim it will, you certainly have no reason for even hesitating to try it. We do not ask you to obligate yourself in any way.

We could not afford to so strongly endorse Rexall "93" Hair Tonic and continue to sell it as we do, if it did not do all we claim. Should our enthusiasm carry us away, and Rexall "93" Hair Tonic not give entire satisfaction to the users, they would lose faith in us and our statements, and in consquence our business prestige would suffer.

Therefore, when we assure you that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will promptly eradicate dandruff, stimulate hair growth and prevent premature baldness, you may rest assured we know what we are talking about.

We honestly believe that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will do more than any other human agency towards restoring hair growth and hair health. It is not greasy and will not gum the scalp or hair or cause permanent stain. It is as pleasant to use as pure cold water. It comes in two sizes, prices 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain it only at our store.—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

ENJOYABLE RECITAL

Last evening Miss Bernice Giroux entertained her musical classmates at St. Mary's Convent, by rendering a very select programme of instrumental music. Miss Giroux played with brilliancy and expression, and was heartily applauded. The vocal number was much appreciated, and the "string" selection was enjoyed by every one. Following was the programme:

(a) Taylor—"Octave Study".
(b) Bach—"Prelude and Fugue in D major".

Vocal Duo—"Eileen Allanna" — Eileen McCabe, Katie Gannon.

(a) Staub—"Sons Bois".
(b) Wieniawski—"Valse de Concert".

Instrumental—"Myosotis".
Piano—Hariet Pierce.
Mandoline—Eileen McCabe, Mary O'Toole.
Violins—Jas. Condon, Jack McCabe.

(a) Rubenstein— "Kamenoi Ostrow"
(b) Mattel—"Pearls and Rubies".

FRACTURED COLLAR BONE

Mr. Charles M. Haslitt of Park street, south, a carpenter, was the victim of a painful accident this morning, while engaged in erecting a house in the south end of the city. He and another man were putting on a drop siding, when the frail scaffold they were standing on, gave way, and both men fell to the ground—a distance of some 12 feet, Mr. Haslitt fracturing his collar bone. The other man, whose name is not to hand, escaped with a slight shaking up. Mr. Haslitt was taken to his home, where medical assistance was summoned, and it is hoped he may have a rapid recovery.

FIRE HALL NOTES.

Mr. Norman R. Wilson, C. F. Canadian Underwriters Association's Inspector, accompanied by Fire Chief Howard, continued the inspection of the fire hydrants throughout the city to-day.

A small fire at the C. G. E. gave the Department a run last night, about 7.30 o'clock. The damage was slight.

A test of the fire engine will be made to-morrow, under the supervision of the Underwriters' Inspector.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"DEAR OLD BILLY."

A very funny farce, charmingly presented, would be an adequate summing up of the impressions of the large audience which saw the production of "Dear Old Billy" at the Grand Opera House last night, by the famous English comedian, Mr. William Hawtrey, and his capable caste. It was the first appearance of Mr. Hawtrey in this city, and he won instantaneous favour by his clever comedy methods. In the role of the henpecked husband seeking rest and repose after many years of married life, he was irresistibly funny—in fact, he had but to waddle across the stage to get a laugh. His methods were clean-cut and clever and his work from beginning to end was delightful.

The action hinges on the fact that William Smith (William Hawtrey) has secured a separation from his wife, one of the conditions of the agreement being that they are not to speak to each other or reveal their relationship. Dear Old Billy goes to a seaside resort, seeking repose and finds it—not. He immediately becomes the storm centre of half a dozen love affairs, in which he is innocently involved, and to further complicate his difficulties, his wife comes to the same resort. Billy's troubles deepen as the enjoyment of the audience increases, but finally the clouds roll by and he goes back to married life.

Mr. Hawtrey is supported by an English company of undoubted merit, being given artistic and adequate assistance by the whole company. The dialogue is bright and brisk, and although traces of the company's tour of the United States have crept into the lines, the alterations are not unpleasant.

"THE OTHER WISE MAN."

To-night, the public will have the opportunity of seeing the Oriental cantata, by the Murray Street Baptist Sunday School. Last night the scholars and teachers witnessed the presentation, and it was, indeed, a beautiful sight. Every part was well taken and the music and chorus were inspiring. The part of "The Other Wise Man," was taken by Walter Bailey and that of Abgarus by Gordon Matthews, while they were supported by those who showed not only natural ability, but painstaking training.

The public will be admitted to-night and doubtless the church will be taxed to its utmost capacity.

MUNICIPAL FOREST

San Diego, Cal., is said to be the first American city to take up scientific forestry as a municipal enterprise. It has, however, an exceptional opportunity. The city owns 2,000 acres of land that has heretofore lain waste, as a heritage from the time when it was a Mexican pueblo. This tract is now set aside for growing encalypti, and last spring forty thousand seedlings were planted. Eucalyptus is very valuable and takes the place of many of the more familiar hardwoods that are becoming so expensive; it grows with truly tropical rapidity; it will stand an enormous amount of cutting, and seems to thrive under it; and a grove once well started apparently will last forever. In San Diego the more optimistic taxpayers are looking forward to a time when the forest will relieve them of all taxes and perhaps even pay them for being citizens of San Diego!—The Survey.

LARGE ATTENDANCE

The weekly lectures at the Normal school are evidently proving of considerable interest as the attendance continues to increase week by week.

Last evening's lecture was delivered by Miss Amelia Warnock, of the Mail and Empire staff, who chose for her subject, "The Music of Literature." This is the third visit Miss Warnock has paid to Peterboorugh and each lecture has been eagerly listened to. She is of the journalistic staff of the Mail and Empire and may be identified as "Katherine Hale."

In her lecture last evening she demonstrated in a masterly manner how literary men and their writings correspond with music. During the course of her remarks, sch said:

"Music was the first thing that ever was. Even with the creation of light and air the conducter between these two was vibration. The Egyptians and the early Greeks made music a God. To-day our most advanced scientists have gone back to early days, and say music is the soul of everything. It is generally accepted that before human beings talked, they sang. Then, too, we know that the whole world gives out tone."

"There is a connection also between colour and music. In France they are experimenting on a vacuum piano in which symphonies by colour are to be played by electric wires."

"All great writers have been general musicians if they anticipated it or not. Tone, rythm and tune have been their study, and they have walked all the byways of life."

Here the lecturer dwelt at length on the relation between literary men and music. She chose to instance her theory that each individual represented a certain musical instrument, the poets, Robert Browning, Elizabeth Barnett Browning, Tennyson, Shelley, Christina Rossette, William Gates and Walt Whitman ,and read a verse or two of the writings of each, showing how, in tone, rythm and time, each represented a separate musical instrument.

"The world," continued the speaker, "is all moving with unloosed song. There is enough mystery, enough wonder, in the world, to keep us busy all our days. If we were to discover half we should be accused of sorcery, of second sight, yet how simple is the key to give us the truth. That key is faith."

The next lecture will take place on Jan. 12th.

HAVE A DETAILED LIST OF 100 EXPLOSIONS

Federal Investigators Using McManigal's Confession to Delve Into Six Years' Operations

IN SEVENTEEN STATES

INDIANAPOLIS, DEC. 14.—After weeks of preliminary work and probing by Government agents in many parts of the country where explosions have taken place, the Federal Grand Jury was ready to begin here to-day its investigation of an alleged nation-wide conspiracy by which more than 100 structures were blown up, and in which dynamite, nitro glycerine and other explosives were carried into at least seventeen States.

A detailed list of 100 explosions in structures erected by firms employing non-union workmen, as furnished to the Government by the National Erectors Association, was prepared for the Grand Jury.

Extend Back Six Years.

The list, beginning with explosions of structural works in Massachusetts and Connecticut, in the summer of 1905 cites the damage done up until October 16th, 1911, and points out, as indicating participation by others than John J. and Jas. B. McNamara and Ortie E. McManigal that crimes of this nature were perpetrated in seventeen States. The explosions began two years prior to the employment by the McNamaras of McManigal, who, according to his confession, blew up his first building in Detroit in June, 1907, "with twenty sticks of dynamite," and they extend into the present year several months after the arrest of McNamaras.

There were two explosions in 1905, eight in 1906, six in 1907, twenty-six in 1908, twenty in 1909, twenty-five in 1910, and thirteen in 1911. They occurred in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maryland, Wisconsin, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, Utah, Washington, and California. Ohio, with twenty leads the list in the number of explosions. Illinois, Pennsylvania, New York, Indiana and Missouri come next.

Explosions After Arrests Were Made.

After the arrest of the McNamaras explosions took place at Mount Vernon, N.Y., and at Cleveland. The last attempted explosion is recorded in the list as having taken place on October 16, this year, near Santa Barbara, Cal., at a bridge erected three years ago. Dynamite was found near the bridge just before the special train bearing President Taft passed over it.

After the explosions of the year just preceding, the National Erectors Association in May, 1906, was formed by contractors, who, in pursuance of a plan to maintain an "open shop" employed detectives to investigate the dynamiting.

Making Use of McManigal.

The announcement that W. E. Griffin, Chief of Police of Kansas City, Mo., would arrive here late to-day, prepared to testify concerning various explosions in Kansas City, drew attention to the important part which the confession of McManigal is to play in the probe. Details of the blowing up of five structures in Kansas City which resulted in the partial wrecking of viaducts, buildings, and derricks under construction by firms employing non-union men, are in the hands of the Government investigators. Bearing on these McManigal, in his confession, quoted at least one of the dates, saying:

"On Aug. 23, I pulled off the McClintic-Marshall job at Kansas City. I did not see J. J. McNamara, although he was in town at the time. From Kansas City I went to Peoria, Ill., J. J. McNamara returned to Indianapolis on August 29, or 30, 1910, at which time he paid me for doing the Kansas City job. I told him about the bad luck I had had on the Peoria and Kansas City jobs and he gave me h— about not getting both the clocks that did not go off."

The clocks referred to by Mc. Manigal were the alarm clocks used by him to regulate the time for the ignition of the fuses. Attached to the winding key of each alarm was a small sheet of copper, so adjusted that when the alarm was released the copper in turning joined two electric wires which thus created a current, and caused the spark that exploded the dynamite or nitro-glycerine.

"FESTIVAL OF THE NATIONS" WAS A SPLENDID SUCCESS

The Bazaar, which is being conducted under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of St. James' church, in the Market Hall, yesterday, and today, has been a marked success. The Bazaar, which is known under the caption of "The Festival of the Nations" is both unique and picturesque. The booths are representative of various nations, and are decorated accordingly, while the ladies in charge are bedecked in costumes, in keeping with the respective booths.

At these booths are offered for sale all kinds of fancy work, and home-made cooking, all of which can be had at a nominal figure. Dinner was served yesterday from twelve till two o'clock, and in the evening tea was provided, and this was followed by an excellent programme at which a large gathering was present. This same course of procedure will prevail to-day. Among the booths deserving of special mention was the United States, and the Chinese booth. The decorations on these were elaborate, and prettily arranged. A glance at the programme appended will show it to be a patriotic and varied one. A portion of the same programme will be rendered this evening.

DIVORCE SUIT HANGS ON A STOVE PIPE

MOUNT VERNON, N.Y., Dec. 13. A piece of stovepipe nine inches long figures as an interesting exhibit today in the trail of the suit for divorce brought by Mrs. Julia Siebrecht against Henry A. Siebrecht, Jr., the son of a wealthy Fifth Avenue florist, before Supreme Court Justice Mills in the Supreme Court Chambers in Mount Vernon.

Mrs. Siebrecht names Mrs. Francina Miner, wife of Frank Miner, of New Rochelle, and it was through this stovepipe from the room above that Mrs. Tucker, of Hawleyville, Conn., testified that she saw Mr. Siebrecht kiss Mrs. Miner in Mrs. Miner's room while they were spending the summer at the Tucker residence in Hawleyville.

The stovepipe was brought to court to prove to Judge Mills the distance a person could see through it from one room to another, as it was contended by counsel for Mr. Siebrecht that the range of vision through it was very small. A civil engineer testified as to the distance a person could be seen through the pipe.

A negro maid, who was in the employ of the Siebrechts in their New Rochelle home for two months, swore that on one evening while a bridge party was being held there she was in the dining-room, and peeking from behind the portieres into the sitting-room, she saw Mrs. Miner and Siebrecht together. She said the rest of the players were in the parlour, including Mrs. Siebrecht, and that she saw Mr. Siebrecht kiss Mrs. Miner.

Siebrecht took the witness stand in his own behalf and denied all of the allegations in his wife's complaint, as well as the testimony of the witnesses against him. He said that Mr. and Mrs. Miner had always been his personal friends and that there had been no improper acts between Mrs. Miner and himself. Mr. and Mrs. Miner occupied seats next to the defendant and the three frequently consulted together.

During all of the hearings of the Siebrecht divorce case Mr. Miner has shown implicit faith in his wife, and has even gone on the witness stand in the interest of Mr. Siebrecht.

MILLIONS OF FOLKS USE ONLY CASCARETS

They Never Have Headache, Biliousness, Sluggish Liver or Bowels or a Sick, Sour Stomach

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels; how much your head aches, how miserable and uncomfortable you are from constipation, indigestion, biliousness and sluggish intestines—you always get the desired results with Cascarets and quickly, too.

Don't yet your stomach, liver, and bowels make you miserable another moment; put an end to the headache, biliousness, dizziness, nervousness, sick, sour, gassy stomach, backache and all other distress; cleanse your inside organs of all the poison and effete matter, which is producing the misery.

Take a Cascaret now; don't wait until bedtime. In all the world there is no remedy like this. A 10-cent box means health, happiness and a clear head for months. No more days of gloom and distress if you will take a Cascaret now and then. All druggists sell Cascarets. Don't forget the children their little insides need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

IDENTIFIED BY FINGER PRINTS

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13. — Remarkable features establishing the contention of the finger print school of criminologists that a man cannot disguise the extremities of his hands, no matter what he does to them and disproving the adaptability of the Bertillon measurement system to the identification of criminals, have developed in the recent arrest here of James Smith, now proved by the police to be an arch murderer.

Smith, arrested for attacking a grocer with a hatchet and suspected of complicity in the murder of William Mickle, a tobacconist, for nearly two weeks thwarted all efforts to identify him. He remained reticent as to his past history and accepted the "third degree" in such a matter of fact sort of way that he immediately won the name of the "man of mystery."

Efforts to identify him by means of the Bertillon system proved futile. He was supposed to be John Kabusta, a Polish-American with many aliases, wanted by the Chicago police for the murder of two men more than five years ago. When it seemed that the prisoner would inevitably remain the "man of mystery" a reporter while in the vicinity of one of the crimes for which the man is being held found a newspaper with red finger prints smearing its pages.

The pages were turned over to the finger print experts of the War and Navy Departments, who asked that they be given a few days in which to compare and examine the lines in the fingers that had gripped the paper.

What the police really wanted was something of the past history of the prisoner. A man whom they knew had nearly mugdered one man for a few dollars, had shot down another while he pleaded for mercy, and had assaulted several others with dangerous weapons within four years and kept reticent must be wanted elsewhere.

To every city of size in the country where the Bertillon measurement system is in vogue descriptions of Smith were sent. No city knew of such a man.

In the meantime the newspaper with the tell-tale finger prints had been photographed.

During the exchange of photographs the Chicago police forwarded to Washington the Bertillon measurements of John Kabusta alias John Gabbage. He was wanted for two such killings as the murder and assault committed in the National Capital by Smith, Kabusta, or Gabbage.

had been liberated but a short time from the Pontiac (Ill.) Reformatory, the communication from the Chicago police chief said, when he killed Louis Fallerdeau and five days later killed John Greigel. Both murders, the Chicago police declared, had been committed by Kabusta for paltry sums.

Kabusta's measurements taken in Chicago in accordance with the Bertillon system shortly before the two murders were compared with those of the prisoner taken since his arrest for the attack upon Bennett, the grocer. After a comparison it was declared that the prisoner was not the man wanted in Chicago.

Then Mr. Taylor, an expert, telephoned the police that the finger prints on the newspaper found in the Bennett wagon corresponded in every detail with the prints of the fingers of John Kabusta, the Chicago murderer.

The discovery has thwarted Smith's attempt to get out of the clutches of the law. Chicago is anxious to obtain possession of him and try him for his crime immediately.

Tells of The Big Fire

(By United Press)

NEW YORK, Dec. 12—"I thought I could not be saved. I saw girls falling all about me; it was awful."

Sobbing with sobs, Annie Gullo, a pretty little dark-haired girl of 20, to-day told a jury in graphic terms of the fire in the Triangle Shirtwaist Company's factory last March, when 142 persons, mostly girls, met death. She was one of the States principal witnesses at the trial of Max Blank and Isaac Harris, proprietors, charged with manslaughter.

"My sister died in the fire," she sobbed. "Last month my poor old father died of grief for her."

There were ominous murmurings in the crowded court room as the pretty young woman spoke.

Someone Yelled "Fire!"

"I worked in the factory for two years," she said. "I was a machine operator. On the day of the fire, I was standing by a desk at the Grand Street side of the buildings. Someone yelled 'fire!' The girls could scarcely believe it.

"I was frightened, but I ran to the Washington Place door and tried to get out. I couldn't open the door; I think it was locked. Then I ran to the Grand Street side; I thought there was no hope for me. I ran to one of the windows and started to jump out, as the other girls were doing, but I didn't have the courage. I turned back. The girls were all screaming: 'What shall we do?'

Door Locked

"I saw one girl fall dead at the Washington Place door, because it was locked and she couldn't get out. Then I gathered my skirts over my head, put my hand over my mouth, and ran back to the Grand Street side. I found an open door and ran down. It was the door we always used; the door where the watchman used to search our pocketbooks and bags to see we didn't carry anything away.

"The heat there was awful; the other girls couldn't use that door."

Mysterious Death

Philadelphia, Dec. 14.—The police of Philadelphia are investigating the mysterious death of a girl known as Mary F. Harmon, 18 years old, who was found in the bedroom of her apartment supposedly dead from gas asphyxiation. Near her on the floor was the unconscious form of the woman's negro maid, who is about 40 years old. The strange feature of the case is that while the younger woman was supposed to be white and the maid a mulatto, the former really had negro blood and was the daughter of the woman who lived with her as her servant.

According to the police the woman maintained this relationship because of the ambition of the mother to contract an advantageous marriage for her offspring. They say the dead girl was the daughter of an educated Englishman, who was at one time a member of the choir of a leading church in Baltimore, and that the girl was educated in a high class seminary in that city, where she passed as a white girl.

The dead girl, who was a good musician, was employed as pianist in a moving picture place, but lost her position on Saturday night. Although there was every indication of gas poisoning, a lamp found burning dimly in the death chamber apparently would disprove this theory, and the police are trying to unravel the mystery.

Joins Lover Who Died First

No wizardry of human art could have staged the grand pathos, the consummate contrasts of the scene in a little room of a bleak back tenement at 134 Cherry street, when the six young women who had been chosen as Nellie Principale's bridesmaids stood weeping beside her body where she lay dead upon the floor.

In the hand of the girl, who had taken her own life, was a picture of the man she was to have married, but who had died five months before.

Nellie Principale was the most beautiful girl of the foreign colony. She was only 15 years old, but with the early maturity of the women of her country, she had been betrothed a year ago to young Sabastino Cozzza, a barber.

Their wedding was to have taken place this winter as soon as he should have completed his night studies for a civil service examination. But, in his love-inspiring eagerness to gain a city position, he worked far into the nights over his books, and, in addition to his long hours, at the shop, the labour wrecked his health.

When she knew the man she loved was a victim of tuberculosis the girl was still insistent that they be married. Even under the shadow of death she made her bridal dress and invited her six dearest friends to attend her at the wedding.

But Sbastine's decline was rapid. He died before the marriage day was set.

From that time on, the girl buried herself in her own grief. The sympathy of friends, the tender attentions of her brother, and father were of no avail. Three times she tried to end her life, and a constant watch was kept over her.

Two weeks ago her stepmother, whom she has loved as deeply as her own mother, died. It was the final blow.

The girls who were to have been her bridesmaids had met early Monday evening, and had started together to visit the Principale home. They had passed through the front tenement and were in the courtyard between it and the rear section of the house when the report of a revolver crashed upon their ears.

A man came running from behind them. It was Mr. Principale. He dashed up the rickety wooden stairs, the girls following. Sebastine Principale, the brother, came from an adjoining flat. He was the first to enter his own home.

His sister stood in the middle of the room. Her body was swaying. Just as Sebastine stepped across the threshold she fell to the floor, face downward, with a cry.

BONA-FIDE CHAMPION IN ANY CLASS IS AN ODDITY

Johnson's Retirement is Announced---There Are Many Claimants for Stanley Ketchel's Title While the Lightweights Scramble After the Honours Following Ad. Wolgast's Illness.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Dec. 13.—Who are the world's champions in the various classes?

Just think it over.

Before you have your thoughts in shape to reply, you will admit that the championship situation from north to south and from east to west is in an extremely demoralized condition.

Jack says he has retired and that he does not care a rap who the championship falls to, or whether it is secured by usurpation or conquest.

Jack surely should be allowed to know his own business, and if he has declared himself out of commission, is not the heavyweight class without a head?

Sam Langford says he has the best right to succeed Johnson. Joe Jeannette declares he chased Johnson out of the country, and has a better claim on Johnson's abandoned laurels than any one else. Sam McVea, away in far-off Australia, will also want to be heard from, while Jim Flynn, albeit he is not enamoured of fighting coloured men, is also putting forth a small-voiced claim to the title.

Well, it will take some time to straighten out matters ,and' meanwhile the heavy division remains unruled by any one man.

Middleweight Class Muddled

Matters are in an equally chaotic state in the middleweight class and the confusion dates back to the time ill-fated Ketchel was murdered. There was none to dispute Ketchel's right as boss of the 158-pound men, but after his taking off there was a plague of claimants.

Billy Papke seemed to be the best man entitled to the distinction. But Papke named impossible conditions. He wanted middleweights to box as heavyweights, and this weakened him with the public. On top of that, Papke performed so wretchedly on various occasions that he not only disgusted the fight fans, but disgusted himself. Very recently he declared himself out of the game.

So that with Ketchel and Papke retired, the middleweight class may be likened to a ship which is in temporary command of the second mate. We don't even know who the second mate is.

Look at the muddle the lightweights are in. On the eve of a contest of international importance, Champion Ad Wolgast is seized with appendicitis and has to submit to the knife. Whatever the future holds out to Wolgast is wrapped in doubt. He certainly will not enter the ring again before eight or ten months have passed. It is now supposed, for that matter, that the last has been seen of Wolgast, the ringman. If he should be patched up for fighting purposes, he is not likely to be as formidable as he was in the past.

While Ad's fate as a ringman hangs in the balance it may be interesting to listen to the arguments of the near lightweighst, who think themselves best fitted to jump into the stricken champion's shoes.

Deadlock Among Lightweights

One of the bones of contention among the American contestants will be the weight question . Some of the best of the so-called lightweight, notably Packey McFarland and Matt Wells, cannot do "133 ringside." Some of the others, Freddie Welsh and Knockout Brown, for instance, insist on ringside weight, and the result may mean a deadlock, so far as high-class matches are concerned. And through it all, the public will feel that it is listening to a discussion from which the real champion has, through misfortune, been eliminated.

In the featherweight division things are not much better. Abe Attell is supposed to be the champion of this class, but Abie, who probably feels that he is not as young as he used to be, wants to make a clean-up. He is holding out for a bigger sum of money than the promoters feel able to give, and is permitting the Rivers, the Conleys, the Kilbanes, and a few others to engage in elimination bouts that ,after all, seem to mean nothing and lead to nowhere.

Many Ball Players Change Clubs At League Meetings

NEW YORK, DEC. 13.—The market in baseball players was brisk compared to that of the past two days and trading was lively. The biggest reported deal on was the negotiations for the Providence Club between Frank Navin, owner of the Detroit Americans, and T. J. Crowley, J. Lavis and Hugh Duffy. Negotiations, it was reported, had not closed tonight. Navin is reported to have offered $65,000 for the club.

The Newark International League Club bought First Baseman Swacino from Mobile, and Brooklyn parted with Outfielder Humphries to the Springfield, Mass., Club. Rochester acquired Blair, Klepfer and Otis Johnson of the Highlanders. Toronto and Montreal traded shortstops, Toronto taking Ed. Holly and giving in exchange Tony Smith.

Jersey City sold Bumpus Jones to Rochester, who also announced that it had purchased Pitcher Gray from Washington.

The baseball war which exists on paper between the American and National Leagues went merrily on today; but indications were plenty that it was to be a war of words only.

Officially, the National League attended severely to its own affairs, re-electing President Thomas J. Lynch and ignoring the resolution adopted yesterday by the Americans. Unofficially, both major leagues laughed at the prospects of a real encounter between the millions of dollars invested in each. The world's series ticket scandal continued to hold the spotlight. President Brush, of the New York Giants, who made public yesterday his report to the National Commission on the scandal, addressed a pungent letter to Ban Johnson, asking him to explain a few things alleged to have happened to the pasteboards in Philadelphia.

The National League will meet tomorrow, however, and predictions fly freely to-night about the corridors of the hotel where it holds its sessions that it will frame its answer to the American League then—if there is to be any answer.

With Brooklyn and Philadelphia opposing, President Lynch was re-elected, the losing candidate being Robert W. Brown, a Louisville newspaperman. James E. Gaffney, who decided overnight to buy the Boston Club and did so, sat in the council, which also included a woman for the first time in its history—Mrs. Helen Hathaway Britton, owner of the St. Louis Club.

More Players For The Coast

OTTAWA, DEC. 14.—Before another week rolls around it is not improbable the Patricks will have robbed the N. H. A. of all its star players. Albert Kerr, who has a standing offer to play on the cast, had an interview with the Ottawa Hockey Club yesterday and failed to come to terms.

In an interview this morning Kerr said: "There is nothing doing at present unless matters come to a head in the next two or three days. I shall go to British Columbia to play in the "Patrick League." Marty Walsh expects to go with me."

It is now an odds on chance that Fred Taylor will play with one of the three Pacific slope teams. Wanderers are standing pat in his case, and the Ottawas are making no effort to get him.

Offer Stanley Cup Receipts.

The Ottawa Club has offered six of its players $800 a piece with the net receipts that accrue from the New York trip at the close of the season. The club is also holding out as an inducement the receipts of any Stanley Cup games, of which there is sure to be a series with the British Columbia champions in March, but while Ottawa looks the best bet to be the defenders, this cannot be guaranteed.

Only two players have come to terms so far, Lessueur and Shore, according to one officer of the club. Three others are holding out.

In the meantime the public of Ottawa, which, at this time of the year is usually climbing over each other to gobble up season tickets, is wondering whether there is going to be any hockey at all.

The fact that the other teams in the league will hardly be up to recognized calibre of the N. H. A., gives out the impression that Ottawa will win the championship in hollow fashion.

Canadiens are about the only team on paper that will make the cup-holders travel.

CUBS WILL COME BACK

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Dec. 13. Mordecai Brown, the three-fingered twirler of the Chicago Cubs, refuses to have the Cubs counted among the down-and-outers for the season of 1912. In an interview in one of his trips to the city while visiting his business associate, Orvie Overall, Brown tells the fans that the Cubs will come back as strong as ever in 1912.

"I think there will be a big change in our club next year, but I am not prepared to say what it will be," said Brown. "Chance will probably return to the game, as he was feeling much better at the close of the season. He told me just before I left that his head felt all right and that he was gaining in weight again. It would help us a lot to have Frank back. Johnny Evers also looked good at the end of the year. I thought we were going to lose Johnny for a while, but after that trip to the mountains he improved wonderfully. He ought to play some good ball next year."

"Is there really any likelihood of your remaining out here as an outlaw?" Brown was asked.

"Oh, I don't know about any plans the outlaws may have. I haven't heard any of Moreing's hopes, other than that it has been agreed to have a club in Stockton. As for myself, I'll probably stay out here until the first of the year. I haven't signed my contract with Chicago yet."

The impression has spread that Brown was a miner, but this he denies.

"I was assistant weigh boss in a mine at Rosedale, Ind., and was pitching amateur ball around there when I received an offer to go to Terre Haute. From there I went to Omaha, and thence to Indianapolis, where I played outlaw ball. I was blacklisted by Omaha in 1902, and in 1903 I jumped to St. Louis. They traded me with O'Neil for Taylor and McLean, and that's how I came to be a Cub."

HOCKEY

The Intermediate and Junior O. H. A teams will work-out to-night at 7.30 in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium, when a full attendance of players is expected. With the opening of the O. H.A. season only a couple of weeks away and no ice available yet, the players should recognize the benefit derived from this splendid course of training. It begins to look as if the first games of the season will have to be played without much practice, and the team which is in good shape physically, will have the jump on the others. The local players are turning out splendidly—there were eighteen out Wednesday night—and both juniors and seniors promise to be in the best of shape when they get going at Brock street rink. Don't forget to-night's workout.

Convener R .M. Glover has called a meeting of representatives of the clubs in this district in both intermediate and junior O.H.A. series for the Hotel St. Lawrence, Port Hope, at 2 o'clock on Monday next, when the schedules will be drawn up. The intermediate teams are Belleville, Trenton, Lindsay and Peterborough, and the juniors, Cobourg, Port Hope, Lindsay and Peterborough.

A DINOSAUR'S HEAD

Barnum Brown of the staff of the American Museum of Natural History, who has probably made more important discoveries of fossil dinosaur skeletons than any other explorer in the land, has just added a new "find" to his long list. It is the complete skull and a remarkable tail of an armour plated dinosaur (of the genus ankylosaurus), hitherto unknown to science and the exact species of which has not yet been determined by the naturalists. These specimens were found by Mr. Brown in Western Canada and have been mounted and placed on view in glass cases at the museum.

"I consider these specimens of great importance," said Mr. Brown in speaking of his discovery. "Fragmentary remains of the dinosaur, or ankylosaurus have been found, but this is the first time a complete skull and tail of genus has been discovered and placed on exhibition.

"The skull of the armour plated dinosaur is protected by a bony covering which is solidly ankylosed to the skull proper. The main feature of the skull is the bony cuirass which covers the cranium of the reptile. The Leaklike termination of the two jaws and its greatly reduced teeth probably aided the beast little in the mastication of food. In character these teeth resemble those of the iguanodon."

The tail of this dinosaur shows a construction unique among these reptiles, ending in a blunt, flattened club-like tip. As restored by Barnum Brown the animal is one of the most extraordinary of the bizarre reptiles which once roamed through this country.—New York Sun.

A TIME-TABLE

WEDDING BELLS

HIPPERSON—GUMPRICHT.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at two o'clock this afternoon in the George street Methodist church when Miss Wilhelmina Gumpricht, daughter of Mrs. Jessie Gumpricht, of 535 Aylmer street, was joined in the holy bond of matrimony to Mr. William S. Hipperson, of this city. The Rev. Isaac Couch performed the ceremony.

The bride, charmingly gowned in white satin, with pearl trimmings and wearing the customary bridal veil, was led to the altar leaning on the arm of her grandfather, Mr. E. Mundy of the "Reformer" office, Oshawa.

Attending her in the capacity of bridesmaid was the bride's youngest sister, Miss Grace Gumpricht, who was also daintily attired in pale blue, wearing a white veil and carrying pink roses. The bride carried a beautiful shower bouquet of cream roses and lilies of the valley and wore a necklace of costly pearls with a cross. The groomsman was Mr. Charles Mundy of Oshawa.

On the entrance of the bride, the beautiful and appropriate Lohengrin bridal chorus was played by Miss May Dillon of Oshawa, followed by Mendelssohn's wedding march. Mrs. Charles Mundy of Oshawa, contributed, in a most harmonious manner, Guy d' Hardelot's famous solo, "Because."

At the conclusion of the nuptial ceremony, the wedding party adjourned to the residence of the bride's mother, where a delightful reception to the guests and friends was held, after which the bride and groom left on the 4.28 C.P.R. train on their wedding tour.

Mr. and Mrs. Hipperson will return to Peterborough for a couple of monthse, before leaving for Regina, their future abode.

The groom's gift to the groomsman was a pretty pearl stick pin and to the bridesmaid, the soloist and organist, dainty lace pearl stick pins.

FLIGHT FROM DEATH

Briceville, Tenn., Dec. 13.—Hope of finding alive any more of the miners entombed in the Cross Mountain mine by a explosion Saturday was practically abandoned to-day after vain efforts of rescuers all night long to run down messages found scrawled on the walls of the remote workings.

It was said to-day that many of these messages were found and that investigation hd practically proved that all were written by one party of men who were driven from place to place by the dadly gases. PYrobably all of them perished.

Thirty-eight bodies had been found up to an early hour to-day, five of which were still in the mine. The bodies of seven men found yesterday indicated that they had been killed by the dreaded black damp.

Stricken ma, probably with fear inspired by their plight, two miners, who had been with the party rescued, are now dashing wildly in and out of channels in the far recesses of the mine. All night long men of the rescue squad have been chasing the maniacs, but just as soon as would-be rescuers got close on their trail the mad men would dash away, screaming wildly. First they scurry like rats down the main entry then scamper away into black recesses of the mine at the approach of men from the outside.

Liberal Policy Regarding Naval Service Being Carried Out

WIRELESS COSTS $150,000

Ottawa, Dec. 16.—The first report of the Department of the Naval Service was issued yesterday. It deals with the carrying out of the naval program of the late Government, the work of the fisheries, protective service and of the hydrographic survey, and the wireless and radio telegraphic services.

Arrangement are in progress, it says, for the establishment of a chain of wireless stations on the lakes from Port Arthur to Kingston, including Port Arthur, Sault Ste. Marie, Midland, Tobermory, Sarnia, Port Stanley, Port Colborne, Toronto and Kingston, with the station at Kingston of sufficient range to communicate with Montreal. Three new radio-telegraphic coast stations were established during the year.

Out of an appropriation of $3,000,000 for the naval service, there was an expenditure of $1,790,000. On the fisheries protection service there was expended $272,200, out of an appropriation of $301,500. Upon the hydrographic surveys, out of an appropriation of $300,000, there was expended $163,118. The total appropriation of $150,000 for wireless stations, was spent, the grand total appropriation for all these services and contingencies was $3,969,566, out of which there was expended $2,492,812, leaving a balance of $1,476,754.

Dealing with the recruiting for the naval service, the report shows a total sum of 223, including 185 for the Niobe, and 38 for the Rainbow. Nova Scotia contributed 97 men for the Niobe, Ontario 45, and Quebec 28. Of the Rainbow recruits, all but three were found in British Columbia. Alberta contributed one recruit for the service, and Manitoba and Saskatchewan none.

The hydrographic survey report includes considerable information in regard to the possibilities of Port Churchill and Fort Nelson as desirable railway terminals. The approaches to the ports were examined by two parties from the icebreaker Stanley. A good deal of ice was encountered in making Churchill, which would be dangerous to a ship not especially constructed.

The opinion is expressed that no cargo vessel of ordinary construction would have been able to find or force her way through the large fields met before Churchill. Apart from the ice difficulty it is stated that the salient points of Hudson Bay and Strait, are inaccurately charted. The report adds that the approach to Churchill harbor is very well marked, and comparatively easily picked up in marked contrast to the approach to the whole shore from near Cape Churchill to James Bay.

At Nelson the Government expedition had great difficulty in getting ashore with material for signals. The roadstead is described as exposed to every wind that blows and every sea that runs with cross currents and low shores.

The report states: "Until further and proper definite information is obtained no opinion can be expressed as to the suitability of this port for a terminus."

Welland Canal Closes.

Port Colborne, Dec. 16.—The Welland Canal was officially closed yesterday. Lock tenders were busy closing bridges and lock gates for the winter.

ARRESTS IN SIGHT

Four Dynamite Conspirators May Be Nabbed Next Week

INDICTMENTS ARE MADE

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.—A little package of indictments, numbering perhaps four, probably will be returned here next Tuesday or Wednesday against men living in California and suspected of complicity in nation-wide dynamite plots. This will end the western section of the investigation and will transfer the scene of all activities to Indianapolis, where another grand jury is in session.

A canvas and leather case, ten inches square and as tall as a small ice cream freezer, was shown the jury yesterday. This case and others like it are said to have been used in carrying about the country dynamite needed for various "jobs."

It was such a case that Ortie McManigal carried them, according to his own statement, when he came west to blow up the Llewellyn Iron Works. McManigal was so accustomed to its presence, that he gave it to a porter, giving him also a dollar to take care of it.

Presumably in connection with the appearance of the dynamite case, came B. J. Crosby, now of Los Angeles, and formerly of Boston, Mass. Crosby was once connected with the firm that made the case.

Miss Tillie McCarthy, of San Francisco, a stenographer for an exhibition league, of which Olaf Tveitmoe is president, appeared before the grand jury, remaining about fifteen minutes. She was preceded by Thos. Mills of San Francisco, a chauffeur, whose appearance recalled the story that after James B. McNamara had dynamited The Los Angeles Times' building, he hurried north to San Francisco, and with his companions, "went automobile riding," apparently having plenty of money.

Mrs. Maude B. King, assistant housekeeper of a San Francisco hotel, appeared before the grand jury a second time, being the only witness recalled. She is said to have been acquainted with Milton A. Schmidt, a fugitive under indictment for complicity in The Times' explosion.

Trail Grows Warm.

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 16.—Government officials who are co-operating with District Attorney Miller in conducting the investigation of the dynamite conspiracy before the federal grand jury, learned from two sources yesterday the details of explosions in which it is said others than the McNamaras were implicated.

W. A. Griffin, chief of police of Kansas City, Mo., who had knowledge of five explosions in Kansas City, was questioned about certain facts which, it is said had never been revealed. These explosions, all directed against structures erected by firms employing non-union men, occurred from 1908 to 1910. As not more than two of them were confessedly the work of McManigal, Chief Griffin's information was sifted to ascertain who else might have destroyed the property.

Much important testimony bearing on the records taken from the headquarters of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers was also obtained from Miss May Dye, who went before the grand jury. Up to a few years ago, Miss Dye, now of Pittsburg, was confidential secretary in the Iron Workers' headquarters, and as such had to do with the correspondence of J. J. McNamara, the secretary-treasurer.

Mrs. Andrew J. Hull, the ironworkers' former bookkeeper, also visited the federal building. Many hotel clerks from various parts of the country have been subpoenaed to tell what they know of the movements of McManigal while he was on his dynamiting expeditions. The hotel men are to be questioned chiefly to corroborate McManigal's confession wherein he related visits to certain towns with a suitcase filled with dynamite or nitroglycerine.

It was intimated that the ironworkers' officials were not opposed to the Government efforts to expose all implicated in the dynamiting.

Burns Is Prophetic.

Cleveland, O., Dec. 16.—Declaring that other arrests in the McNamara case may be expected soon, and that attempts to bribe him and his men had been made, Detective William J. Burns made an address here yesterday before one hundred members of the National Erectors' Association. He stopped here on his way to Indianapolis, where he will continue his investigations.

Burns made another attack on Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, declaring he would not cease his attacks until Gompers is thrown out of organized labor. He also denounced what he called "the corrupt political crowd that controls organized labor."

"There are many McNamaras in organized labor," he said.

Burns said that after concluding his work at Indianapolis, he will go to Los Angeles.

Mother Deserts Baby.

Brockville, Dec. 16.—An infant of two months left in a basket on a door step in Athens, was handed over yesterday to the Children's Aid Shelter. With the child was left a letter from the mother, saying she was unable to provide for her offspring.

Struck by Car, May Die.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 16.—George Foss was seriously injured when his carriage was struck by the local line trolley in Ferry street last night. He was thrown to the ground, sustaining internal injuries. Two physicians are in attendance.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The House of Lords passed the national insurance bill.

The most successful Winter Fair ever held at Guelph closed yesterday.

The Berlin Board of Trade is agitating the question of the development of New Ontario.

The Labor party in New Zealand has gain the balance of power at the polls and a dissolution may follow.

A true bill has been returned against Frank Flood of Fort Erie on the charge of sending out racing information.

The British Government has intimated its determination not to issue tenders for army and navy contracts to the indicted U. S. meat packers.

The Government has decided upon a Christmas innovation in regard to the outside civil service and temporary employes at Ottawa. This year they are to be paid on Dec. 22 in the interests of Santa Claus. The necessary order in council has been passed.

Turks In Bad Plight.

Malta, Dec. 16.—The Turkish and Arab forces, who have retreated to the oasis at some distance from the coast of Tripoli, are in a sorry plight, according to a statement made by a Maltese citizen named Tomua, who succeeded in escaping from the Turkish camp, and he just reached Malta.

Tomua says that it will be impossible for the Mohammedan forces to hold out much longer, owing to the almost entire lack of provisions. He also says that the dissensions among the Arabs irregulars and the Turkish troops have become so acute that defections among the former are extremely numerous.

Constantinople, Dec. 16.—Officials of the Turkish War Office are circulating a complaint that the Italian troops in Tripoli are using dumdum bullets in their operations. These bullets are soft at the point and spread when they come in contact with any opposing substance, making a severe wound.

Dum-Dums Not Used.

Rome, Dec. 16.—The Italian Government has issued an official denial that its troops in Tripoli are using dumdum bullets, as has been stated in Constantinople. No military operations were reported yesterday.

FINISHES HIS CASE

Lawyer Wainwright Now Awaits Judge's Decision

LAW IS A MONSTROSITY

Montreal, Dec. 16.—"If the system of law in this province is what it is represented to be in the judgments of Justices Jette and Lemieux, it is a monstrosity and one designed to entrap the unwary, for under such circumstances a person might go before an officer who has been given the power by the state to celebrate marriage, and who accordingly assumes such right and is protected by the state; a person, I say, might be married by that officer, who acted in virtue of a license emanating from the King's authority. If that marriage is invalid—not on account of any restriction existing in the only law of which the person can be assumed to have any knowledge, but on account of the provisions and ordinances of old dead and gone French kings, or on account of hair-splitting distinctions of learned jurists, all of which the person cannot be expected to understand—then the law is not a protection to the public as all laws of marriage are supposed to be, but a menace both to the state and the individual.

"Therefore, I would ask your lordship's ruling in the matter in order to determine at once and for all whether the law in this province is the monstrous and unreasonable thing it is held to be. Under a system where only one set of ministers would be given the exclusive right to officiate at marriage ceremonies there would, at any rate, be no danger of deception for innocent parties, but, under a system where the validity of the union is said to depend purely and simply on the faith of the contracting parties, there is a constant danger to all concerned."

In these words did Arnold Wainwright terminate his argument in the Hebert marriage annulment yesterday afternoon. Mr. Wainwright endeavored by the historical argument to show that from the period intervening between the cession (1760) and the promulgation of the present code in 1866, there was nothing to warrant the contention put forth in the judgments of Justices Lemieux and Jette—or, in other words, there was nothing to support the argument that two Catholics would be validly married only by a priest of their faith.

As the case in the interests of Dame Clouatre is now closed, the ruling of the court in the matter is looked forward to with expectancy.

Thirty Nimrods Lose Lives.

Boston, Dec. 16.—Thirty human lives were lost in New England, and four in the Province of New Brunswick as a direct result of the hunting season which, so far as big game is concerned, came to an end yesterday. Of the victims five were shot in mistake for deer, 12 were killed by accidental discharge of their own guns, 14 by accidental firing of guns held by companions or by stray bullets, two were drowned and one died of exposure.

It is estimated that about 10,000 deer and 300 moose were killed, besides several score of bear and a great quantity of small game.

U. S. Fears Russian Reprisals.

Washington, Dec. 16.—Opposition to the Senate program for immediate action on the Sulzer House resolution looking to the termination of the Russian treaty of 1832 is developing among some Senators. It is based largely on the theory that any estrangement between this country and Russia would have the effect of bringing Russia into alliance with Japan with the result of injuring the Oriental trade of the United States. Many telegrams advancing this idea were received during the day.

To Educate U. S. Farmers.

Washington, Dec. 16.—A plan to enable agricultural colleges throughout the country to do extension work by taking to the farmers of their respective communities the best methods of intensive agriculture, is contemplated in a bill, which will be introduced in Congress after the holidays.

Boys' Fatal Fight.

Fraserville, Que., Dec. 16.—In the trial of Jules Ploudre for the murder of Louis Dion, at St. Honore, Temiscouata County, some months ago, a number of witnesses have sworn that after a fight between the two Dion brothers and the two Ploudre boys, the accused deliberately fired five shots at the victim, killing him. The prisoner is only 20 years of age.

Montreal a Spender.

Montreal, Dec. 16.—According to the civic estimates tabulated at the City Hall at noon yesterday by Mr. Pelletier, the city comptroller, the city will spend more than a million dollars in excess of last year. Next year's total expenditure on revenue account is placed at $8,185,000, against $7,005,285 placed in the estimates last year.

Million-Dollar Canning Co.

Ottawa, Dec. 16.—Letters patent have been issued to a new million-dollar canning concern to be known as the British Canadian Canners, Ltd., with headquarters in Montreal. The company is authorized to deal in all food products and to buy up or otherwise acquire the interests of other companies.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED
—BY—
J. W. BROWETT
Optometrist

Q. Why is it that glasses are worn so much more now than years ago?

A. Years ago the science of optics or correcting errors of sight was not understood as it is to-day; only old persons or those near-sighted were Glasses. Now we correct with lenses all errors of sight.

Q. Why is it that cheap glasses do not give satisfaction?

A. Cheap glasses are so faulty in construction and are of such poor quality that they distort the vision and cause pain in the eyes. The optical glass used by us is brilliant, clear and perfect, insuring comfort and ease to the wearer.

Q. Can my headaches be relieved with glasses?

A. A personal visit will be necessary. Let us talk it over.

Ottawa, Dec. 16.—A cable received here from London says: At a special meeting of the court of the Musicians Company yesterday the honorary freedom of the ancient city guild was conferred on Sir Edward Elgar and the silver medal was awarded Dr. Charles A. E. Harriss of Ottawa for distinguished services rendered British music throughout the Empire. A banquet preceded the presentations.

Soo Navigation Closes.

Soo, Ont., Dec. 16.—The last boat down bound, the Michipicouten, from Michipicouten, has arrived in the Soo, and navigation is closed for the year. The formal closing of the canal occurred yesterday, and the gas buoy at the upper approach to the locks is already taken in. Lighthouse keepers are arriving in the Soo. The weather is exceedingly mild, and all snow in the city has disappeared.

Starting For South Pole.

Christchurch, New Zealand, Dec. 16.—Captain Robert Scott's exploring ship the Terra Nova, sailed yesterday for the Antarctic. The Terra Nova, which is to seek the South Pole, will not take the same route as will Amundsen, who is going by way of the Beardmore glacier.

C.P.R. Lets Big Contract.

Calgary, Dec. 16.—The C.P.R. have awarded the contract for the construction of their two million dollar railway shops here to the Westinghouse, Church, Kerr Co. of New York and Chicago. This is the railway construction and building Westinghouse concern.

DOCTORS GAVE ME UP

But "Fruit-a-tives" Cured Me.

MOOREFIELD, ONT., March 25th, 1910.
"I suffered from severe indigestion and dyspepsia for nearly two years. I could not take food without fearful distress.

I could not do any work and became so run down and weak that I could hardly walk. I was attended by two experienced doctors and they both pronounced my case incurable, that they could do nothing more for me as they thought my disease was HEART FAILURE AND INCURABLE. The doctors gave me up and I looked forward for death in a short time.

At this time my son asked me to try 'FRUIT-A-TIVES', and from the outset of taking these wonderful tablets I was better, and gradually this medicine completely cured me. I took a large number of boxes, perhaps a dozen, and now I am entirely cured and I have gained over thirty pounds in weight."

INTERESTING ARTICLE ON OYSTERS

Throughout the long winter months oysters are very plentiful. The average person who relishes the mollusks knows little about its birthplace, or how it is cultivated and harvested.

While the oyster lives in salt water it will live two months entirely out of its natural element if kept in a cool place. Its shell is close-fitting and gives needed protection from the elements. When the shell is broken or cracked the tenant dies whether in water or out of it. The well-bred oyster has a head and tail, or parts resembling these important characteristics of animal life, and when found at rest is usually reclining upon its left side. It has no eyes, but the sense of touch seems to be abnormally developed. It i said that the oyster will instinctively close the valves of its shell upon the approach of a boat even before the first tiny waves strike it.

HOW THE OYSTER LIVES

The oyster is a good feeder and never misses a meal. Millions of translucent hairs provide the oyster with a means of taking nourishment from salt water. It gathers minute organisms by the millions as its appetite craves nourishment, and the variety is ever changing. It eats heartily and regularly, and can be readily injured by unfit water or that lacking the essential element, lime. This it needs to keep the roof on its house, the shell being largely composed of lime and salt.

The oyster will not grow everywhere. It will grow only in favoured spots, where the winds and tides are suitable, and where a certain mixture of water is found. It must have a resting place, hence its home is in a bay or eddy, usually not far from the mouth of a river which supplies fresh water to mix with the sea. A mixture of mud and clay must form a bed upon which it can rest, and heavy ocean currents must be unknown. Water makes a great difference in oyster culture, showing clearly that the sea water is not the same, and that the constant addition of fresh water from rivers changes the salty element near the mouths of rivers until shellfish realize the difference and remain in the place most suited to their needs.

OYSTER INDUSTRY IN AMERICA

The oyster industry is of immense proportions in America. It is estimated that 22,000,000 bushels of oysters are produced and marketed annually, with the demand rapidly growing and the profits increasing as better methods are employed. Perhaps $15,000,000 is involved in the business, aside from the value of the land used, and over 50,000 people are engaged in "farming" oysters and marketing the product. Over 5,000 vessels and dredges are employed in gathering and working over the beds. In the business of disposing of the shells to poultrymen and others a large number of men are employed.

Maryland is the land of oysters, and Baltimore is the centre of the industry in this country. Here the delicacy is produced and marketed, furnishing 20,000 people with constant employment and piling up fortunes for the lucky promoters of the enterprise. About 300 "Baltimore" oysters make a bushel, while the smaller varieties require nearly double that number. Every American consumes or should consume 100 oysters each year to get his share. New York is a great oyster market, consuming, perhaps, 1,000,000,000 a year, and 5,000 families are supported by the industry. In southeast Virginia the oyster is worth $3,000,000 annually to the people, and new fields are being added in places along the entire Atlantic coast. Connecticut also cultivates the mollusk and does a good oyster business.

ENORMOUS PRODUCTION IN FRANCE

France leads the world in the oyster business. Arcachon, in the southwestern part of that country, is the mecca for oyster culture from all parts of the world, and many a wealthy producer has learned his first lesson in the business while viewing immense "farms" devoted exclusively to the production of the slippery bi-valve. Arcachon is the great centre of production. Four million oysters are said to thrive nicely on a piece of land 650 by 450 yards in area.

While the waters of the shores of France are suitable for the profitable culture of oysters, they abound with pests which play havoc with shellfish and become a serious menace to the business. Starfish, whelks, boring sponges and other pests abound and require the most vigilant and destructive warfare against them. No dredging is allowed in French waters, and the fields are said to retain their productive qualities better and longer than any others.

Perhaps the best flavoured oyster to be found in the world is harvested on the shores of Great Britain. In the beds in the shores of Kent and Essex fully 15,000,000 marketable oysters are always in stock. London is a great consumer of oysters, the estimated amount being 1,000,000,000 a year.

HOW THE OYSTER IS RAISED

In cultivation oyster beds, formed roughly on the seashore along the flats or in shallow sheltered water, are generally dredged thoroughly on the start and afterward to keep them clean. Then shells, or tiling, about 8 by 18 inches in size, are placed on the beds to which the young, or "spat," as the little fellows are called, attach themselves after leaving the mother, being carried by the movement of the water. It is estimated that for this purpose alone, in this country, 7,000,000 bushels of shells are used in five years.

Generally the beds are laid out like garden plots, and each subdivision is cultivated by itself. Only half of a farm is worked in any year, the plan generally adopted being to "summer fallow," as is done in raising wheat. This is found to be profitable in natural propagation, but where artificial means are employed, the crop is taken off each year. The plan of dyking to keep a supply of water covering the land all the time has been found eminently successful in all parts of the world. The land must be covered with water to a depth of several inches or the hot rays of the sun in summer and the severe frosts of winter will kill the oyster and finally ruin the beds.

Oysters of the very best quality have firm white flesh, are nut-like in flavour and enclosed in a shell in form as nearly like the petal of a rose as may be. The flesh is the best criterion to go by when judging the character of an oyster. The whiter and firmer the flesh the better the animal for food purposes.

NARROW ESCAPES

Hughey Jennings has had more narrow escapes from death than any other man on the diamond. The leader of the Detroit team has been on the border of eternity on three different occasions. Several years ago while studying law at Cornell University Jennings dived into an empty swimming pool, striking his head on the concrete floor. He was unconscious for several hours and his life was despaired of. It was at first thought that his skull was fractured, but this, luckily, proved not to be the case.

In 1894 while playing with the Baltimore team at the Polo Grounds in New York Jennings was struck on the left temple by a pitched ball delivered with terrific speed by Amos Rusie, of the Giants, who could throw a ball faster than any other pitcher in the history of the diamond. Jennings was knocked insensible and it was believed that there was no hope of his recovery. For a whole week he was in a precarious condition and it was months afterward before he fully recovered from the blow.

The last accident in which the Detroit manager figured and which it was feared for some time would result fatally occurred late last Friday night. While driving his automobile near Gouldsboro, Pa., the machine got out of order when about to cross a small bridge over the Lehigh river three miles from Gouldsboro. The machine crashed through the railing of the bridge and fell 10 feet, landing bottom up on the rocky shore of the river. Jennings and a Catholic priest, Father Lynette, were pinned under the car, both being badly hurt. Jennings' injuries were found to be the more severe and it was thought he had sustained a fracture of the skull. He was unconscious for some time, but gradually recovered and his physicians announced that he would live. Both Jennings and the clergyman are men of athletic physique, which aided them greatly in pulling through. A newly-married couple who were in the car escaped with slight injuries. The auto was one given to Jennings by baseball enthusiasts in Detroit.

Jennings was born in Pittston, Pa., April 2nd, 1871. When a youth he worked in the coal mines and played baseball whenever he got a chance. In those days he was a catcher. Credit for discovering Jennings belongs to Jack Chapman, then manager of the Louisville team of the old American Association. Chapman heard there was a youngster of promise playing in the mining regions of Pennsylvania and went there to look him over. Jennings had made a reputation with the Moosic and Lehigh teams, and when Chapman saw him play ball the Louisville man lost no time signing him. That was in 1891. Jennings went to Louisville, receiving a small salary, and caught and played shortstop for the team.

In the fall of 1893 Ned Hanlon, then manager of the Baltimore Orioles, traded Tim O'Rourke to Louisville for Jennings and Harry Taylor. When Jennings joined the Baltimore team he was sick, but in 1894 he fairly set the baseball world afire by his wonderful playing. The Orioles won the pennant in 1894, 1895 and 1896, and Jennings was a big factor in those successes. He was one of the Baltimore club's Big Four—Keeler, Kelley, Jennings and McGraw—whose fame was almost world-wide.

Unquestionably Jennings was the greatest shortstop the national game ever knew. Hughes covered acres of ground, was a strong and true thrower, a batsman of the .300 class and a remarkably fast base runner. In short, he was possessed of all the qualities of a truly great ball player.

When the Orioles were transferred to Brooklyn in 1899 Hanlon took Jennings with him. It was then that Jennings' arm began to weaken, and he played second base and first base for the champion Superbas of 1899 and 1900. In 1901 Jennings went to Philadelphia and managed and played first base for the Quakers. His stay in Philadelphia, however, was short, and he went back to Baltimore. When Hanlon acquired an Eastern League franchise for Baltimore in 1903 he appointed Jennings manager of the team, and Hughey at once made a success of the job. The Detroit Americans drafted him in the fall of 1906, and Jennings won three pennants in a row for the Michigan city—1907, 1908 and 1909. In 1910 his Tigers finished third, and last season he brought them home second in the race.

Jennings is the most popular manager not only on the American League circuit, but in baseball. Hundreds of thousands of fans have paid their money at the gate to see him tear up grass on the coaching lines and to hear him utter his famous battle cry, "Ee-yah!" His home is in Scranton, Pa., where he practices law in the winter.

Have You Got Your Coffee Pot?

Your grocer is only waiting for your order of 2 50c. tins of DALTON'S FRENCH DRIP COFFEE to deliver This Coffee Pot Absolutely FREE

We Give You All Of The Good Of The Coffee, and the means of Always Having Good Coffee.

Dalton's French Drip Coffee is not only the best in the world from the standpoint of health—it is also the most delicious. The special Dalton process of roasting and grinding—that makes Dalton's French Drip Coffee so good for you, also improves the flavor.

Nature covers the Coffee, just as she protects grains and nuts, by covering the kernel or heart with a tough skin or coat. This coat contains tannic acid and other bitter substances which are harmful to insects and not harmless to the human system.

Ordinary Coffee is ground with this tough coat, and boiling brings out all the rank, bitter flavor and indigestible fibre. No wonder ordinary Coffee, made in the ordinary way, upsets digestion and racks the nerves.

DALTON'S FRENCH DRIP COFFEE is free of these harmful substances and contains no chicory. After this Coffee is roasted and ground, a powerful air-blast removes the inner coating, leaving only the kernel or heart of the Coffee berry, rich in the essence which gives flavor and aroma to the breakfast and dinner cup. This is why Dalton's Coffee is never bitter—never upsets the stomach—never jangles the nerves—never is anything but the richest, most fragrant, most appetizing Coffee that ever came on the table. But Dalton's Coffee must be made right. This is why we give you this $1.30 French Drip Coffee Pot FREE.

Dalton's French Drip Coffee

Boiling ruins Coffee. Boiling drives off the flavor, instead of developing it. The French Drip Process is the only way to make really good Coffee. We have been on the lookout for a reliable, satisfactory, inexpensive percolator or Coffee pot for a long time and found just the right one over in Germany. Now you can have Dalton's French Drip Coffee made as good Coffee should be made.

We put up two special brands of Coffee — MILD and STRONG. You can't say which of the two you will prefer until you try both. Nor can you make good Coffee without this French Drip Coffee Pot.

Mild Blend

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER

We feel so sure that you will find either Dalton's Mild Blend or Strong Blend French Drip Coffee just the Coffee that you have been looking for that we have authorized your Grocer to give you one of these handsome pots (worth $1.30) absolutely Free with your first purchase of a tin each of Mild and Strong Blend. IMPORTANT INVESTIGATION

The distribution of light about us and the effect upon the eyes have been investigated photographically by Ives and Luckiesch. The sensitiveness of the plates to lights of different color has been adjusted by the use of colour screens and in this way has been made to agree almost exactly with that of the eyes. Pictures of various street scenes and landscapes were taken. For each scene a second picture was made with a glass cylinder before the lens, this arrangement giving a vertical focus only, and showing in the photograph the average vertical distribution of brightness. The intensity of illumination was measured by the density of the plate. From a study of the pictures, it was found that the eye tolerates greater brightness above the horizontal than below, and that large areas of uniform high brightness give discomfort. In a pleasing landscape, the great brightness is in the sky, the foreground having marked varieties of light and shade. The light of a cumulus cloud was found to be 104 candles per square inch, of a sunlit cement pavement, 6 candles, and of the blue sky, 0.2 candle, falling to 0.1 candle on a dark overcast day. In the average landscape, the ratio of the light of the brightest and the darkest points is about twenty to one.

Evidence that living plants or animals are still being produced from lifeless materials is offered by Dr. H. C. Bastian of London. In experiments described at the Royal Institution, he sterilized inorganic fluids with many precautions, heating from 5 to 20 minutes as high as 145 degrees C., although bacteria are destroyed by 55 degrees. The fluid seemed unchanged for six or seven months. Its sediment, however, was found to contain microscopic organisms and these were proven to be living by their great growth in a few days in an incubator.

DICKENS

"Blessings on your kind heart, my dearest Dickens, for that, after all, is your great talisman and the gift for which you will be not only most loved, but longest remembered." A sentence of prophecy which time tends to fulfill! It was the opening passage of a letter received by Charles Dickens from Lord Jeffrey in 1844. What puzzling contrasts are men! As editor of the Edinburgh Review, Jeffrey had poured the scorn of an implacable criticism upon Wordsworth, and denounced the Lake poets for "a most formidable conspiracy against sound judgment in matters poetical." The same Boanerges of criticism, twenty years after, was completely fascinated by Dickens' early work. In the simplicity, directness, and cunning force of his style "Boz" appealed to Jeffrey, of whom Lord Holland remarked that he had lost his broad Scotch at Oxford, and only gained the narrow English.

The year 1841 found Jeffrey no longer wielding the tomahawk of criticism, but enjoying otium cum dignitate in the office of a judge of the Court of Session. Although he might not commend Dickens to the Scots in the magazines, he introduced him in the flesh to his then increasing throng of northern admirers. The old judge—he was 70 then—drove about Edinburgh, it was said, telling everybody that literature had seen nothing "so good as Nell since Cordelia." He met Dickens in London, and informed him of a desire, widespread among influential Scots, that he should visit Edinburgh.

In Edinburgh

Dickens accepted Jeffrey's invitation, and arranged to visit Edinburgh and make a considerable tour in Scotland at midsummer of the same year—1841. He was happy then in the earliest years of marriage. His Kate was by his side. Cradle and nursery were vocal with the childhood he loved. Accompanied by his wife, and with the eccentric Angus Fletcher, a wandering Scot, for his attendant, he left home for Edinburgh in June. Jeffrey had arranged a reception for him. Scotland was preoccupied with theological controversy and Whig versus Tory politics; for the Disruption was but two years ahead, and Dr. Chalmers was still at the zenith of his national fame and power. And so, when the Scots were in a fever of debate about Non-intrusion and the Divine Headship in the Kirk as opposed to the human headship of the civil magistrate; when the Calvinist had the Arminian by the throat about Predestination; when the Whig would not accept a dram or a pinch of snuff from a Tory, Dickens, young, handsome, gentle, winsome, the wonder of the hour in letters, appeared like a golden moon in soft beauty, rebuking the menace of the clouds among the illuminati of the Scottish capital. A public banquet was organized in his honour. Jeffrey, the chief promoter of he movement, fell sick, and was unable to preside at the banquet; his place was taken by John Wilson, better known by his nom de guerre of "Christopher North." The banquet was an unqualified success. Seven people were unable to procure seats. Nobody of consequence stayed away, excepting certain small-souled Whig partisans who, much to Dickens' astonishment, suspected the Tories of the design to make party capital out of the event. Two hundred ladies of the Order of the Blue Stocking attended. A cloud darkened the sky. Just then the death of Sir John Wilkie was announced. Dickens charmed the Scots by his speech on Scottish literature, and by the melting pathos of his tribute to the memory of Wilkie. All Edinburgh worshipped the youthful hero. The Town Council, responsive to the popular excitement, bestowed upon Dickens the freedom of the city—an honour then rarely given to an Englishman.

"Barnaby Rudge."

On the occasion of that historical first visit, Dickens spent a month in Scotland, where at intervals he completed the writing of "Barnaby Rudge." He made an extensive tour in the Highlands, and explored the weird wilds of Glencoe. In the border country he stood with moist eyes by the grave of Scott in Dryburgh Abbey. Although an admirer of the poetry of Burns, he returned to London without visiting the "auld clay biggin'" and "Alloway's auld haunted kirk" and the "auld brig o' Doon," or any part of Burns' romantic Westlands. Future years saw Dickens increasingly appreciated by the Scots. He returned among them in 1847, when he opened the Glasgow Athenæum, with an address of much eloquence and charm, in which he remarked: "We never tire of the friendships we form with books." Just then he crossed to Edinburgh, renewed his intercourse with Jeffrey and on seeing the Scott Monument pronounced it a 'failure'. "It is like the spire of a Gothic church," he wrote, "taken off and stuck in the ground." Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee, all welcomed him when he arrived later with readings from his own books. In 1858 his profits from readings in Scotland amounted to £500 after all expenses were paid. He received £600 for three evenings and one morning in Glasgow. Dickens loved the Scots, albeit he blundered by estimating the people of Dundee as "in respect of taste and intelligence below any other of his Scottish audiences." Longer acquaintance with Dundee would have convinced Dickens that George Gilfillan could not make all the people there windbags like himself, and that there are no such sharp wits, no such brilliant scholars, no such intelligent lovers of art, anywhere else in Scotland as may be found in the breezy estuary of the Tay.

Great Appreciations

Jeffrey and Carlyle were contrasted Scottish types. Both great men appreciated the genius of Dickens. "I never can bless and love you enough," wrote Jeffrey to Dickens; and in another letter, "I want amazingly to see you rich." Carlyle was Puritan modified by culture, and his idealism was of wider range than Dickens knew. Yet he too loved "Boz," whom he described at the death of the latter in 1870 as "the good, the gentle, the high-gifted, the ever-friendly, noble Dickens." Jeffrey discovered the utilitarian element in the Scot which "keeps the Sabbath, and everything else it can get its hands on," and, without renouncing theology and the Kirk, holds the man to be effectually called who discharges his duties with ability and success, while cultivating the pleasures of friendship, handing round the snuff or the dram, and passing with a smile or the sigh of Calvinist resignation from the wedding to the funeral. Both Jeffrey and Carlyle, also, agreed to glorify the genius of Burns, who combined many types in his amazing personality. Burns was the forerunner of Scott, and both prepared the way for that appreciation of Dickens everywhere between Berwick and Kirkdale which has made the man and woman of the English novelist hardly less familiar at the Scottish fireside than the man and woman of Burns.

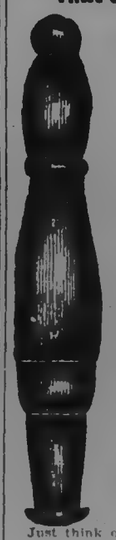
BRONCHITIS,
Huskiness, Throat Catarrh

Delightful Cure Discovered That Cures Quickly.



Old-fashioned remedies were administered through the stomach only, but as it is impossible to swallow anything into the lungs, little benefit ever resulted.

Strong drugs, such as opium, chlorodyne and cocaine, were resorted to, but did more harm than good.

Nowadays, when a doctor meets a case of catarrh — finds the throat filled with mucus—sore all the way down, he prescribes Catarrhozone because he knows it goes direct to the disease.

Catarrhozone cures by antiseptic balsams that are carried by the air you breathe direct to the source of the trouble.

In one minute you experience decided relief with Catarrhozone and invariably it does cure every type of Catarrh, Bronchitis, irritable throat and hoarseness. Just think of it—a sure cure without noxious drugs—one that is guaranteed and delightfully pleasant as well. Catarrhozone only, complete for two months' use, $1.00; small (trial) size 25c, at all dealers.

CATARRHOZONE A SURE CURE.

Two Minute Talks About PANDORA RANGE
for Coal or Wood

Why the Oven is such an Excellent Baker

WOULD you like to know the reasons for the wonderful baking powers of the Pandora oven?

One reason why the Pandora oven excels as a baker is because the Fire-Box is amply large enough to provide all the heat the oven requires. Another is because the Sheet Steel Walls of the oven are uniform in thickness. This, together with the Special Flue Construction which carries the heat around the oven twice, assures absolutely uniform distribution of heat in the oven. Still another is because the main bottom of range is protected with a heavy coating of Fire Clay which prevents cold drafts, passing underneath the range, from cooling the oven.

Look at a batch of bread baked in the Pandora oven. The crust on each and every loaf is exactly alike. The Pandora oven is the sure-working, uniform oven that you've long desired. And it's in a range that's guaranteed to satisfy you in every particular.

Go and see the Pandora at our agent's in your locality.

WHILE THEY WAITED

(Short Story.)

He jumped out of the little country rig, leaving it in the hands of a freckle-faced boy and rushed up to the ticket office just as the train was pulling out of the station.

"Pshaw!" he exclaimed irascibly. And then to the sleepy-looking, contented ticket agent: "When does the next train leave for New York?"

"Two hours," replied that individual laconically.

Maverick Oliver wasn't a man to cry over spilled milk. He sat himself philosophically down in a shady recess of the waiting-room and extracted a notebook. He would look over some memoranda he had jotted down for his solicited article for the Review, and then take a stroll along the country hedges. There seemed to be a rather attractive bit of woodland just beyond.

"How long must I wait for connections for Rosecliff?"

Something in the woman's voice, half contralto, half soprano, made the man with the notebook suddenly start. He'd been so engrossedly studying his memoranda that he had scarcely noticed the incoming train with all its attendant bustle; now, however, a single woman's voice made him start and caused the Review article to be as far from his thoughts as the military affairs of nations B.C.

The woman's back was turned towards Oliver, but he knew it was Eleanor. Who else in all the world had that queenly carriage, that soft slope of shoulder, that bewitching mass of coiled chestnut hair?

"For Rosecliff?" came the ticket agent's monotonous voice, as he caressed his wrinkled forehead with the back of his hand. "A half-hour, ma-am. Train's sixteen minutes late." The woman turned impatiently away from the window.

It was then they came face to face.

"You!" cried Oliver, springing up.

She stood there in the barren waiting-room, filling its emptiness with the richness of her charm. To the man's hungry eyes she was food of the most satisfying as well as of the most delicate sort.

She did not hold out her hand. Nevertheless she encountered him not in her old imperious fashion, but with a smile including him in some mood too large to be wholly personal.

"How you've changed, Eleanor!" he cried involuntarily.

"Are you, too, waiting for a train?" she answered softly in return. "In which direction do you go?"

"South—to New York," said Oliver. "And you?"

"To Rosecliff, fourteen miles east."

Oliver took her umbrella and tiny suitcase from her and they walked up and down the platform together, man and woman, instead of husband and wife, held apart by some strange fiat they had both accepted.

In the fields, all around, the buttercups were golden, and the wild carrot was in white, lace-like flower. Over in the woods beyond some songbirds waking from their summer siesta were beginning to warble. A group of travelling men were lounging on the railing at the far end of the platform, expectorating copiously to punctuate the points in their stories.

Oliver dusted the platform steps at the other end of the walk with his handkerchief, and the woman sat serenely down, her delicate profile outlined against the clear blue of the sky like some exquisite cameo. She had always been beautiful, though it wasn't that which made the man exclaim again irrepressibly:

"You've changed so, Eleanor!" It was true. It was no mere fancy of his imaginative writer's eye that discovered new meanings in the face before him; it had undergone a vague, but very gracious, transformation.

"Changed?" repeated she, with a curious tenderness. "I've tried to change. Tried—do you understand: Since last winter, when we agreed to separate, I've been trying—so hard. Maverick—to take control of my own stunted nature, turn it where it twists——"

"Dear," broke in Oliver with a bitter humility, "we were both to blame—both, do you hear? And I'm afraid you've ben cleverer than I if you've unsnarled things where they failed to fit the pattern. I've not changed much I'm afraid——"

Under her black lashes the woman smiled at him with a reverence he might have translated (had he been high-plumed), as some loyal acquiescence in his former state. What Oliver felt now, however, was curiosity in his wife, not in himself. So ——"

"Tell me," he burst forth, "what has changed you so?"

She rolled up her absurd little handkerchief into a string, and, throwing it over her knee, pulled it unconsciously by both ends, gazing steadfastly into the blue distance above Oliver's head.

"I don't know whether I ought to tell you," she began.

Oliver recalled that delicious little habit she used to have of tempting the Fates shyly, of hesitating when she meant to be right-down outrageous.

"Of course, you ought," he urged "You always do in the end, and it will save time." Under her playfulness he had allowed himself to grow light-hearted.

"Well, then—" she began, but her voice trailed off vaguely. Her cheeks took on a pinker bloom: she forgot the handkerchief and finished her thought with a mature dignity that became her like the armour of her sex.

"Our little boy, Maverick. Our little boy has changed me."

"Ah! Our boy—" Oliver broke off abruptly, for something had suddenly clutched him by the throat.

The woman hastily brushed her ears away, and went on practically:

"You'd be proud of him, Maverick—such strong, agile limbs—and he has the will of a little savage."

"Let me see," Oliver said brusquely, stooping over the platform's edge and plucking a buttercup stalk that had ambitiously grown up from the gravel, "he must be eleven months now."

"Yes, he was five when—when you last saw him." She kept her eyes deliberately fixed upon the high railroad trestles in the blue distance. "Do you know, he's been such a help to me. I've told him all the things I wanted to tell you; told him that his mother had been a vain, silly, girlish tyrant, who, coming straight from the convent, wanted to have everything his world had to give—money, fame, position—all these things that are bought in the marketplace—and had wanted to buy them with his father's conscience——"

Over the trestles the smoke of the incoming train was seen. There was the usual bustle and running to and fro on the platform seizing of handbags, carting of trunks, and so on. Whatever swift, mutual soul-revelations Oliver and his wife had been on the point of making dissolved into nothingness, jarred by the prosaic commotion of traffic. It was a pity, too, for with Eleanor's last words her face had melted into a pliant sweetness; her exquisite mouth had taken on sudden quivering little curves; she had seemed about to say, "Ambition, selfishness, the cruelty of pride—all these things have gone, Maverick."

She didn't say that, however. Instead she rose from the wooden step which her husband had dusted for her. "I'm glad you found me changed," she said merely. Something in the man's honest soul overflowed.

"I, too—I, too, Eleanor, will change!" cried he.

"Ah, you've no need to," answered she, meeting honesty with honesty. "You've ben growing like the trees yonder"—she nodded in the direction of the woodland—"for years—straight and strong. I had to be pruned. I had——"

The train's screeching whistle deadened her words. It came rushing in and stopped. Oliver still held Eleanor's tiny suitcase and umbrella in his hand. There was a confused sound of greeting to the passengers who had alighted, and the clamour of hotel runners and bus drivers.

"Now, then, step lively!" cried the brakeman, as the last much-bundled old woman descended, allowing the impatient travelling men to climb aboard. Oliver and his wife were the last of the crowd.

He helped her aboard, found her chair for her in the parlour car, then turned miserably to meet her eyes.

"All aboard!" came the strident voice of the conductor. The train began to move almost imperceptibly.

Then, as he bent over her seat, the woman laid a trembling hand on his arm and her eyes were brimming with slow tears.

"Good-bye, Maverick! Don't you want to go with me to our baby——"

"Good heavens- Eleanor, do I want to?"

Some lonely passengers at the other end of the car wondered what had suddenly illumined the man's handsome face with that electric thrill of joy. Then the telegraph poles began to whiz by. Oliver had forgotten New York.

Many Years an Invalid—Untold Agony From Headaches

Dizziness, Sinking Spells and Excessive Weakness Disappear With Use of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Nearly every woman will read with interest the letter of Mrs. Geo. Bradshaw, quoted below. It tells of years of great suffering from nervous Headache and other symptoms arising from weak, watery blood and a starved and exhausted condition of the nervous system.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Cosy Nook, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I am glad to state that I received benefits from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food which I failed to get any place else. I was troubled for many years, in fact from my early womanhood, with weak, watery blood, and given to dropsy. I suffered untold agonies from nervous sick headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells, in fact was a semi-invalid for many years. I tried many kinds of patent medicines and got no help, and tried every new doctor that came along, but all failed to help me. Doctors told me I had no blood, and that my heart and kidneys were diseased, and that I had so many complaints there was not much use in doctoring up one or two. Four years ago I took six boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and was glad to see I felt better, and then got six more, and they have cured me of many of my complaints. When I began taking Nerve Food I weighed 110 pounds and to-day I weigh 139, and am 45 years old.

QUICK RELIEF FROM THAT PERSISTENT, HACKING COUGH

We mean the kind of cough it gives one a cold shiver just to hear—the dry, deep-seated hack—hack—hack—that seems as if it were tearing the very vitals. That's the kind of cough that means business.

Fortunately, though, that is also one of the kinds of cough for which Na-Dru-Co Syrup of Linseed, Licorice and Chlorodyne was first prescribed, and which it has been relieving with great promptness and regularity ever since.

Na-Dru-Co Syrup of Linseed, Licorice and Chlorodyne is absolutely free from harmful drugs of any kind, and is safe even for children. It is pleasant to take, and acts quickly, relieving the irritation, loosening the phlegm, promoting expectoration, and so stopping the cough. Thousands declare it to be the best cough syrup they have ever tried.

Your Druggist will gladly recommend it, and will supply you with either a 25c. or 50c. bottle. The National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited. 116

WHY THE LEAVES TURN

At this season of the year everyone admires the vast beauty of the variegated colours of the leaves which Jack Frost has spent night after night in painting. But what causes the foliage at this time of the year to change from green to such magnificent colours?

The common idea is that frost causes the brilliant colours of the leaves. This popular fallacy is without foundation in fact, for frost has nothing whatever to do with the delicate tinting of the leaves; it does, however, hasten their fall. You have only to go out in the swamps and woodland a month before frost to find a young maple in all its fall glory, or a sumac bush blazing forth its fiery leaves, to explode the theory that frost changes the leaves.

Autumn colouring is actually due to oxidation, which is caused by the action of light and heat, somewhat similar to the rust on iron or steel. With leaves it is due to the fact that in fulfilling their mission they become choked by their own excretions, and the acids thus formed are acted on by the oxygen. It is a peculiar fact that young trees are the first turn red in autumn.

In extremely moist atmospheres the colours of the leaves are not usually very bright, as in England. And in very dry climates the leaves dry up suddenly, and their skin, which is very thick to prevent the escape of moisture, is not sufficiently transparent to allow the colour to be seen beneath. In regions where the autumn foliage is most vivid, we find that an average season produces the most exquisite colours. Neither a very dry nor a very wet summer will result in much brilliancy.

The extraordinary range of colouring in the autumn leaves of a single species is very noticeable, particularly so with the sugar maple, and it is a remarkable fact that individual trees will continue the same colours for year after year, and not only that, but the same branch willshow the first tinge of colour each season. But frost does not do this. It is the physical make-up of the tree that causes the leaves to shine in iridescent beauty during the autumn months.

We wish to call your attention to the fact that most infectious diseases such as whooping cough, diphtheria, and scarlet fever are contracted when the child has a cold. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy will quickly cure a cold and greatly lessen the danger of contracting these diseases. This remedy is famous for its cures of colds. It contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given to a child with implicit confidence. Sold by all dealers.

COAL

Coal, like gold, diamonds and other luxuries is found in mines, says the Chicago Post.

It is a brunette lignite. It is several thousand years old. Its manufacture began long before the conservation of forests was considered. Coal is the result of trees and ferns and flowers and grass and things getting entangled with the carboniferous era. Ask your coal man what he thinks of the carboniferous era, and he will explain that it is charged on your bill, pro rata.

Coal is regulated in price by the law of supply and demand, euphemistically speaking. It increases in price 10 cents per ton per month during the summer.

There is no way to utilize coal ashes. If there were, we would have to pay for them or return them to the coalman.

Gas is made from coal; also coal tar. From coal tar we derive many medicines, which are sold at approximately the same price as coal.

Coal makes heat, also heated conversation.

Coal mines are located along railways—usually where the haul will be long.

Coal is measured by the ton. A ton of coal weighs almost as much as a ton of feathers, but does not last so long.

Suffered With Nerve Trouble For Two Years.

IT WAS IMPOSSIBLE FOR HIM TO SLEEP.

Diseases of the nervous system are very common. All the organs of the body may be sound while the nervous system alone may be diseased, therefore it is necessary for anyone suffering from any nervous trouble to procure a remedy which will at once quieten the nerves and build up the system.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will do this for you, providing you give them a fair trial.

Mr. Chas. W. Wood, Montreal, Que., writes:—"For two years I had suffered with nerve trouble, and it was impossible for me to sleep. It did not matter what time I went to bed, in the morning I was even worse than the night before. I consulted a doctor, and he gave me a tonic to take a half hour before going to bed. It was all right for a time, but the old trouble returned with greater force than before. One of the boys, who works with me, gave me half a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I took them and I got such satisfaction that I got another box, and before I finished it I could enjoy sleep from 10 p.m. until 6 a.m., and now feel good."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

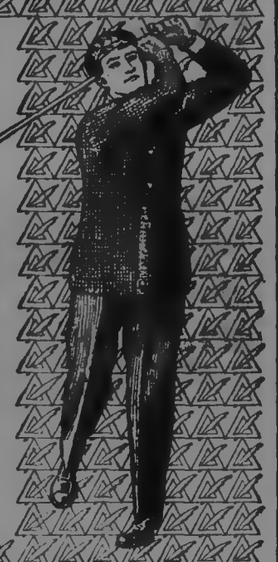
Whether you golf or motor or drive, skate or snowshoe or walk, the most useful item of your wardrobe will be one of the



Pen-Angle Sweater Coats

EXAMINE one at your local merchant's and you will agree that nothing you own is more beautifully made nor more exquisitely finished. Try one on, and you see that it has the snug, stylish fit your taste exacts. Subject it to hard wear and learn that it retains its new, smart shapeliness. It must do that, for our Pen-Angle knitting process shapes these improved sweater coats into permanent fit. Thus they cannot become saggy or ill-fitting, as many garments do that resemble them in appearance only when brand-new. You will be lastingly satisfied with the sweater coat that bears this trademark. 78

A family Necessity

Is a remedy capable of affording immediate relief to the hundred and one ailments that constantly arise. It may be a cold, perhaps toothache, neuralgia, pain in the back—use Polson's Nerviline, it's penetrating, pain-subduing, and powerful.

NERVILINE

is at least five times stronger than ordinary remedies and its worth in any household can't be overestimated. For man or beast, Nerviline is a panacea for all pain.

"Not If It Cost Ten Dollars

A bottle, would I be without Polson's Nerviline," write J. A. Ruth, a farmer living near Trenton, Ont. "Nerviline is the best household liniment I know. We use it for stomach troubles, indigestion, headache, and Summer complaint. I know of nothing better to take in hot water to break up a cold, or to rub on for rheumatism or neuralgia." Every farmer should keep a few bottles of Nerviline handy, and have smaller doctor bills.

Nerviline is a protection and safeguard against the pains and aches of the entire family, and cures rheumatism, neuralgia, toothache, etc. 25 cents for a large bottle.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

By example, much more than precept, can children be taught to speak kindly. Then, do not, for their sakes, ever let them hear harsh or unkind words fall from your lips.

* * *

Did you ever stop to think that all the best things in life come without cost to ourselves? They are given freely. The things that in their value are without money and beyond price are also in the method of their acquisition without money and without price. Every life is rich in the measure that it has discovered and possesses these treasures. A man may pay many thousands of dollars for the painting of a sunrise, and yet it never will be nearly so beautiful, so inspiring, so valuable as the sunrise itself, a spectacle which the poorest may enjoy without the expenditure of so much as a cent. All works of art, costly as they may be, are but imitations of the originals which, while far exceeding them in beauty, may be ours for the taking.

* * *

If we will only look around us we will see there is not a person we meet but there is something loveable about—a smile, a motion, a feature, voice, walk act. All have some good trait. If they have a sweet voice, tell them you think so, and it will make them happier and gain you a friend. If they have some feature you admire, or act or motion, tell them and they will like you far better. Do you know that is the true way of gaining friends tell them their good traits and leave the bad for them to find out? If we hear a singer and love the voice, tell her, and every song will be sweeter because of a loved one. If anyone has a pretty feature, tell her for there are many unhappy and sensitive about their looks. If anyone has a pretty walk or motion, say so. It hurts us to be told of an ugly feature, act or motion, but to be told there is something nice, pleasant or good about us, raises us in our own estimation and inspires us to try to be more perfect. It is not the truth that hurts. It is the cruel, wilful, malicious tongue of envy and jealousy that hurts. There are men and women—we all know them—that are living lives of complete sacrifices for others, and never hear one word of love or praise for anything done.

* * *

Innocent amusements transform tears into rainbows.

* * *

The man who is always telling about his good character should be careful to always have it with him.

* * *

Poverty is uncomfortable, as we can testify; but nine times out of ten the best thing that can happen to a young man is to be tossed overboard and compelled to sink or swim for himself.

* * *

Although it is a terrible misfortune to lose a home by fire, it is not nearly so bad as losing the happiness of home by the dissipation, unfaithfulness or disgrace of one of the members of the family.

* * *

Would you have your home a happy peaceful spot? Then let only gentle actions be found there. Let the husband press a kiss on the careworn brow of his tired wife, who, amid her never-ending round of household duties, is sure to find rest and encouragement in his love and sympathy.

* * *

The word "home" is only applied to the habitations of men. Beasts have lairs, birds have nests—temporary abiding places, both of them. Man alone builds for permanency, and a safe housing of his treasures and loved ones. A house is not a home. You cannot rear a home with boards alone.

* * *

Every wife ought to know her husband's income, and that knowledge should be the guide of her domestic expenses. Better is a dinner of herbs than a stalled ox with hatred therein Where a wife makes up her mind to do her duty in this respect she will brighten her little home and make it a place of perpetual sunshine.

* * *

While living is the time to bestow your love. Don't wait until the loving heart has ceased its beating and the tired feet are still to tell them you love them. What can they know of your words—of love, and praise, tears of grief? Give me all the love you have for me while I'm living: it will help us to bear the weary burdens that come on so thick and fast. In the home more especially is this true. The poor, tired wife is the packhorse. Without one loving word, she toils day by day, raises the little children, cares for the sick, until it seems as if the delicate form could bear no more. Never comes a word of praise for trying to do her best. Yet there comes a day when the feet go no more in the home, the voice is still, there is a deep solemnity all over the place. Something is gone. What is it? I might say your packhorse—yet I'll use the name that should be sweetest, "Darling Mother"—has gone. Life is blank; wife, my love, my life, has left me! Ah, me! home will never be what it has been; mother and wife has left us! If you could only say also, "I never gave her anything but loving words of praise, encouragement. I lifted every burden I could from her slight shoulders." Instead you generally howl with grief because your wife has gone, and there is no one to pack all the hard work on, or scold for everyone's faults.

* * *

There isn't any hope for a man when he reaches the point where he is not ashamed to have his mother know of his meanness.

GOOD SHORT STORIES

"I keep a coloured man around the house who waits on the table and does various other things," said the lawyer. "Up to a year ago he was getting $25 a month. Then he came to me one day and said he must have more money or he would strike. We talked it over and settled on $28 a month. He has got along at that figure ever since until the other day, when he walked in on me and said:

"'Mistah Blank, I'se sure got to go on strike dis time.'

"'But I thought you were satisfied, Robert,' I replied.

"'No, sah—no, sah. I hain't dun satisfied.'

"'Well, how much do you want?'

"'I don't want any mo', sah.'

"'Then what's the trouble?'

"'De trouble am, sah, dat de strike business am in de air all 'round me, an' I'se got to strike or bust.'

"'Are yon going to leave?'

"'No, sah.'

"'But you want more money?'

"'No, sah.'

"'Well, what then?'

"'A year ago, sah, I struck for'ds fur $28. Now I'se gwine to strike backwards for the same old $25. Sorry, sah, but I must dun strike or dese white folks 'round yere will think I'm jest common trash and hev no respect fur me!'—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

"Diplomacy is hard to define," said Senator Curtis at a luncheon in Topeka. "It is, however, easy to illustrate. Here is an illustration of diplomacy:

"A Topeka girl one brisk autumn evening sat beside the warm and clanking radiator with a young man. This young man was a good catch. But, though he called often and though he showed many evidences of affection for the girl, he had not yet mentioned marriage. He seemed uncertain. He seemed to be still on the fence.

"Well, the brisk evening I'm speaking of at about 9 o'clock the cook knocked at the parlour door, entered and said respectfully:

"'What shall I give your father for his breakfast in the morning, miss?'

"'Deviled kidney, I think, Hannah,' said the Topeka girl. 'Father, these cold mornings, is so fond of deviled kidneys.'

"'Yes, miss; and would you mind telling me how to prepare it, miss?'

"'Soak the kidney,' was the reply, 'for three hours in cold water, changing the water twice. Then cut into slices, season highly with salt and pepper and fry a bright brown. Now add a little warm water and stew very gently. Meanwhile prepare the sauce—four tablespoonfuls of cold gravy, one of vinegar, two teaspoonfuls of made mustard, two of salt and four of butter. Mix well. pour on the kidney and stew gently again till done.'

"'Oh, thank you, miss,' said the cook, gratefully.

"The cook had hardly gone when the young man, a new and tender light shining from his eyes, flopped down on one knee.

"'Miss Cosgrove — Mildred — dear one,' he began."—Washington Star.

One of the candidates for the representation of a country district, in the course of a speech just previous to the general election, had occasion for referring to the flogging of children. Some folks nowadays, he said, objected to beating youngsters at all, but he agreed with the truth in that saying of the wise man: "Spare the rod and spoil the child."

"I suppose that I was no worse than other boys," he went on to say, "but I know I had some flogging myself, and I believe it did me good. Now, on one occasion I was flogged for telling the truth!"

"It cured you, sir!" said a voice from the back.—Life.

"Why do you stick out the middle finger of the left hand so straight while you are eating?" asked the compassionate woman. "Was it ever broken?"

"No, mum," answered the hobo, with a snuffle, "but during my halcyon days I wore a diamond ring on that finger and old habits are hard to break, mum."—Independent.

ONE ON UNCLE SAM

"For ways that are dark and for tricks that are vain the heathen Chinee is peculiar." Gee Mon Won, proprietor of a Chinese restaurant in Chicago, inspired with a patriotic desire to return to his native land and take up arms against the ruling dynasty, confessed to the immigration authorities that he had illegally entered this country. He was promptly sentenced to deportation, and at once started upon a complimentary excursion at Uncle Sam's expense, thus saving the cost of transportation to China.

The greatest kind of Christmas present the greatest Christmas present of its kind, the

Edison Phonograph

a gift for ALL the family, a gift for ALL the year, and for ALL the years to come

THINK of the money that is thrown away on trifles at Christmas time—the candy that is eaten, the toys that are broken, the Christmas cards that are merely glanced at and thrown away. What have you to show for last year's Christmas?

Now think of the Edison Phonograph—the gift of a lifetime, that brings to every member of your family all of the very kind of entertainment each prefers—not merely for a day or a year, but for always. That's what makes the Edison the greatest kind of gift.

The Edison brings you the four great advantages which you should look for in a sound-reproducing instrument, and which you will find only in the Edison—exactly the right volume of sound for your home; the sapphire reproducing point, which does not scratch or wear the records and lasts forever—no changing of needles; Amberol Records, which play twice as long as the ordinary records, rendering each composition completely, the ability to make and reproduce your own records, in your own home, just as true to life as the records made in our laboratory.

That's what makes the Edison Phonograph the greatest gift of its kind.

There are Edison dealers everywhere. Go to the nearest and hear the Edison Phonograph play both Edison Standard and Edison Amberol Records. Get complete catalogs from your dealer or from us. Edison Phonographs, $16.50 to $240.00. Edison Standard Records, 40c. Edison Amberol Records (play twice as long), 65c. Edison Grand Opera Records, 85c to $2.00.

NERVOUS DEBILITY

OUR NEW METHOD TREATMENT will cure you and make a man of you. Under its influence the brain becomes active, the blood purified so that all pimples, blotches and ulcers heal up; the nerves become strong as steel, so that nervousness, bashfulness and despondency disappear; the eye becomes bright, the face full and clear, energy returns to the body, and the moral, physical and mental systems are invigorated; all drains cease—no more vital waste from the system. You feel yourself a man and know marriage cannot be a failure. Don't let quacks and fakirs rob you of your hard earned dollars.

BEFORE TREATMENT

AFTER TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers relates his experience:

"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Nervousness in the finger-nets and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the NEW METHOD TREATMENT and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

THE MISPLACED PIGMENT

An Adventure of Peter Crewe—"The Man with the Camera Eyes."

By Harold Carter.

(Copyright, 1911, by W. G. Chapman in the United States and Great Britain.)

The Chief of New York's Police department was seated in my office, twirling his hat uneasily upon his knees.

"We've got to find the man who killed Lord Pemberton," he said. "It ain't that I'd go a step further for a lord than for a plain man. But the press has taken up the matter on both sides of the water, and our repute's at stake."

"And your men are baffled?" I inquired.

"They can't get hold of the least clue," answered the Chief of Police. "I was thinking, if you could get your friend Crewe to help us——"

"Why don't you ask him?" I interposed.

"O, come off, Mr. Langton," answered the police chief with easy familiarity. "He'd jeer us out of the place. You know, he'd do anything for you; but he's had it in for us ever since we took the credit for finding that pretended suicide that came over here to swindle the life insurance people. Now if you'd induce him to assist us——"

The murder of Lord Pemberton had been a crime of remarkable brutality. Pemberton, who was the worthless son of an ancient English family, having disgraced himself and his title in England, had been expatriated in return for an annual stipend, which he has spent regularly, as soon as it arrived, in low haunts of New York's gambling quarter. He had in particular honored Delancey's gaming house with his presence and had lost his income regularly there as soon as it arrived. A week or so previously, having remained after the departure of the rest of the patrons, he had been brutally murdered by an employee, for the sake of a few hundred dollars which still remained to him, and his dismembered body had been found the following day in a cellar, quite by chance, at the time of a police raid on the establishment.

What was most singular in this case was the fact that the murderer, though known by sight, had succeeded in completely eluding the detectives. His name was Jackson—but that was probably an alias. The attention of all the frequenters of the establishment had been especially attracted to him by reason of his unusual pallor, his curly flaxen hair, which covered his head like a mop, and his remarkable glassy, bloodshot eyes. After the commission of the murder he had walked out of the building and had been swallowed up amid the population of the great city.

"Sure he is. New York's life and meat to them gamesters. Why, any place outside would be hell to him, not to mention that they'd spot him sure."

"Have you anticipated a disguise? He would naturally dye his hair, for example."

"That hair's a wig," answered the police chief promptly. "Else he'd have dyed it long ago. We ain't calculating on the flaxen curls, but we did hope to lay hands on him through some of his associates. However, he's vanished like a puff of smoke."

The story interested me. In my capacity as a police lawyer I had been instrumental in solving many mysterious crimes, often through the aid of Crewe, who possessed the peculiar optical power of never forgetting any man or thing that had once impressed itself upon his retina. Accordingly I broached the subject to Crewe and he consented to meet the police chief.

"In trouble again, Mr. Brenner?" Crewe asked jocularly. "And you want me to get you out?"

"I guess you've sized up the situation pretty well, Mr. Crewe," Brenner replied. "Where is the man? Who's hiding him and why don't they give him up for the reward?"

"Before answering you," said Crewe, "I should like to examine the premises of the gambling house. I suppose they are just as they were after the murder?"

"Nothing's been touched," said Brenner, "except that we had the body removed for burial. We don't have to produce that in court, you know."

"Quite so," said Crewe. "Suppose we go at once, then."

We set off in the direction of the West Forties and soon arrived at Delancey's, which was a very modest-appearing brownstone building. Brenner unlocked the front door with a key which he took from his pocket and we went up to the gaming room on the second floor. The tables, with their roulette wheels, faro layouts and baccarat packs, still remained as they had been at the time of the raid, while the floor was strewn with chips. Except for an accumulation of dust everything was as it had been.

At the back of the room was a small lavatory, containing the usual sink with its hot and cold faucets, a pile of towels, a piece of soap on a chain, and a much-used and not very cleanly brush and comb. Crewe entered and examined these things rather minutely.

"We ought to find evidences of flaxen hair," said he, taking up the brush. From his pocket he drew a little microscope, through which he examined it carefully. Then he turned his attention to the comb, from which he drew several short, curly strands.

"This was evidently the property of the murderer," he remarked to Brenner.

The police chief looked at them. "I guess you're right, Mr. Crewe," he replied. "But that won't help us much."

Crewe, who had been examining the hairs through his microscope, handed them to Brenner.

"This may be vital evidence," he answered. "Keep it, in any case, until the trial."

"You speak very positively, Mr. Crewe," he rejoined. "How do you know that there will be any trial? How do you know that you will discover the murderer?"

"I have discovered him already," Crewe answered. "I know him by his hair. I have encountered him upon the streets a dozen times at least. He lived formerly in the West Sixties, but has since moved, I think, to West One Hundred and Thirty-third or Thirty-fourth. Of course I did not follow him home."

"How can we get him?" Brenner asked incredulously.

"By searching the saloons of that district. Brenner, this man has escaped you because the detection is too easy, not because it is too difficult. There is only one man who could possibly have committed this crime, and to lay hold of him is really absurdly simple. Tonight I hope to find him for you. But first I should like to look through your photographs in the Rogues' Gallery."

"That's easy," Brenner answered. "Come straight along with me and you can look your fill."

We left the house and went to police headquarters, where we soon found ourselves within the long room upon whose walls hang photographs of all the known criminals in New York city. Crewe passed along, resting his eyes for a moment on each.

"You have some duplicates here," he remarked, pointing to two apparently different photographs which hung on opposite walls. "That man, who is described as 'Buck the Tiger,' for instance, is the same as Charlie James, who got off with Elmira Reformatory instead of a life sentence in the penitentiary."

He made similar remarks concerning many of the photographs, pointing out resemblances or making comments upon the history of the originals. Finally, having completed the circuit of the room, he came back to us.

"Our murderer appears here twice," he said, "each time as a first offender."

"Who is he?" cried Brenner quickly.

"If I should show you you would disbelieve me," answered Crewe quietly. "I will say, however, that he has been arrested once for burglary and once for manslaughter, in either case he was convicted, and each time he escaped with a trivial sentence as a first offender of presumably unblemished character. Now, sir, if you will meet us this evening at seven o'clock, at the entrance to the Ninety-Sixth Street Subway station, we can proceed upon our mission."

This appointment having been made, we separated, Crewe to go to his home, I back to my office where I waited in some trepidation until it was time for the appointment, too excited even to partake of dinner. Punctually to the moment Crewe arrived at the place appointed and, shortly afterward, the Chief of Police came on the scene.

Crewe was quite roughly dressed on this occasion. He wore a dusty derby hat, an ancient suit that had evidently seen much service, and a collar not too clean. The Chief of Police glanced at him in some astonishment but said nothing. We emerged from the subway at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, and proceeded for a few blocks northward until we found ourselves in the negro quarter. Hardly a white person was to be seen upon the streets.

"Now, Brenner, I want the saloons of this neighborhood searched systematically for the murderer," he said. "Get a dozen policemen from the local station and let them go about the work methodically in four parties of threes."

"But all the people of the neighborhood will get wind of it," urged Brenner, "and our man will escape—if he's here."

"Brenner, you must get out of that habit of arguing," said Crewe coldly. "Remember, I'm your inspector and captain and boss in general, all rolled into one. Otherwise I throw up the case."

"O, well, if you feel that way about it——" said the Police Chief sulkily.

"Now let me ask you a question. How many fashionable negro boarding houses are there around here—places where a stranger could go and find good quarters and a studious, refined class of inmates?"

"There's only two," the Chief of Police answered. "There's Sadie Jones' place, on West One Hundred and Thirty-ninth, and there's Lizzie Washington's, on the next block, across the road. But they wouldn't take white men there."

"We will chance that it's Lizzie's place," said Crewe. "If not, we can repeat operations tomorrow."

"Yes, when he's taken fright and flown," retorted Brenner.

"He may take fright but he can't leave," said Crewe.

"Why not?"

"Because he can only find refuge hereabouts. Now, Mr. Brenner, if you will get busy with your dozen detectives, put them on their job, we will wait for you here. Hurry to the local precinct station and order out your men to search the saloons. How long will it take you?"

"Half an hour," said Brenner.

"Then we will expect you at the expiration of that period," said Crewe. He snapped his watch and turned on his heel. Brenner, after a searching look, left us abruptly and disappeared in the direction of the station house.

"Crewe," I hazarded, "you are sure you are not working under a misapprehension? You know that the murderer is a white man and not a negro? A colored man could wear a flaxen wig, but nothing on earth, no dye that ever existed, could turn a black man white. Why should he take up his abode in the negro quarter?"

"All in good time," Crewe answered, smiling. "Langton, you haven't learned to treat me yet."

"I do implicitly. But in our former cases I have at least been able to conjecture your motives. While now, I confess, they are entirely shrouded in obscurity. How do you come to know this murderer by sight?"

"Because," said Crewe, "he is not merely one in a thousand but one in a million. Once seen, it would be impossible to forget him."

"You mean his curly flaxen hair and glassy eyes?"

"We are wasting time," said Crewe impatiently. "You'll see it all in due course. Now, Langton," he continued, searching in his pockets and bringing out two phials, a large and a small one, "you have a very important task to perform for me." He took the stopper from the larger utensil and emptied the contents into his handkerchief, which he bound around his hand. A strong and unmistakable odor of turpentine arose. "Yes, that is turpentine," he said, "and it forms a base for the second chemical." He handed me the little phial, which contained a clear, rose-colored liquid. "When I signal you with a nod," he said, "you will smash this upon my handkerchief. Hold it with care, for it is extremely fragile. At the signal, do not delay a moment, but smash the bottle upon the handkerchief around my hand."

A few minutes later Brenner came puffing up to us.

"I have obeyed your orders, Mr. Captain-Inspector," he said to Crewe, with a little touch of malice in his tones. "A dozen detective patrolmen are at work searching all the saloons methodically, and already the news has spread through this section of Negrotown. I have no doubt that all the criminals are already in full flight southward. Unless ours has turned into a tree," he added. "But what have you done to your hand, Mr. Crewe? Turpentine?"

"A component of a formula for catching criminals who elude the vigilance of police chiefs," said Crewe. "Now, Brenner suppose you lead the way to Lizzie's boarding house, where the swell negroes dwell. And, by the way, when we arrive there I want you and Langton to stand at least twelve yards away from me, and to engage in conversation. Try to get that detective look out of your eyes, Brenner. Langton, when I nod toward you you will rush up and empty the contents of the second bottle over the handkerchief upon my hand. I repeat this for the third time, because it is essential to the success of our manoeuvre. Brenner, you can follow Langton in my direction and have your gun ready, for I am unarmed. Now that is all."

He left us and took up his station immediately outside the colored people's boarding house. We remained in pretended conversation a short distance away. I noted how Crewe gradually assumed the attitude of a drunken man. He staggered slightly, stumbled once or twice, and leaned against a street lamp, from which coign he kept up a running commentary upon the appearance of the negroes hurrying by.

Another thing I noticed was that the passing pedestrians seemed all to be hastening in the same direction. Brenner explained the cause to me.

"They've got wind of the police search," he said, "and a thing like that scares the life out of these darkeys. Innocent or guilty of any crime, they don't like the proximity of the police. And I wonder that your friend Mr. Crewe hadn't sense enough to understand that, even if he is on the right trail, which I greatly doubt, he is doing his very best to defeat his object by instituting this search. By George, he is acting that drunken man uncommonly well!"

Too well, it seemed to me. I felt sure that, should any patrolman chance along that way, Crewe would stand an excellent chance of passing the night in a police cell. He had begun to molest some of those passing him. He caught hold of one man's coat, and as his victim turned angrily upon him he released him and laughed into his face with a vacant expression. The man hesitated a moment, as though meditating an assault, and then, with an angry curse, hastened away.

The door of the boarding house opened and a colored woman in an evening gown shrieked at him shrilly.

"Go away from there," she called, "or I shall send for the police. We don't want no white trash round here, scaring away respectable colored folks."

Crewe took off his hat with an expression of majestic intoxication.

"I bow to your demand, Mrs. Sadie Jones," he remarked, bending almost to the sidewalk.

"I'm not Mis' Jones; I'm Mis' Elizabeth Washington," the woman cried.

Brenner intervened with his patrolman's nightstick.

"As you will, as you will," replied Crewe soothingly. He moved away a dozen paces and turned slowly back to resume his post. But Mrs. Washington was still at the door.

"You go 'way, go 'way," she screamed, "or I shall call for help." At her defiant tones a number of negroes emerged from the house and began scrambling down the steps toward Crewe, while passers by in the streets stopped inquiringly and, seeing a white man in a condition of evident intoxication, assumed an aggressive attitude. Just then a negro man wearing blue spectacles came slowly along the street. He edged himself past Crewe and made as though to pass up the steps of the boarding house. It seemed almost opportune for intervention. I looked at Benner, who stood stock still, smiling, evidently not displeased to see the impending demolition of my companion. Just then I saw Crewe look back at me and give a slight but unmistakable nod of the head. I grasped the bottle in my fingers and hurried toward him.

"What you doin' here, you nigger?" he growled. "Want to fight me, do you?"

The negro tried to disengage himself and, finding himself helpless, looked protestingly toward the bystanders who had now formed a ring around the pair. I broke through and ground the phial into powder upon the handkerchief which still encircled Crewe's hand. The liquid turned from pink to brown. Crewe whipped off the handkerchief and let it fall into the road. Then with his wet and reeking hand he struck the inoffensive negro hard across the cheek, drawing his hand slowly over the flesh.

Cries arose among the spectators. Half a dozen stepped forward, prepared to lay hands upon Crewe violently. But as Crewe drew his hand away from the negro's face expressions of astonishment were heard and all eyes were directed to Crewe's antagonist.

The flesh was turning white beneath the blow. First the white fingerprints stood out against their sable surroundings; then the color began to fade rapidly, until the entire cheek was blanched—not white, but blanched, and of a deathly, sickly pallor, almost as that of leprosy.

Crewe suddenly stood up and spoke with sharp authority.

"I want you, Jackson," he said, "for the murder of Lord Pemberton."

He snatched off the blue glasses as he spoke, revealing a pair of glassy, bloodshot eyes. The man before him seemed to cringe. With his crisp, negro's hair, his ghastly eyes, and that piebald cheek that even now grew whiter, he became an object of horror to the crowd. They bolted in terror. But even as Crewe laid his hand upon the captive the man suddenly whipped out a revolver and thrust it into Crewe's face. I heard the report; the next thing that I saw, through a cloud of drifting smoke, was Crewe, with blood running down his face, engaging in a desperate hand-to-hand encounter with the murderer. At that moment Brenner intervened with his patrolman's nightstick. Two blows, and Jackson lay at our feet senseless. At the same instant a couple of patrolmen broke through the crowd and scattered them.

"You disobeyed me, Brenner," said Crewe reproachfully, wiping the blood from the slight flesh wound upon his cheek. "What orders did I give you last?"

"To have my gun ready, because you were unarmed," answered the chief of police sheepishly.

Brenner and Crewe were seated in my office with the district attorney on the following day. So far, although the identity of the criminal had been clearly established, though the dye had been partly scoured from his face and hands, the manner in which Crewe had discovered Jackson remained as mysterious as ever.

"It is an extremely simple explanation," said Crewe to the three of us. "Do you remember that I examined the flaxen hairs upon the brush under a microscope?"

Brenner nodded his head.

"You are, no doubt, aware that there is a marked and distinctive difference between a cross-section of a negro's hair and that of a Caucasian's? The one is spherical, the other cylindrical. This distinction is invariable, and is the cause of the 'kink' which many negroes are so anxious to have removed. I had already suspected that Jackson was a negro."

"But he ain't," cried Brenner. "He's white—he's a blonde."

"He is of purest negro birth," retorted Crewe. "When you mentioned the flaxen hair and the deathly pallor and red eyes I knew the man immediately. He is an albino negro, and the only one in this city. Albinos are occasionally met with among the negro race. The condition is due to an entire absence of pigment in the skin.

"I had, then, merely to search for one man out of four millions. I knew him well by sight. I recognized him in the Rogues' Gallery, both as a white man and as a black. Although a negro cannot whiten himself, it is the easiest matter for a person with a white skin to become black. Walnut juice, for instance, will readily effect this metamorphosis.

"Posing as either white or black, Jackson would live among either race and, after the commission of a crime, would take up his residence among the other. As a black man he was sentenced for manslaughter; as a white for burglary. You see now, gentlemen, why it was imperative that Jackson should take up his residence in the negro quarter while the hunt was on, and dye his hair and skin. Furthermore, I knew that he would seek out a boarding house where he could exist in the comfort that he was accustomed to. You see, the search had already narrowed itself down to a choice between two houses.

"I knew that the systematic searching of the saloons would drive him to take refuge at home through fear of chance questioning by the detectives. I waited at Madame Lizzie's till he should arrive. The blue glasses gave me the clue; my recognition of his face was a practical certainty; my happy application of my patent scouring fluid convinced me beyond all doubt. As I said, the discovery was really too easy."

"But how could you recognise a white-fleshed man when his face was stained with dye?" asked Brenner.

"Recognition is a matter of form, not color," answered Crewe. "As a matter of fact I am entirely color-blind. Everything to me is gray."

CAMORRISTS DO ODD THINGS

How One of That Ridiculous Society Unwittingly Restored Plunder to His Victim.

"The Camorrists in their huge cage at Naples, groaning and weeping and shouting all manner of nonsense—there was something ridiculous about that Camorrist trial."

The speaker was Professor Edward C. Heminway, the noted archaeologist of Chicago. He resumed:

"The Camorrists are always ridiculous. One of my assistants at Pompeii was walking one dark night out the Sorrento road when three Camorrist set upon him. The rascals took his money, watch, scarfpin and rings—they even took his overcoat. But he objected stoutly to this. The night was cold, he said, and without his coat he would freeze.

"Then one of the Camorrists drew off his own filthy, ragged overcoat and made my assistant put it on.

"'There you are,' said the scoundrel. 'I u won't freeze now,'

"And the Camorrists, laughing heartily over my assistant's ridiculous appearance in the ragged coat, hurried off into the night.

"My assistant in his turn hurried off, and then, putting his hand in the torn coat's pocket, he hurried very much faster—for the coat that had been forced upon him contained all the booty of which he had just been robbed."

Tipping in the Dark.

He had quite lost his English accent, his English manner, and his English appearance—that waiter I met the other day, but one little trick that he retained betrayed him for a countryman of mine," said the Englishman. "When I offered him a tip he turned his back upon me and stretched his hand out behind him to receive it.

"Nobody but an English waiter of the old school would have received a tip with so much humility. It was never the custom to cultivate that modest demeanor anywhere except in the tight little island. The old servitors there thought it a sign of dishonor to glue the eye on a fee before it had left the customer's hand, but the new generation of English waiters is as greedy as their brethren in other lands and makes a forward thrust for whatever is offered."

Courtesy of Japanese Men.

Women are safer in the streets of Japanese cities than they are in Chicago or New York. This is the opinion of Mrs. Murray, who, with her husband, Rev. David A. Murray, has been stationed for the last eight years in Osaka, Japan. Mrs. Murray also said, in addressing the Women's Presbyterian board of missions in Chicago: "The fine courtesy shown by the Japanese to all foreigners is remarkable. I have a greater feeling of safety when in Tokio than I have here in Chicago. During the time I have been in Japan I have never heard of a woman being molested. This can be attributed to the fact that most of the men in Japan are intelligent and well educated, men who take care that nothing shall occur that might bring shame upon the nation."

HE WITHDREW HIS REMARKS

Cleveland Councilman of the Old Days Rebuked for Attack on Foreign-Born Citizens.

Secretary L. F. Mellen of the Early Settlers' association, has in his possession a letter from Joseph Bartlett, now living in Toledo, giving some incidents regarding the city council 'way back before the war. In this interesting letter the writer says:

"I was at a meeting of the city council of Cleveland held back in the '50s in a hall on the south side of Superior, near what is now West Sixth street. My father was then city clerk. A councilman, of the name of Henry Blair, got very mad about some piece of legislation, and said:

"'There are too many darn foreigners creeping into the councils of American cities. They are the rough-scuff of the world.'

"Up jumped Alexander McIntosh—father of the H. P. and George T. McIntosh we know today—and said:

"'I throw the words back in his teeth for he is no gentleman. "Rough scuff" of the world are we? Thank God! I was born in dear old Scotland. I am as much of a gentleman as anybody here.

"'Go where you will you will find a McIntosh; he could be no more, no less.'

"Then John Ewing followed by saying:

"'I thank the honorable gentleman who left the land of his birth and landed in Castle Garden. My father was from Cork, my mother from Amsterdam. Will not my distinguished colleague please withdraw his remarks?'

"The remarks were withdrawn, and the incident was closed."—Cleveland Leader.

Meredith's Days of Penury.

The London city council is to be asked, and no doubt it will consent, to place memorial tablets on the house once occupied by William Morris, Burne-Jones and Dante Gabriel Rossetti at 17 Red Lion Square, W. C.

George Meredith in the days of his extremest penury joined with those other three young men in their bachelor establishment. The state of his boots, we are told by one of the biographers, at length aroused the solicitude of his fellow tenants, who one night stealthily replaced them by a new pair. But Meredith was so much piqued by what was meant in all kindness that he withdrew from the fellowship the next day.

Long-Distance Camera.

The most successful thing which has been recently introduced in the way of a long-distance camera is one which makes use of reflectors inside the camera to get the enlarged object. The box which accommodates the apparatus is not excessively large and has the appearance of two cameras of medium size superposed, and in this manner a focal length of 48 inches is provided. Under ordinary circumstances a camera of this focal length would be very large and awkward to handle. Enlarged and detailed views of objects as far as 1,400 feet have been made without any sacrifice to minuteness.

The Misunderstanding.

Senator Penrose, apropos of the bill to charge the magazines a higher rate on their advertisements, said the other day in Philadelphia:

"But one clause was misunderstood. It was as badly misunderstood as the Kittenhouse Square matron's command to her new kitchen maid:

"'Now, remember,' this aristocratic young matron said, glaring through her lorgnette rather severely at the young, pretty, but pert maid—'remember whenever you go out, I shall expect you to be home at ten o'clock.'

"The maid laughed with frank amusement.

"'Good gosh, madam,' she said, 'I can take care o' meself. You ain't near as fit to be out alone as wot I am. Why, you couldn't walk down Race street after dark without bein' spoke to, and followed, and havin' bits o' paper pinned on yer back.'"

A Clue.

"The girl in that chorus is a scream."

"The one who led the college yell?"

Fatal Lock Exhibited.

New York, Dec. 16.—After hearing extended testimony, Judge Crane, in general sessions late yesterday, allowed the lock in the door that is alleged to have barred the escape of the girl operators from the Triangle Waist Co. fire of March 25 last, to be introduced in evidence. Twice before the day the court had refused to admit the exhibit as evidence against Isaac Harris and Max Blanck, who are on trial for manslaughter in the case of Margaret Schwartz, one of 147 who died in the fire.

The piece of panel containing the lock, with shot bolt and known as "People's Exhibit, No. 3," constitutes the strongest physical proof the prosecution possesses. For two days Assistant District Attorney Bostwick fought a legal battle to get it before the jury. It shows conclusively, he contends, that ninth floor on the Washington Place side of the factory where many girls died, was locked when the panic-stricken employes threw themselves against it to escape from the flames.

Traveler Falls Under Train.

Toronto, Dec. 16.—A man believed to be Otto Lang, a commercial traveler of this city, was seriously and probably fatally injured by falling from the C.P.R. Montreal Express at the Don Station last night. He attempted to board the train as it was moving, but missed his footing and slipped beneath the front trucks of one of the sleeping cars, and before the train was brought to a standstill the trucks of three cars had passed over him. His left foot was so terribly crushed that it will have to be amputated, the right arm is broken in several places, and the right knee fractured.

Train Nearly In River.

Philadelphia, Dec. 16.—A signal tower was demolished and passengers on the Conshohocken, Norristown & Phoenix express train of the Pennsylvania Railroad, leaving Broad street station at 5.49 o'clock last night, narrowly escaped being thrown into the Schuylkill River when the rear coach jumped the tracks shortly after leaving the station. Six coaches composed the train, all being filled with passengers. When the rear car bounded the rails, the engineer applied the emergency brakes just as the train approached the bridge which spans the river.

Turks and Russians May Clash.

London, Dec. 16.—A despatch to The Times from Teheran says that the Mollahs at Shiraz, capital of the Province of Fars, have disregarded the order of the Government to cease the boycott of the Indian troops there, and that hence these troops are absolutely without supplies. The correspondent adds that a collision is possible at any moment between Turks and Russian on the Turco-Persian frontier.

Papers Must Pay.

Ottawa, Dec. 16.—Postmaster-General Pelletier has decided that newspapers which mailed campaign numbers to people other than subscribers during the Federal election must pay postage.

The matter caused quite a furore after the campaign, and Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux remitted the charges.

The new Postmaster-General reverses this decision.

Failed to Reach Canada.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 16.—Nantone Luisei and John Adaminka, after being refused admission to Canada by immigration authorities, were rowed over to the Upper River in a boat yesterday. When arrested they confessed and were fined $5 each and deported.

Teddy Denounces McNamaras.

New York, Dec. 15.—Denouncing the McNamara brothers as "depraved criminals, who have on their sacred souls the murder of so many innocent persons," Theodore Roosevelt, in an editorial entitled "Murder is Murder," gives his views of the famous dynamiting case in the current issue of The Outlook.

The associate editor bitterly scores the labor leaders, who championed the cause of the McNamaras, "as they did that of Moyer and Haywood," declaring they have rendered an evil service to the union cause. He insists that he believes in unions, but all workers must "set their faces like flint against any effort to identify the cause of organized labor, directly or indirectly, with any movement which in any way benefits by the commission of crimes of lawless and murderous violence."

Roosevelt to Run?

New York, Dec. 16.—A statement that Col. Roosevelt is "ready to run for the Presidency" is printed to-day by The Herald, which explains that the announcement comes from the "authentic source." The statement says in part:

"There will be no formal announcement of the candidacy of Mr. Roosevelt, but if he is chosen as the party's standard-bearer in the national contest next year, he will not decline the nomination."

Ottawa, Dec. 16.—A cable has been received from the Canadian trade commissioner in Birmingham, England, stating that a Birmingham firm requires several cars each of russets, greenings, baldwins and spys, grading No. 1 and No. 2 for January delivery. Ontario apples preferred. Parties desiring the name of the firm in Birmingham will be supplied with same by wire on application to the Department of Trade and Commerce.

U. S. Meat Packers Excluded.

London, Dec. 16.—The British Government has decided to exclude all the American meat packers against whom prosecutions have been instituted in the United States, from tendering for contracts for the supply of meat to the British army and navy, pending the settlement of the suits.

The contracts are now expected to go to Argentina packers.

To Protect "Dope" Fiends.

The Hague, Dec. 16.—The International Opium Conference yesterday adopted a resolution submitted by the British delegates restricting the import or export of morphine or cocaine in the countries represented at the conference. It was decided that all resolutions adopted concerning morphine should be applicable to opium and similar drugs.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Dec. 15.—There was a brisk demand from foreign buyers for all grades of Manitoba spring wheat and the prices bid showed an advance of 3d to 9d per quarter. There were orders in the market for over 1,000,000 bushels, but owing to the limited amount of ocean grain room available to all ports, only a fair amount of business was done. The demand for oats was also good. A fair trade continues to be done in all lines of coarse grains on spot at steady prices. There is no change in flour, for which the demand is fair, for local consumption. Demand for bran and shorts is good. Cheese is quiet but firm. The trade in butter is fairly good. Eggs are active. Demand for provisions fair.

That Subpoena.

Montreal, Dec. 16.—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy was asked yesterday if it was true that he had been called as a witness in a case appearing in the Toronto courts, but was excused from appearing, owing to the fact that he had to be in Montreal to take part in the reception to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught.

"Yes, it is quite true," said Sir Thomas, laughingly. "I did receive a subpoena to attend a hearing at Toronto as a witness. But as no conduct money accompanied the subpoena I did not feel that I could afford to pay railway fare from Montreal to Toronto and back to see if I knew anything concerning the matter at issue."

Considerable prominence was given to the affair in the Toronto press, but the calling of the C.P.R. president is considered to have been merely a bid for publicity, and as the subpoena was quite irregular, Sir Thomas took no notice of the matter.

PREDICTS A BIG WAR

British Member of Parliament Says Britain and Germany Will Involve the Whole of Europe

WITHIN SIX YEARS

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., DEC. 16.—John Norton Griffiths, Conservative member for Wednesbury in the British House of Commons, in an interview in a New York paper, predicts that Germany and Britain will be at war within six years and that all Europe and all America will be mixed up in the fighting. He thinks that the United States and Britain will stand shoulder to shoulder.

Arranging For Peace

Special to The Examiner.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, DEC. 16. — Tang Shao Yi, plenipotentiary extraordinary of the Imperial government, is expected here early next week with a retinue of eighty advisors and officials to treat with the revolutionary party here for peace. It is expected that a settlement will be reached. If not, the revolutionary army will march on Pekin.

May Be Ice Famine

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, ONT., DEC. 16. — The continued mild weather is causing anxiety to ice dealers all over the province, who fear that unless freezing commences immediately, there will be a famine next summer.

BOMB EXPLODES

Special to The Examiner.

BOSTON, MASS., DEC. 16—A bomb, placed apparently by black handers, exploded under a five storey tenement house at 14 Norman street to-day and thirty-five people were thrown out of their beds, but fortunately nobody was fatally hurt.

SAGE TEA WILL DARKEN THE HAIR

Restore Faded and Gray Hair to Natural Color—Dandruff Quickly Removed

There is nothing new about the idea of using Sage for restoring the colour of the hair. Our great-grandmothers kept their locks soft, dark and glossy by using a "sage tea." Whenever their hair fell out or took on a dull, faded or streaked appearance they made a brew of sage leaves and applied it to their hair, with wonderfully beneficial effect.

Nowadays we don't have to resort to old-time, tiresome methods of gathering the herbs and making the tea. This is done by skillful chemists better than we could do it ourselves, and all we have to do is call for the ready-made product, Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, containing sage in the proper strength, with the addition of sulphur, another old-time scalp remedy.

The manufactures of this remedy authorize druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

This preparation is supplied to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists. Special agent, Warne Drug Co.

BUILDING PERMITS

John Henthorn, 222 Rogers street, a stable, $75.

J. T. O'Connell, 386 Mark street, enlarging dwelling, $375

A. E. Coulthard, 210 MacDonnel street, verandah, $500.

L. Florence, Wolfe street, erected dwelling, $1,000.

A Des Moines man had an attack of muscular rheumatism in his shoulder. A friend advised him to go to Hot Springs. That meant an expense of $150.00 or more. He sought for a quicker and cheaper way to cure it and found it in Chamberlain's Liniment. Three days after the first application of this liniment he was well For sale by all dealers.

MOOSEJAW BUSINESS SECTION SWEPT BY FIRE IN WHICH LIFE IS LOST AND $500,000 DAMAGE DONE

Town's Waterworks Tanks Go in the Blaze—Mills and Elevators Are Insured.

DISASTROUS CONFLAGRATION

Special to The Examiner:

MOOSE JAW, SASK., DEC. 16. — Robert Ness was burned to death, one hundred thousand bushels of grain were destroyed and the mills, elevator, cooperage plants and machinery burned. This was the result of a fire which swept the business district of this town last night, resulting in a monetary loss of half a million dollars, and three hundred being thrown out of work. The first started in the Robinhood mill. In addition, the town's waterworks, including the immense overhead tanks, were destroyed by fire.

Mr. W. H. Lytle Was Honoured

Mr. W. H. Lytle, of Peterborough, was honoured recently by the subscribers of the Huron and Kinloss Municipal Telephone System, for the construction of which he has been contractor. A banquet in his honour was held at Ripley and attended by some forty of the business men, who presented Mr. Lytle with a gold-headed cane and an address as tokens of appreciation of the manner in which he has carried out his contract.

Restitution Was Made

And Fifteen-Year-Old Boy Charged With Theft Is Allowed to Go

The fifteen-year-old boy, who was found guilty of committing the theft from the Bell Telephone Co., last Sunday, was arraigned in the Police Court this morning and allowed to go. His home is in Port Hope, and his father paid the costs of the Court amounting to $22.90, and also made restitution to the Company. It appears that the boy had been working in the city for some time, and got into bad company with the results stated.

PARLIAMENT PROROGUES

Examiner Special:

VEHICLE DEMOLISHED

A Smith farmer met with a rather bad accident this morning on George street, north, while on his way to market. He was driving across Hilliard street, when another man, driving furiously out Hilliard street, ran into him at the corner. The rear wheel of the second vehicle caught in the rear wheel of the Smith farmer's buggy, with the result that it was demolished.

A Chance For Peterborough People To Play Santa

Good people of Peterborough, do you want a chance to play Santa Claus to seven small children, who without your assistance will have to do without a visit from the benevolent old gentleman?

There is a splendid opportunity afforded you in the fact that there will be a Christmas Tree for the children in the Children's Aid Society Shelter on the afternoon of Christmas Day. The generosity of the people of Peterborough is depended upon to make this event a success. It has never failed in the past; surely it will not do so on this occasion. Toys, books, games, skates, hockey sticks, articles of clothing, candies, fruits, etc.,—these are the things that delight juvenile hearts, and if you want to make Christmas, 1911, a time long to be remembered by these little people, you should do your share in helping the movement along. In almost every household there are toys that the children have grown tired of, books that they do not longer care to read. Why not collect some of these, and send them in for the children at the Shelter? The newspapers will undertake to see that the parcels reach the proper destination, or they may be sent direct to the Shelter. The Examiner will be glad to look after any gifts sent in to this office.

Now and then there comes an impulse
To the heart of every man,
To perform a kindly action,
Or assist a noble plan.

But, too often—there's the pity!—
He, procrastinating, cries:
"I will do the deed to-morrow;"
And, alas! the impulse dies.

So, good friend, if you are prompted
When perusing this appeal,
To assist their earnest efforts
(For the needs are very real),

Please address your contribution,
To the cause without delay,
Lest your good intention vanish
With the things of yesterday.

THE YULE-TIDE SPIRIT AT COLEMAN BROS.' STORE

Genuine English Plum Pudding and Real English Mince Meat Are Features.

A GRAND SHOWING

In the way of confectionery, the store of Messrs. Coleman Bros., of George Street, will be an exceptional attraction this year. Both of decoration and stock there will be a greater assortment than ever displayed before, while the proverbial cheery yuletide element will prevail throughout the entire store.

While the Christmas baking will consist of such a large variety, and the general stock will surpass in quantity that of preceding years, special arrangements have been made to provide a quicker and better service, so that no inconvenience will be experienced by the large number of purchasers expected. Two special features will be genuine English plum pudding and real English mincemeat, made from a very old recipe emanating from one of the oldest establishments in London, England. Everyone should see the monster Christmas cake which will be on exhibition in the window. For further particulars as to this, see Messrs. Coleman's advertisement.

All the Christmas cakes are made, baked and iced to perfection.

For imported novelties, Coleman Bros have the largest and best assortment ever seen in the city. Motor cars, wheelbarrows, dainty baskets, etc., also a fine line of cosaques and crackers. These should be inspected, as they are ideal things for both adults and children's parties.

Messrs. Coleman Bros. are to be congratulated on their magnificent display, and those who stop at the establishment need go no further for anything along the lines of confectionery.

CANTATA AT MURRAY STREET WAS A SPLENDID SUCCESS

A large and appreciative audience witnessed the rendition of that beautiful Christmas cantata entitled "The Other Wise Man," at Murray Street Baptist church last night. It is needless to make a comparison of the players' merits in representing the many and diverse characters, which are contained in this masterpiece of Van Dyke's, as each one creditably fulfilled his part. The costumes and trappings used in the reproduction of this ancient play, which dates back to the birth of Christ, were beautiful and costly. They presented a striking contrast to the garb worn by the present generation.

The principal characters were clothed in gorgeous costumes with headdress consistent with that worn in the Biblical age, with sandals on their feet. They presented a truly striking picture.

The work of the little ones, who were called upon to play minor parts at various stages of the play, was excellent. It evidenced to a marked degree the careful training which they had undergone during the preparatory stage, and reflected great credit upon the painstaking work of Mrs. Pettit, who had charge of the rehearsals. A kindly recognizance of her services, in this respect, was manifested during the evening, in a touching manner, when little Miss Doughty amid enthusiastic applause, walked across the stage, and presented Mrs. Petitt with a beautiful bouquet of roses.

Mr. Walter Batley, in the role of Aricibraund, displayed remarkable skill in the interpretation of difficult passages. His mannerisms and clear articulation were the outstanding features of his work.

A pleasing variation was the rendition of the "Holy City" by Miss Clara Kidd. Delicacy of tone and fullness of volume were the predominating features of Miss Kidd's singing.

Miss Bessie Elcome presided at the piano. A very pleasant evening was concluded by the singing of a verse of that well-known hymn "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name".

It is safe to assume that the event was away ahead of anything that has been produced in the church for some time, and fully sustains the enviable reputation which has been built up by the members of Murray Street Baptist church, as regards church functions.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY

The annual meeting of the Peterborough centre of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada will be held on Monday night in the chemical laboratory of the Collegiate Institute. The council will hold a meeting at 7.15 o'clock sharp and the general meeting will commence at 8 o'clock. After the business has been transacted a lecture will be given on the planet "Saturn", the queen of the skies. Saturn is in a nice position for observation just now, and it is therefore peculiarly appropriate that the Society should spend an evening in discussing the planet. The general public is cordially invited to be present. There is no admisson charge and all will be made welcome.

LONDON BISCUIT WORKS DESTROYED BY A FIRE LOSS WILL BE $135,000

Firemen Had a Difficult Task as the Adjoining Buildings Were in Danger---Business Will Be Suspended Until Spring and 200 Are Out of Work.

Special Wire to The Examiner.

LONDON, ONT., DEC. 15.—The big brick factory of the D. S. Perrin Biscuit and Confectionery Company suffered a serious fire to-night, and at midnight the blaze threatened to destroy the whole structure. The alarm was turned in from the City Hotel about 11.20 o'clock by a passerby, who noticed smoke issuing from the rear of the building on Carling street.

The firemen found the top storey in a blaze at the back. In front the building goes to six storeys, and here it quickly spread until by midnight the fire was fast eating its way below.

At this time only the building erected within the last few years was on fire, but the older portions of the factory were in imminent danger, as well as adjoining wholesale houses.

The factory extends through from Dundas to Carling streets, a depth which makes it difficult for the firemen to combat, and though three high-pressure streams were on the rear and the aerial truck was in use on Dundas street, it did not appear at midnight that anything between the fire walls could be saved.

The fire originated in the candy department, but as yet the cause is unknown.

The Perrin factory is one of London's largest industries, employing many hundreds of hands, while the value of the property in danger may be a million dollars. To-night's fire is less than a block from the scene of the disastrous mercantile fire of last month, and the ruins of the burned drygoods stores were brilliant with reflection from the fierce fire raging at Perrin's.

A later despatch says:

London, Ont., Dec. 16.—Vice-President McFarlane of the Perrin Biscuit factory, stated this morning that it would not be possible to resume any material part of the business till spring. In the meantime the rebuilding will be gone on with. Later editions of to-day's local morning papers indicate that the firemen worked with great courage at the fire, and several narrowly escaped death under the falling walls. A revised estimate places the loss at one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars, partly covered by insurance. Two hundred are out of employment.

Some Objects Of The Local Health Association--How One Can Help It

To provide medical attendance, comforts and necessaries for the sick.

To disseminate information relative tohousehold and public sanitation for the preservation of health.

To employ a district nurse. The services of a nurse will cost about $1,200 per annum. Will you help by paying an annual membership of one dollar, or a life membership fee of one hundred dollars?

The above are among other reesons why the Peterborough Health Association has been incorporated. If you do not feel disposed at present to pay an annual membership fee, there is yet another way of helping along its good intentions. The little Christmas stamps and pretty calendars, issued on behalf of this local organization to help care for needy patients, serves a very practical purpose in securing funds for the association. But the educational value of circulating these stamps among citizens is not to be overlooked. For this reason it is urged that a one cent stamp be placed on every letter and package that is mailed between now and the New Year.

With the stamps only costing one cent each the door is open to every one to have some part in the fight against consumption. Every buyer of a Christmas stamp or calendar will be lending a helping hand in the campaign in our own city. The stamps and calendars are on sale in the city drug stores, the city banks and with several merchants.

RESULTS OF THE INSPECTION ARE VERY SATISFACTORY

The general inspection of fire appliances for the city of Peterborough was made by Mr. Wilson, C.E., inspector for the Underwriters Association, during the last few days. The inspection was made with a view of ascertaining whether or not Peterborough is keeping pace with the growth of the city in the matter of fire fighting facilities. When Mr. Wilson arrived in town on Wednesday morning from Toronto, he went direct to Mayor Morrow's office and requested the Mayor to allow him to send in an alarm of fire over the fire alarm telegraph system. Mayor Morrow, realizing the importance of his request, acceded to his wishes, and turned in an alarm from Box 23, corner George and Hunter streets. The firemen responded very promptly.

His Worship ,the Mayor, then introduced Mr. Wilson to Chief Howard. The order was then given to lay twelve lines of hose from different hydrants for the purpose of taking the waterworks pressure. This test lasted from 10.15 a.m. to 12.15 p.m. and gave the firemen a very strenuous workout. Over three thousand feet of hose was used ,and the street being very muddy it required a good deal of scrubbing and cleaning to put things back into shape.

The inspector was very uncommittal ,and would not give out an opinion as to the results of the test, but the Mayor and a number of the aldermen who were present, agree with Chef Howard that the pressure was all that could be desired. The pumps at the waterworks station stood up well during the severe test of two hours' duration. A pressure of 115 pounds was maintained at the plant. The pressure on George street varied according to the number of streams playing. The lowest pressure at any one time was 53 pounds.

On Thursday morning the inspector, accompanied by Chief Howard and one of the firemen, set out to test the pressure at different points throughout the city. Commencing at the north of Water street, a complete circle was made of the outskirts of the city. The inspector took the pressure at each hydrant, which varied from 96 to 70 pounds. Some forty-two hydrants in all were tested.

This morning the steam fire engine was tested on Aylmer street at the Brock street bridge. The engine was kept running from 9 a.m. till 11.20 a.m. Three fire lines were in commission, throwing three solid streams of water, one of 1 1-2 inches in diameter and two of 1 1-4 inches in diameter. The hydraulic lift was 9 feet 10 inches and the gauge on the engine registered from 80 to 120 pounds. The water pressure at the nozzle tested between 70 and 90 pounds. Mr. Wilson let loose the information to the effect that the engine was in good working order.

Mr. Wilson went to Millbrook this afternoon and will return this evening, when he will meet Mayor Morrow and Mr. Matthews. He will also be here on Monday for a short time.

FELL TO HER DEATH

Tragically Sudden End of Mrs. Jas. Campbell—Slipped on the Stairs

WELL KNOWN RESIDENT

It was with tragic suddenness that the call of death came to Mrs. James Campbell of 334 Water street, yesterday, who succumbed to injuries received as the result of a fall.

At 4.15 Mrs. Campbell was descending the stairs, when her foot slipped, and, owing probably to her advanced age, namely seventy-one years, she was unable to maintain her equilibrium and fell, her head coming in contact with the wooden bannister post. She instantly became unconscious and her physician (Dr. Eastwood) who was hurriedly summoned, arrived shortly, only to find the unfortunate lady breathing her last. She died without regaining consciousness.

The deceased lady, whose maiden name was Annie Marie Melville, was a valued member of St. John's Anglican church and a constant attendant thereof. She was very well known in the city and much beloved of all those who were fortunate enough to know her. The relatives, to whom the news of their sudden bereavement naturally came as a severe shock, have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends.

Mrs. Campbell is survived by two sons and two daughters, viz.: Mr. James Campbell of Peterborough, Thomas of Cleveland, Ohio, Miss Hattie of Weyburn, Sask., and Miss Katie of this city. A sister also laments her demise, in the person of Mrs. Samuel White, of Peterborough.

The funeral arrangements will not be definitely decided upon until Monday.

Is In His New Stand

Mr. Robert Snelgrove's new barber shop in the Hotel National is coming in for some admiring comments on the neatness of its appointments and fittings, ad no doubt the same liberal patronage that he received in his George street parlours will follow him to his new location, which is conveniently and centrally located. Mr. Snelgrove's reputation as a capable barber has been well earned, and he has every convenience in his new shop. 2d-140

THE WEATHER

A year ago to-day the thermometer was down to 11 degrees below zero, and the following day it was 15 degrees below. There were ten inches of snow on the ground, while sleiging had been good for several weeks. Winter set in early this year in the far west, and some severe weather was experienced, but of late it has been quite moderate. There is an old saying (which frequently proves its truth) that if htere is no sleighing before Christmas there will be little afterwards. But we shall see what we shall see. The very mild and unseasonable weather up to the present time is in great contrast to last year. —W. P.

NOT CAUSE AND EFFECT.

The despatches tell us of a man voting in Haileybury, Ont., on Monday, at the age of 106 years, probably the oldest man in Ontario to cast his vote. He was certainly old enough to vote, and he knew how to vote right—he voted Liberal. What is remarkable about this gentleman, Mr. Reneau by name, is that he has been using tobacco for the last ninety-five years. But that doesn't prove anything. Men who never used tobacco live to a ripe old age, and men who use and don't use tobacco, die before they are thirty.

HOE OUR OWN ROW.

We learn from the despatches that the Province of British Columbia proposes the construction of an extensive system of provincial railways, including the building of a trunk line north and south from Fort George to Vancouver. What is of interest in this is suggested by the proposal of the Whitney Government to apply to the Dominion for aid in the construction of Ontario's provincial railway, the Temiscaming and Northern. The position of The Examiner in this is justified; that position is that it would be unadvisable to have the Dominion Government meet this demand for a subsidy. It would establish an unusually costly precedent. If the Dominion came to the aid of Ontario's provincial railway, it could not refrain similar aid to other provinces, say, British Columbia, whose new scheme would bleed the Dominion treasury white. If this were extended to all the provinces, Ontario would have to bear the brunt of the cost. This provice pays the larger proportion of the Dominion revenue, and would thus have to pay an inordinately large share of the cost of building railways in the other provinces. Ontario is rich enough and well able to build her own railways; it would pay her better to do this "off her own bat" than get a little Dominion subsidy which would be far more than offset by the contributions she would have to make, if the system of Dominion aid to provincial railways were established. We can, and should, hoe our own row.

PROMISE AND PERFORMANCE.

Winnipeg is outside the meterological cyclone belt, but a perfect storm of criticism and protest from all parts and all classes of the community has greeted the announcement of an increase in telephone rates of the Manitoba Government. The Free Press and The Tribune both publish columns of interviews form nearly all the prominent business men of the city, declaring that the new rates are a serious menace to the business prosperity of the city. The Board of Trade, Builders' Exchange, Real Estate Exchange, Industrial Bureau, and other public exchanges are calling meetings to record a formal protest, and urge the oUvernment to reconsider the decision. At the City Hall the Controllers are already figuring on installing a private system of telephones between all the service departments, including the police stations and fire halls. At present the city's telephone bill is about $5,000 yearly. Under the new rates it is estimated at between $20,000 and $25,000. There is much bitter comment on the value of the pledges of the Roblin Government that Government ownership would mean the cutting of Bell rates in two, whereas the new schedule practically amounts to doubling the former Bell rates. Among the interviews published, are many from prominent Conservatives who declare they are through with the Roblin Government. Yet the telephone system was taken over with a great flourish of trumph; the rates were to be cut in two; the corporation monopoly that was crushing the people was to be ended, and talk was to be as cheap as the talk of the government has proven to be. All went well, by dint of paying interest and other charges out of capital till it came to pay the piper. Then the illusion vanished, and to make the system pay the government has to raise, almost to the point of doubling, the rates, creating a revolt amongst consumers. Public ownership of public utilities is only justifiable on the supposition of efficient management. Prediction of satisfactory results, fades often away in the face of proof. Will the Hydro-Electric scheme proved to be what is claimed for it when the day of settlement begins to eat into the profits? For some reason, the Tory press of Toronto is easily pleased with the light the city is getting under this arrangement. The business streets are well lighted, but in the residence streets, visible darkness is the rule. Credulous investors who have released their good money at the call of the sleek-voiced mining company promoter, will realize that there is a wide margin between promise and performance. This applies to the line of great public utility promises. Far away fields look green. It is only experience—the eating—that develops the quality of the pudding.

CONNAUGHT THE CRITIC.

Even if His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, is of royal lineage, even if the sang azul runs in his veins, he is subject to the weakness of all mortals. He is evidently just a little bit proud of his promotion to the governorship-general of Canada, and, like the ordinary run of human beings, is inclined to show it a little—to adopt the new-broom attitude, and be a little critical of the new conditions he meets in Canada. His Royal Highness is still new to the country and has evidently only had a chance to read the newspapers of the larger cities. This may explain why he came out with a kindly, but at the same time sharp, criticism of the quality of English used in the press, and of the prevalence of "slang" found in its pages. This criticism may have, and doubtless has, some justification. Nobody will contend that the English language, written in the ordinary journal from day to day, has the classical tornure and texture of that of a Macaulay or a Goldwin Smith; or the polished elegance and poetic cadence of a Ruskin; or the jerky, thrust-and-cut finish of a Carlyle, but the conditions and circumstances must be taken into account. If his Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, had for one short week to take the duties of an editorial writer on, say, a country daily, or small city daily, at the end of that time he would be His Royal Lowness—in spirits anyway. If he had to do his wrting at a gallop, under pressure of time, with infinite distraction, complicated interruptions to the smooth flow of classic thought, he would pity, instead of blame. If he had in the course of a half column article, which mght be done in say half an hour, to be subjected to interruptions that would extend the time to two hours, with the line of thought and flow and spirit of expression broken half a dozen or a dozen times, he would pity and not blame. If he had in that time to receive callers, on no business but frivolous curiosity; if he had to absorb the wandering spirit of Pro Bono Publico's letter on street lighting; to mollify Mrs. Jones over the failure to publish half a column about Mrs. Jones' pink tea; to satisfy Mr. Browne—with an E—that the final E was not dropped from his name in the list of names of the directors of the society for the suppression of snobbery, with malice aforethought; to pass upon the merits of a ghastly obituary poem, an insult to the dead and the living; to praise its inanity too grotesque for tears; to listen to the platform of an aldermanic candidate, and diplomatically dodge a promise of a column "write-up"; to pass upon the fearfully and wonderfully made productions of the cub reporter and season the occasion and shore up the offender, with some sage advice; to wrestle with proofs and weep over the compositor's mysteriously wonderful interpretation of manuscript; to suffer all this inspiring interruption, this wearing distraction — if Hs Royal Highness had to endure all this in the course of writing an article, on a subject that presupposes thought, consideration, deliberation, co-relation of ideas and logical sequence, he would not perhaps be surprised if the bucket came upon from the well of English undefiled, slightly muddy, as to contents.

There is less excuse for the writers on the bg dailies, which the Duke doubtless referred to. They have nothing else to do except write, without interruption, their little column or so during the day or night; they have time to think without extrinsic distracton, to revise, correct, strengthen and polish their articles. They don't have, as many writers on the smaller dailies have to do, dash off an article under the circumstances referred to above, with no chance even to glance it over after it leaves the pen, or see it, till it appears in print, with all the imperfections of hasty preparation on its head, and the added embellishments of fiendish compositors. Writing precise and well worded English is not a matter for haste.

Peck's Majority—622.

A glance at the proofs of Dickens' novels, reveals an infinity of correction re-arrangement, recasting and polish, that even that master hand had to employ to reach the rythmic and graceful flow of charm that ripples over his descriptive passages. The newspaper writer has to write under pressure, has to touch the point sharply, has no time for nice, choice of phrases, has to reach effects by the shortest way; has to reason rapidly, and if he falls short in elegance of expression and purity of diction, himself feels the failure worse than perhaps anybody else, even the critic who, under the same circumstances, would not perhaps do as well.

HOW THEY WORK IT.

In an angry article, Le Canada, a Liberal French-Canadian daily, criticizes Hon. Col. Sam Hughes for an extravagant speech which he is said to have delivered against priest and Pope some twenty-two years ago.

It would be a fine thing if all Col. Hughes' follies had acquired so respectable an age.

The holding up of Col. Hughes as a man who, having prospered on the violence of his opinons, until he earned a portfolio from Mr. Borden, now talks peace between Orangemen and Roman Catholics, as if the purpose of any strife they ever had was gone now that the quarrel had landed him in office—this suggests to us that we should remind Le Canada that Mr. Borden, in creating his Cabinet, had no other course but to include Col. Sam Hughes in it. The Colonel had to be given a portfolio for the very reason that he made that speech twenty-two years ago and many another since.

When Mr. Borden found himself compelled to tie up to the Nationalists, led by Mr. Bourassa, because there was no other party in Quebec that he could tie up to, he was required to hand portfolios to Messrs. Monk, Nantel, and Pelletier, and preferment to men men like Messrs. Blondin and Sevigny who had made violent appeals to the prejudices of Quebec. Having done that, Mr. Borden had no choice but to balance matters, if he could, by making Col. Hughes Minister of Militia and Dr. Sproule, Speaker of the House. They describe this as a fine sense of colour scheme.

The idea is to bring into one Cabinet the "good fellows" who can handle rival factions, no matter how violent their antagonisms may be—men who can go out their various ways from the common centre of a Cabinet, each to drill and train a ferocious prejudice while seeing that it is tied and muzzled so that for the present it cannot get loose and hurt anybody. In the Dominion Cabinet the Conservatives have Nationalists and Imperialists feasting together in armed truce, the leaders of each having sent word to their followers that they have captured the castle and that the others are their prisoners.

In the Ontario Cabinet, one can imagine with what jocund affability Hon. J. J. Foy, representing the Irish Catholics, Hon. Dr. Reaume, representing the French-speaking electors, and Hon. R. A. Pyne, representing the Orangemen, will meet together today to congratulate each other on the way they delivered the goods to each other on election day. The question of bilingualism may be a very serious one, but nothing of this kind is serious if you possess political sagacity — and can find your Foy and your Reaume, your Pelletier and your Hughes.

In so far as they suspend hostilities, it is well; but they make no effort to end them, because on them they thrive. Under Sir Wilfrid Laurier the Liberal party sought common ground for the equitable settlement of racial and religious differences. The desire was to disarm and disband factions. The present idea is to reward the leaders, subsidize factions, humour them, build them up so that each will be invincible in its own area. Then nothing will be necessary but to "handle" them well and keep them apart. It is a plan which may keep certain men in power, but it does not lead the country anywhere. —Toronto Star.

KIT'S COLUMN

More or less laughter at the absurd or ridiculous or other pose of what is termed The Common People at the receptions held recently in various Canadian cities by our royal governor-general, and his consort has been running through the press, but suppose for a moment we take the point of view of the man and woman in the street—so to speak. To begin with, I do not believe that the snobbish element was in the ascendant; nor that it was all curiosity, or the gymnastics termed social climbing, or the desire of one neighbour to "show off" against another which actuated the people in the main. It was a desire, affectionate and loyal, to see the son of Queen Victoria, the brother of King Edward and the uncle of King George at close quarters—and to see his wife the duchess. It was an imperial desire, inspired by pride in our empire and our royal people. The bystander who was at all observant heard more than one in the crowd speak of the Duke of Connaught as "the queen's favourite son," for Queen Victoria, though long lying at rest, is still "the queen." Next to that came curiosity, and the very natural desire to get as close to the great people as possible. Then the excitement of the thing and queries as to the proper clothes to wear on each occasion, the proper sort of bow to make. Every city wanted to be at her prettiest in honour of the visit of these simple, kindly royal people, who in their turn did everything possible to make things easy for all who had to do with them officially or socially. None is so grateful for kindness, so simple and courteous in manner as the man or woman of fine breeding and culture. The higher the rank the more gentle and easy the speech and actions. It is only your parvenus, your newly-rich who by vulgarity and aggressiveness show plainly they were not to the manor born.

The eagerness of the people to assemble at the receptions was not vulgar. Naturally many were nervous, timid, and consequently awkward in their movements. Court curtseys are not always included in the school curriculum. To us in Canada who live far from the dwellings of royalty, and who are busily engaged in developing our splendid country, court manners do not come as easily as to those of the older lands who are accustomed to see royal people frequently and to take part in royal parades and processions, and the eagerness of the man and woman who have no pretensions to belong to society, to go to the personal expense of buying fitting clothes for banquets and receptions in order that they might make a proper appearance before the duke and duchess is not without its touch of pathos. What if the wearer merely nodded with apparent coolness and inward trepidation, or ducked abruptly, or stepped awkwardly by without bow or curtsey when there was nothing in the heart but loyalty and the wish to do honour to the queen's son and his duchess? Behind all the nervousness and awkwardness there was a brave desire to do the best possible in honour of one's town and one's country.

The common People! Why the heart of the nation beats in the breast of the Common People.

There was curiosity too, and funny instances of it. I don't know what the little boy expected to find, but he told his mother when he came back from the depot that the Duchess of Connaught "was just a lady like you, Maw, if you wuz fixed up." I think his idea of a royal lady included a face made of pure gold with diamonds for eyes and a ruby for a mouth—granted that he had known the difference between these and bits of coloured glass. Another little boy confided his belief that the duke would be like a Big Indian Chief — the Canadian child's very natural idea of greatness!—all painted up and feathered, and little girls innumerable expected that the duchess would wear a huge golden crown upon her head and carry a "wand"—like a fairy.

Some grown-ups had somewhat similar fancies, but that each and all were impressed when the moment for presentation arrived—any onlooker could determine. There was the little old lady who ducked herself almost on her face, and the dear old man who hadn't his card ready and kept the line waiting while he fumbled it out, and then walked calmly by the royal pair without bow or salutation because he was so busy putting the rest of his cards back into his pocket book! There was the correct person who tried to walk backwards and nearly bowled over a fat lady in a jet garniture into whom he bumped with an entire expression of good will on his beaming face. There were, to be sure, many contretemps and awkwardness and laughable incidents, but at the bottom of all these there was only warm good will, a desire to do oneself and one's town proud, and a curiosity and interest that were wholly affectionate and loyal.

There is not one of us who can afford to laugh at the other, for the plainest and poorest who turned out to honour the governor-general and his consort were as worthy as the richest and finest. Each voiced the sentiment of the country.

From the splendid pageant of Christmas books, I pick a few from the fringe as it were. Of little inexpensive gift books there is a myriad, one to suit every fancy. Either Christmas Bells or Christmas Roses would make a sensible present for one who is fond of verse. Both are by May Byron and are finely illustrated in colours. A booklet for a pious friend is The Joy of the Lord, by J. R. Miller, D.D. We find here this beautiful quotation:

But makes some green spray sweeter;
There's never a wind in all the sky
But makes some bird wing fleeter;
There's never a star but brings to heaven
Some silver radiance tender;
And never a rosy cloud but helps
To crown the sunset splendour.
No robin but may thrill some heart,
His dawn-like gladness voicing;
God gives us all some small, sweet way
To set the world rejoicing."

An even more beautiful book than the three foregoing is Peter in the Fire Light, by that delightful writer, William Allen Knight. It is handsomely bound in cloth with a decorated cover. The price is small, and sometimes though our gift wishes are made of gold—the price is a necessary consideration when the purse is thin. I spent a late half-hour with Peter in the Fire Light, and if I had a friend who was a "shut-in," I would send St. Peter to such a one with my Christmas message. Of fairy books there is a Fairy land from which let us pick—for little girls—Fairies I Have Met, by Mrs. Rodolph Stawell, beautifully illustrated in colour by Edmund Dulac. In it there are tales of sea fairies and land fairies, of the big spider's diamonds, and the box of dreams, and of how jewels were made by the mermaid, and the wood pixies and the fire gnomes—rubies and sapphires and emeralds. But none of these quite pleased the Princess, for she wanted the beauty of each all together in one jewel. This is the tale of the opal and I wouldn't for the world like to tell here the secret of how the fairies made it. That is the heart of the story in this fairy book. The Book of Betty Barbour is another dear Christmas gift book for some little girl who can read well. It comes in a box and is full of funny pictures both black and coloured. A boy might prefer Ali Baba (and other stories) in a book with a red cover with a gold donkey on it, and coloured pictures inside, or The Magic Horse (and other tales), also from the Arabian Nights, and splendidly illustrated. A book filled with delightful pictures and verses is Below Zero, by Noel Pocock, in which all kinds of outdoor winter games are comically presented. This is a book for anyone, child or grown-up, who is possessed by the rare twin gifts of humour and art. The coloured illustrations are attached on one side only and can be easily removed and framed. Excellent for a man's den, or a boy's room.

We shall make a point for the future of reading everything that Rosamond Napier writes. Few of us who have passed out of the Golden Age but would like to return to it for an hour if we could. In Letters to Patty, Miss Napier takes us back again. The motto of the book is from Balzac. "The heart of a sister is a diamond of greatest purity, an abyss of tenderness." When the bond is close, I know of no love more tender, sweet and holy than that between sisters. If, like the writer—you have a sister whom you love in this fashion, or have lost—like the writer—a sister who seemed dearest and nearest on earth to you, you will love Letters to Patty. It is an enchanting remembrance of childish days, told when a sweetness and purity and simplicity that are a delight. It is only the little story—recounted in mature years when one of the sisters is on the borderland between this world and that other—of the scrapes and mishaps which befel two small girls, but it is a masterpiece of Little Toucher.

A book you can hardly afford to be without is Arnold Bennett's The Feast of St. Friend. It is a charming philosophy of Christmas, good resolutions, and the New Year. Everyone knows Arnold Bennett, that amazing genius, the English Balzac, who can give you in a detail that holds your interest to the full stop, every item of a woman's toilette down to the very smallest pin, and in a moment whirl you to heights of Shakespearian tragedy. There is no one in living literature like Arnold Bennett. He can write everything together just as the one-man-band plays every instrument. He is the one-man-band of English literature, and in this book he is here with an essay on Christmas quite different to anything any one has said before. Practical, you know how practical he can be! And yet he leaves you with all your Christmas ideas refreshed and invigorated. He will not permit any sour old pessimist to say the bottom is knocked out of Christmas, or rather, he may permit him to say it but he proves that it isn't so in the very next paragraph, for, as he says, no matter what faith we have lost, what enthusiasm, or sentimentality, or spontaneity "the great principles, spiritual and moral, remain absolutely intact," in other words mankind can only succeed in living with dignity amid "hostile nature by the exercise of faith and of that mutual good will which is based on sincerity and charity." And what else, may we ask, is Christmas based on? The book is handsomely bound in green and gold and is moderate in price. These hints on books are the outcome of letters from correspondents enquiring along literary lines. A few more may be noticed next week.

One reason why they rotten-egged the Irish players in New York the other day is because your Irish-American has not the romance, the spirituality, and the poetic spirit of his forefathers. Such qualities do not emigrate. What would appeal to a Dublin audience would make no appeal in New York. In the latter city the local knowledge necessary to give dramatic satire its point is wanting. It is wanting also in London. Irish plays of the sort such as Cathleen-ni-Houlahan and The Laying of Foundations, likely also, The Playboy of the Western World, are subtle, mystic, shadowy things, ghosts of fair romance, of beauty and simple things. They are also too literary, too dependent on the accidental beauties of thought and phrasing. Many would find them slow; intolerably dull. I should not like to be one of the players presenting Cathleen-ni-Houlahan to a New York audience, but I would, were the play given in certain south and west of Ireland towns that I know. It was not the killing of his father which excited New York's anger against the Playboy, because that father was never, it seems, really killed. It was that the audience expected either a blood and thunder political play filled with execrations against England; or one of the old rollicking Mickey Free sort. A poetic play, or an Irish satire, quiet, classic, subtle, such an audience could not understand. As I said before the poetry and mysticism and inner fires of a race do not emigrate; or if they do they are obliterated in the next generation.

THE DANDRUFF GERM

And the Guinea Pig

When Drs. Lasser and Bishop made a pomade by mixing scales of dandruff and vaseline, which they afterwards rubbed on a guinea pig, they were contributing to science more than they knew. The application of the salve caused the pig to lose its hair and become bald.

This was merely one of the preliminary steps which made possible the discovery of Newbro's Herpicide. After establishing beyond question the existence of the dandruff germ, a remedy was needed to kill this parasite.

There was nothing which would do this until Newbro's Herpicide was placed upon the market. Being the first recognized remedy for dandruff, it has long been called the "original remedy". Herpicide kills the germ, prevents falling hair and stops itching of the scalp. Don't take a substitute; you can always get the genuine article.

One dollar size bottles are guaranteed.

Send 10c in postage or silver for sample and booklet to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit Mich.

NOTE AND COMMENT

The following address, which has just been issued by the Rock Island Railroad to its employees, makes good reading for everyone:

"Courtesy leaves a fine flavour—discourtesy a bitter taste. Courtesy makes friends and friends make business.

"If you must fight with someone, join the army. The railroad service is not a training school for competitiveness. The men at the top are uniformly courteous. Are you headed that way?

"Courtesy is not a veneer covering a bad disposition. It must be genuine and pinetrate to the heart to be effective. Good temper is an asset to a railroad, as witness the following advice:

"Every time you lose your temper you do two things: You lose a patron for the company and you injure your digestion. One is as necessary to the company as the other is to you.

"Complaints cost more and multiply correspondence — correspondence means postage, and postage costs money. We have to haul a ton of freight two miles and a half in order to pay for one 2-cent postage stamp.

The only things railroads have to offer in exchange for business are service and personality. Personality in this connection means courteous treatment and affability.

"Courtesy always pays dividends. These dividends may not come back in the form of dollars and cents, but they most certainly insure to your and the company's credit."

If you are troubled with chronic constipation, the mild and gentle effect of Chamberlain's Tablets makes them especially suited to your case. For sale by all dealers.

TOWING LOCOMOTIVES

The Isthmian Canal Commission will soon advertise for bids for an experimental towing locomotive for towing steamers through the locks of the Panama Canal. Should this machine be successful, says the Scientific American, bids will be asked for 39 more. Four locomotives will be used for each vessel, one on each bow and one on each quarter. The locomotives will run on rack railways, and they will be sufficiently powerful to hold the largest vessel in absolute control. —Exchange.

INTERESTING STORY OF THE PIONEER CANADIAN WOMEN

Semi-monthly Meeting of St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society Last Night Was a Great Success.

THREE SPLENDID PAPERS

The continued increase in the attendance at the lectures delivered at the meetings of the St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society in the St. Alphonsus' Lyceum is evidence of their success.

Those who attended last evening's meeting could not fail to appreciate the work of the Society in this direction. Three young ladies of the parish each undertook to write a paper on the life of a prominent woman in the pioneer days of Canada. This task, which was by no means an easy one, was ably accomplished in each case, the papers were interesting, well written and well delivered, and great credit is due those who prepared them.

Mary of the Incarnation.

The first paper was read by Miss Gertrude Clancy and was entitled "Mary of the Incarnation."

It was at the early age of eighteen years, proceeded the reader, that Mary Gerard, principally in obedience to her parents wishes, became married. Two years later, however, her young husband passed away, leaving her in poverty. She entered a cloister in Jan 25th, 1851, but realizing that she must assist in the conversion of pagan nations, came to Canada and formed a convent. This convent was ultimately destroyed by fire, but nothing daunted Mary of the Incarnation, as she was now called, founded the convent known to-day as the Ursuline Convent of Quebec.

Margaret Bourgois.

Margaret Bourgois was the subject of Miss May Grady's paper, a synopsis of which is here given.

Margaret Bourgois, on the death of her husband after four years of married life, left Normandy, her native land, to take up work in Canada among the Indians. It was in a tent that this famous woman founded the congregation of Notre Dame. Like Mary of the Incarnation, Margaret's progress was also marred by a disastrous fire, but this occasioned the building of a chapel in Montreal in honour of "The Blessed Mother of God." The end of Margaret Bourgois was a splendid one. In 1699 one of the Sisters fell ill, and Margaret prayed that she might be allowed to bear the sickness in the Sister's stead. Instantly the symptoms of the disease left the sick person and simultaneously Margaret Bourgois was seized with a mortal sickness, which occasioned the end of a strenuous and devoted career.

Jane Nance.

Miss Teresa McNamara chose for her subject the life of Jane Nance, of which the following is a brief account.

Jane Nance, too, left her home in France to assist in the service of God in Canada. The occasion of her becoming afflicted with a withered arm caused her to return to France where, by her prayers, she regained the use of her arm. She returned to Canada and founded the Hotel Dieu Hospital in Montreal. Jane Nance died at the age of seventy-two years, thirty-three of which she had spent in Canada.

The papers were interspersed by a piano duet ably rendered by the Misses Hurley and Delaire, and a creditable solo by Mr. E. Hanrahan.

STILL SINGING THEIR PRAISES

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS DOING GREAT WORK IN SASKATCHEWAN.

Mrs. Emel Carlson tells how quickly and completely they cured her Kidney Trouble.

Colonsay, Sask., Dec. 15.—(Special.)—No remedy has done as much for the wheat growers of Saskatchewan as Dodd's Kidney Pills. They occupy a place in the family medicine chest on nearly every farm, and every day brings fresh evidence of the great work they are doing. One of the latest to sing their praises in this neighbourhood is Mrs. Emel Carlson. Here is what she is telling her many friends:

"For about two years I was sorely troubled with Kidney Disease brought on by a strain. My heart bothered me. My sleep was broken and unrefreshing and I was always tired and nervous. The least exertion would cause me to perspire freely, and my perspiration had an unpleasant odour.

"Three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me. They are certainly the best medicine I ever used."

If you have any of Mrs. Carlson's symptoms your kidneys are wrong. Make them right with Dodd's Kidney Pills.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

THE shampoo lady was speaking of a period of nervous breakdown, which she underwent a few years ago.

"What caused it?" I asked.

"Well, you know," said the shampoo lady, "I would try to do so much and get overtired. I was foolish, I know, and mother tried her best to stop me, but there, I thought I had to have a hand in everything, and of course, ended by not being able to do anything."

A few days after this, we happened to be speaking of the shampoo lady and someone mentioned a time when she had brought herself to the verge of insanity, by taking care of her mother who was an invalid for years.

Inquiry proved that this was the same breakdown which she had ascribed to her own carelessness, and further revealed the fact that it was really caused by her having given herself, heart, soul, and body, to the care of the invalid mother.

Do you know, I think the shampoo lady fairly doubled the beauty of her sacrifice by the fineness of her attitude towards it?

There are a great many people in the world who are big enough to sacrifice and be praised.

There are very few people in the world big enough to sacrifice and be silent

There are many people capable of great unselfishness if they can be spurred on by praise, gratitude, and the consciousness that their friends regard them as martyrs.

There are comparatively few people capable of being thoroughly unselfish and taking as their only reward the consciousness of doing right.

And there are even fewer people capable of being thoroughly unselfish, and not even realizing that they are so.

And that is the height that the shampoo lady evidently had reached.

Undoubtedly, the conscious of itself, praised-by-the-world self-sacrifice has its reward.

In fact, it has most of that reward right now.

But somehow, maybe it's a queer notion, and yet somehow I have an idea that if there are rewards stored up for us, there is a far greater reward in store for the unconscious, unpraised self-sacrifice — greater by the addition of the recognition it did not ask on earth.

To sacrifice—
To sacrifice and be happy—
To sacrifice and be silent about it—
To sacrifice and be unconscious of it—

A BRIDGE FOR THE SOUTH

"A Ratepayer" Points Out the Necessity of Better Accomodation

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir.—I notice by the local papers that the city aldermen are very much alarmed about the Auburn bridge. How about a bridge at the C. P. R. bridge? I mean one that can be used for foot traffic. Working men who go to Matthews', C. G. E. and other south end factories, and who reside on Mark, Robinson and adjoining streets, have been warned by C. P. R. detectives to cease walking the C. P. R. bridge. Now, just look at the unnecessary walk which these men have to take, to go all the way over Hunter St. bridge to get down to South, Park, and all other south end streets; whereas, if they could have a bridge at the C. P. R. bridge it would take them about one-third of the time.

Hoping the City Aldermen have not overlooked a much-needed necessity, I remain,

Yours truly,
A Ratepayer.

SIGNS OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

In the early stages kidney troubles are known by backache and urinary disorders Later come dropsy, stone rheumatic pains, and perhaps diabetes. But don't wait for these. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you in a few hours. Their thorough action on the liver, kidneys and bowels will clear away the pains and aches and make you well again.

SIDEWALK IS NEEDED

"A Sufferer" Has Something to Say of the Conditions

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir.—Will you please allow me space in your paper to explain the want of a sidewalk on Euclid avenue, from the end of the pavement to the end of the street. At the end of the pavement is a deep creek, runnit along the north side of the road, for about two hundred feet, and on the south is a deep, muddy dike. So, in this case, where is a person going to walk? At this time, and in the spring, the middle of the road is no better than the dike. And, with a very dim light at the corner, at night, a person might easily be run over by a rig, which has the right of the road, and as a person has no place else to walk, but in the middle of it, and, if a person was hurt on this piece of road, which is very carelessly looked after, who would pay the damage? Likewise, I might mention that if a person does scramble to one side, they are sure of getting their clothes all spattered up with mud.

Now, the people on this street would be satisfied with any kind of a walk, dry and safe.

Thanking you for your space, I remain,

Sincerely yours,
A Sufferer.

Navigation Still Open

The 'Geneva' arrived at Peterboro this morning. The running of the Navigation Co's. regular trips so late in the season is almost a record for Peterborough. The record was broken once, forty years ago, when an excursion down the river, on New Year's Day, was enjoyed. However, with that exception, it is not remembered that steamers have ever been enabled to run on the Otonabee only one week, prior to Christmas Day.

Andra At Golf.—Andra is reported to have said on one occasion: "I canna thole thae strokes; gie me a mon tae play against." And it will be remembered that it was he who, having lost to Willie Park in playing off the tie for the championship in 1889, challenged the victor to a holes match over four greens a couple of years later and beat him by 8 and 7.

57th REGIMENTAL CONCERT

Members and friends of the 57th Regiment are requested to keep next Tuesday night clear. The weekly regimental concert will be held in the Armoury, but next week's concert is going to be an unusually good one. The feature of the evening will be two performances by the Y. M. C. A. boys. Several attractions are being arranged for, and a most enjoyable evening is promised. Everybody is welcome. The concerts, so far, have all been a decided success, and it is the intention of the officers to see that they will continue to be a success. The officers cannot do this alone, however, and it rests with the members to do their share in assisting to boost the Regiment and any functions that may be undertaken. A hearty welcome is extended to all the members and their friends. The concerts are not merely for the officers of the regiment, but for all, and to all a cordial invitation is extended for next Tuesday night.

Th eImportance Of The Boys' Conference At Orillia

Would you like to become an expert in the business of building boyhood? Are you anxious that the boys of your Sunday school should have all the advantages that modern investigation and study can supply? As a citizen of Peterborough, is it of any advantage to you that the boys of the city should have every opportunity to make good? You should be interested, then, in the Conference at Orillia on the last three days of this year.

It will be a gathering of young men and boys who are interested in the future of Canada. We are being blessed with material prosperity, let us keep the heart of our country pure. The period of adolescence is the habit-forming period. Science has revealed the fact that we can do anything with a boy. We can make him what we choose. Like moulding moist clay, we can shape and reshape his character. And like clay, his character soon hardens. This conference will study the how of boy-moulding.

Some of the most successful workers with boys on the continent have been secured for this conference. They will reveal the secrets of their success. They are men whom you have often heard about and wished you might meet.

Albert E. Roberts will be there and give his great lecture, "A Challenge to Leadership." One of the boy workers said that he would not take one hundred dollars and miss it.

H. G. Hammond will tell "How the Scout Movement Can Co-operate With the Sunday School." Hammond is the Ontario General Secretary of the Canadian Boy Scouts. No man knows as much as he does of the Boy Scout movement.

Then there will be Mr. Halpenny, well known to the Sunday school workers of this district, R. G. Dingman of Toronto, J. P. Hagerman, Frank Yeigh, George A. Warburton, and F. A. Crosby, who is City Boys Work Director of the Young Men's Christian Associations of Chicago.

Each Sunday school in Peterborough is entitled to two delegates. They will have to pay their railroad fare, but will be entertained by the citizens of Orillia.

ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY HELD VERY ENJOYABLE CONCERT

The second concert of the season of St. George's Society was held last night in the Sons of England hall on Hunter street, when a very large crowd attended. The programme was a splendid one, and provided a most enjoyable evening. Mr. Guy, President of the Society, presided very acceptably as chairman, and at the beginning of the evening's proceedings, made a neat, welcoming speech, in which he extended a hearty welcome to all, and wished them an enjoyable evening—a wish which was fulfilled to the full extent.

The programme was a splendid one. The numbers were as follows:

Pianoforte solo—Mr. Trencer.
Selection by the Manchester Quartette, the members of which are: Mrs. Bert Read, soprano; Mrs. W. Read, contralto; Mr. Bert Read, tenor; Mr. Phil. Brown, bass.
Song, Mrs. B. Read.
Humorous song, Mr. Thompson.
Conjuring tricks—Mr. Carte.
Song—Mr. Harold Lee.
Mr. Fred Cole, ventriloquist.
Song, Mrs. W. Read.
Recitation, Mr. Johns.
Selection by the Manchester Quartette.
Humorous song, Mr. Thompson.
Song, Mr. Phil. Brown.
Maple Leaf Quartette.

At the close of the programme, dainty refreshments were served, and the proceedings took the form of a social gathering.

A collection was taken during the evening, which will be used for a Christmas tree for the poor English children of the city, which will be held in the S. O. E. hall about Christmas. The collection amounted to $24.32.

After refreshments had been served, a pleasant evening was concluded by the singing of the National Anthem.

A concert and dinner will be held in the S. O. E. Hall on Christmas night, which promises to be a success. Tickets for same may be had at Mr. Kelsey's residence, 93 Robinson street.

IMPORTANT DECISION IN CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CASE

COLUMBUS, O., DEC. 15.—After a trial which consumed two days, Mrs. Eva Earl, a Christian Science practitioner of Columbus, was acquitted of the charge of violating the medical practice act of the state. Ohio has a statute which as interpreted by the supreme court of the state makes the practise of Christian Science healing without a license a crime where a fee is charged or accepted.

Mrs. Earl was arrested for the alleged violation of the state law on complaint of Dr. Watson, the secretary of the state medical board.

The trial took place in the police court before Judge Osborne. The state was represented by City Solicitor Kerr and Clarence Laughlin, and Charles Follette, assistants to the attorney-general, while the defence was looked after by Judge David F. Pugh and Attorney William K. Williams, leading members of Ohio's bar. The jury was composed of some of the best citizens of Columbus.

The case on both sides was ably presented. The state contended that Christian Science practise was by the law a practise of medicine and that the acceptance of compensation rendered the practitioner liable to penalty. The defence claimed, in the face of the statutes and the supreme court decision, that Christian Science practise was not medical practise, but the practise of religion.

Under the rules of evidence it was impossible to offer the testimony of men and women who were present and eager to tell of the healings experienced by them through Christian Science. Consequently the proceedings consisted largely of a discussion of the dominant features of Christian Science.

Counsel for the defence declared that an attempt to separate religious practise in this instance from a religion and to bring it within the domain of medicine and further to render one who engages therein a criminal on the acceptance of a gratuity was not reasonable.

The judge was fair and impartial in his rulings. The jury deliberated for an hour and a half and then reported a verdict of acquittal.

ENDS INDIGESTION IN A FEW MOMENTS

Gas, Heartburn, Sourness and All Misery in Stomach Vanishes

Nothing will remain undigested or sour on your stomach if you will take a little Diapepsin occasionally. This powerful digestive and antacid, though as harmless and pleasant as candy, will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you can eat.

Eat what your stomach craves, without the slightest fear of Indigestion or that you will be bothered with sour risings, Belching Gas on Stomach, Heartburn, Headaches from stomach, Nausea, Bad Breath, Water Brash or a feeling like you had swal-suffering now from any stomach disagreeable miseries. Should you be suffering no wfrom any stomach disorder you can get relief within five minutes.

If you will get from your pharmacist a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin you could always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and your meals would taste good, because you would know there would be no Indigestion or Sleepless nights or Headache or Stomach misery all the next day; and, besides, you would not need laxatives or liver pills to keep your stomach and bowels clean and fresh. Pape's Diapepsin can be obtained from your druggist, and contains more than sufficient to thoroughly cure the worst case of Indigestion or Dyspepsia. There is nothing better for Gas on the Stomach or sour odours from the stomach or to cure a Stomach Headache.

You couldn't keep a handier or more useful article in the house.

Big Christmas Market---Poultry In Abundance

To-day's was an ideal Christmas market. The tables were magnificently adorned with first-class fowl of all kinds—turkeys, geese, chickens, ducks, and an abundance of everything. The inside market was crowded to an extent which rendered it almost impossible for the people to move around. The tables were filled, and the produce was piled around on the floor. The price of fowl did not advance very much, but a better quality was produced. The outside market was crowded with purchasers, and there was a goodly supply of everything except potatoes and apples, and, in these commodities there was a marked scarcity. Desite this fact, apples remained at the standard price—$4.50 per bbl. for spies, and 25 to 40 per pk. for other grades. Potatoes took a jump of 25 cents per bag, selling at $1.75. There was no loose hay on the market but during the week there was a good supply. The first class hay selling at $15.00, while lower grades were easier, according to quality. Baled hay sold at the usual figure, 85 cents per cwt. Small vegetables were in abundance this morning, and meats of all kinds were in great quantities. As a result of this, beef took a drop of 1-2c., selling slowly this morning at 7c and 8c. Pork and lamb remained at 12 and 13c.

Inside Market.

Butter, 30c per lb.
Eggs, 40c per doz.
Turkeys, 20c. per lb.
Chickens, 75c to $1.10.
Ducks, 70c to 85c.
Geese, $1.25 to $1.50.

Outside Market.

Potatoes, $1.75.
Apples, spies, $4.50, others 25 and 40c per peck.
Cabbage, 3 for 10c.
Carrots, 20c.
Onions, 30c.
Beets, 20c.
Turnips, 15c peck.
Beef, 7c and 8c.
Lamb, 12 and 13c.
Pork, 12 and 13c.
Little pigs, $8.00 per pair.
Squash, 10c.
Pumpkins, 5c and 10c.
Radish, 5c per qt.
Baled hay, $15.00.
Farmers hides, 9c.
Butchers' hides, 10c.
Live hogs, $8.25.
Dressed hogs, $8.25.

WERE ENTERTAINED

A very enjoyable time was spent last evening in the lecture room of George Street Methodist Church, when Mr. Switzer's Adult Bible Class entertained the members of the choir, orchestra, and a number of the other Bible classes. An excellent programme was rendered, and was highly appreciated, as was evidenced by the hearty applause given. Special mention should be made of the trio, "Spanish Fantasia". In this number Misses Beach and Picard presided at the piano, while Mr. Robert Beach delighted the audience with his handling of the drum, tambourine and castanets.

At the conclusion of the programme dainty refreshments were served and a very pleasant evening was brought to a close by the singing of the Doxology. Following is the programme:

Lord's Prayer, in unison.
Address—Mr. Switzer.
Selection—The Orchestra.
Trio—Messrs. Downey, Flemming, and Lee.
Solo—Master Joe Zepp.
Instrumental duet — Mrs. Cruikshanks and Miss Fife.
Quartette—Messrs. Downey, Skitch Fleming, and Lee.
Reading—Miss Froom.
Solo—Mr. Skitch.
Intermission.
Selection—The Orchestra.
Reading—Mr. Doucette.
Trio—Misses Beach, and Picard, and Mr. Robt. Beach.
Solo—Mr. Pratt.
Solo—Mr. Will Miller.
Speech—Mr. S. A. Oke.

The accompanists for the evening were Misses Clarry and Smith, and Mr. Renwick.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

(Copyright, 1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Golden Text—The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. Ps. xix: 7.

(1) Verses 1-5—What can be said for, or against, the churches in the community uniting at least once a year, in a camp meeting, with no other object but to quicken spiritual life and get sinners converted?

(2) Where was this great meeting of the Jews held, and what was its object?

(3) What answer would you make to the statement that it is the duty of the churches in the large centres to have street meetings?

(4) What results will surely follow, when all the people are eager to have the law of God read to them?

(5) How long did the first meeting last?

(6) There is a general demand for short sermons; what is this a sign of? Is it poor or uninteresting preaching, or a growing lack of spirituality on the part of the preachers or people, or what?

(7) Verses 6-7—Which is the more becoming and natural in public worship, and why, the hushed silence which generally prevails with us, or hearty and glad responses as in this case?

(8) If our public prayers were more of the "and Ezra blessed the Lord" type, out of jubilant hearts; how long would it take to get the people to respond as these worshippers did?

(9) Ezra had at least fourteen helpers, besides the Levites, to assist him in explaining the law, each no doubt having a class to himself; what resemblance is this to modern Bible classes?

(10) Why is it that there is not the same realized obligation resting upon church members to attend classes where the Bible is studied, as to attend the regular church service?

(11) Is our present method of oratorical and textual preaching a success as a teaching agency? Give your reasons.

(12) Verse 8—What agency, other than the Bible school, is there in the Christian church of which it can be said, "So they read the book.....and caused them to understand the reading"?

(13) Verses 9-11—What made the people weep so much?

(14) Why have sinners a reason to weep, when the word of God is brought home to them?

(15) When, we by the grace of God, have put ourselves in harmony with God's law, is it right for us to weep over our past sins?

(16) Why is it a duty, as well as a privilege, for us to rejoice and be glad?

(17) Is it still right for us, and why, to hold feasts and banquets, and get joy out of eating and drinking? (This is one of the question that may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

(18) Verse 12—What provision is being made to-day for feeding and clothing the poor?

(19) Verses 13-18—Is preaching or singing, or praying, or study of the Bible, in tents occasionally, likely to be more effectual than under usual circumstances?

(20) Should it, or not, and why, be the aim to have every religious meeting produce "very great gladness"?

Lesson for Sunday, Dec. 24th, 1911. Malachi Rebuking and Encouraging Judah. Mal. iii: 1-iv: 3.

Eczema Always Burning and Itching

Mr. N. Ostiguy.

Used Box of Cuticura Ointment and It Completely Disappeared.

"I have suffered from eczema for two years. The trouble began on one arm where there appeared a red spot of about a five-cent size, and it always widened, all the time itching and burning. The first days I didn't care, but seeing that it gained in size, I tried —— Ointment and —— Ointment, but both without success. It was always burning and itching. Having seen in the newspaper the advertisement of the Cuticura Remedies, I tried a little, and seeing that it improved, I bought a box of the Cuticura Ointment. After having used one box, my eczema completely disappeared. The Cuticura Ointment should be kept in every home." (Signed) N. Ostiguy, Marieville, Que., Jan. 14, 1911.

The Porcupine Market

The Porcupine Camp is now nearing the production stage, as the stamp mills will probably begin to crush the vast amount of rich ore within the next six weeks.

The recent depression in the staple stocks, such as Dome Extension, Vipond, Hollinger, Rea, Jupiter, Preston, East Dome and Crown Chartered, is not, in our estimation, warranted. We are advised the underground development on these properties to be exceeding all expectations and important announcements may be expected within a few days, which will probably cause a sharp advance.

WE STRONGLY ADVISE THE IMMEDIATE PURCHASE OF THESE STOCKS AT CURRENT PRICES.

We issue a weekly Market Letter, which contains unbiased opinions regarding the activity developed properties of both Porcupine and Cobalt, together with the latest news pertaining to actual mine conditions. Sent free on request

We will be glad to execute orders for the purchase or sale of active listed mining stocks, either for cash or on margin of 33 1-3 per cent., and will accept certificates when properly endorsed, as collateral margin against purchasers.

Old Boys Want Game Here Christmas Day

Ken. Crane, writing from Toronto, wants to arrange a game with the Peterborough Intermediates for Christmas Day, if there is any ice, for a team selected from the Peterborough Old Boys who will be home for the holidays. If it is possible it is likely that a friendly game will be arranged, and should prove very interesting. The Old Boys' team would line up about as follows:

Goal—Leo Derocher, St. Michael's College.

Point—Frank Hefferman, Ottawa College.

Cover-point—Ken Crane, Toronto.

This team would give the local Intermediates a hard battle for their money, and it would be splendid practice. Here's hoping the weatherman comes across with some ice.

HOCKEY

The new uniforms for St. Mary's Intermediate hockey team have arrived. The colours are yellow and black. The sweaters are pretty nifty, and are being much admired by the fans.—Lindsay Post.

Champion Boxers Who Are Ill

What is the matter with all the champion boxers of late? Are they more subject to the ills, especially appendicitis, than the ordinary boxer, or does it just happen to be a coincidence that several of them are laid up at about the same time? Ad Wolgast, the lightweight champion of the world, is not the only champion who has the high-toned complaint. While Ad. is recuperating at Los Angeles, Sammy Kellar, the British 110-pounder who claims the title in England, is also recovering from appendicitis in London, having been operated on just on the eve of his battle with Kid Smith, for the championship. The French champion, Marcel Moreau, was also threatened with the same complaint, and it is not long since that Dave Smith, the Australian champion, was operated on; also Les O'O'Donnell, the crack middleweight of the Antipode, and Jack Redmond, the Milwaukee lightweight, was a bit cut up, but has fully recovered. It has been fortunate for most of the boxers, however, that they have been in good physical condition at the time of being stricken down, and that has helped wonderfully to pull them through safely. And still some of the timid ones say boxing is not a good healthful exercise.

Illegal Sale Of Liquor Is The Charge

Mr. Elias Williams, License Inspector for East Peterborough, laid a charge against Arthur Northey and Albert Kennedy of Lakefield for unlawfully selling liquor. Constable Webster of Lakefield, searched the premises of the accused a few days ago and found thirty bottles of liquor in their possession. The case will be tried before Magistrate Edmison in the county police court here on Saturday next.

A Burglary At Mount Pleasant

Word has been received to-day of a burglary perpetrated in Mount Pleasant, at Mr. R. C. Graham's general store, during the night.

It is said that the robber entered the cellar, with the aid of tools, taken therefrom, cut the floor of the store and entered. On examination, this morning, it was found that besides some change, which had evidently been taken from the till, articles in the form of underwear, jack knives, etc., were missing. A neighbour, Mr. James Gall, is said to have seen a man at dawn walking along the street. He passed a "good morning," which was, however, not responded to. The matter has been placed in the hands of the police.

Two years ago the same store was broken into.

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Kidneys

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness spots before the eyes; yellow skin sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson K1810 Luck Building, Detroit Mich. and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it ,this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

"What is the use of this article?" asked a shopper. "I really don't know," replied the clerk; "I think it is intended to be sold for a Christmas present."—Harper's Magazine.

Dead In Ottawa

Word has been received in the city of the death in Ottawa of J. E. K. Harris, who has been a linotype operator on the Ottawa Citizen. The deceased, who came to Canada from Edgbaston, England, was 26 years of age. The funeral will take place on Monday.

It is thought that the only relatives of the deceased in Canada are residing in Peterborough, although the Examiner has been unable to locate them to-day. Any person who has any information in regard to the matter is asked to let the Examiner know to-night.

A NARROW ESCAPE

The last issue of the Minden Echo contains the following particulars of the burning of a home in Minden township, and the narrow escape of a little child from death:

"The burning of the dwelling and contents, the home of Mr. James Reynolds, jr., last week, carries with it the story of the almost collapse of Mrs. Reynolds in the building, where she had gone to rescue the child.

Mr. Reynolds is a son of Postmaster Reynolds, of Elsie, and his home was on the old Bradburn place east of the road, opposite Mr. H. Hobden's, in Mindentownship. It seems that on the morning of the fire Mr. Reynolds was not at home, and Mrs. Reynolds was doing the chores at the barn, when she discovered smoke issuing from the house. She rushed thither and opened the door with all speed, but could see nothing on account of the smoke which filled the room she called to her child, a lad of some two and a half years, and, hearing a groan in reply, rushed immediately in and found the child, but the door closed, and they were shut in. Life was only possible for a few moments in the awful heat and smoke. The wall of the room was burning as she, with her child in her arms, groped her way to where the door must be, and just as she was almost overcome, being badly burned already, the latch was found and the open air gained.

The child was burned so badly that little hope of its recovery was entertained, but the mother, who is a daughter of Mr. James Davis, of Elsie, is improving nicely.

Use only "Putnam's" Extractor. Sold by druggists.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The boys' conference, which is to be held in Orillia, December 29, 30 and 31, is practically a school in inspiration for boy workers, and every Sunday school and boys' club should take advantage of the opportunity they have and send representative delegates to Orillia, from a motive of mutual benefit.

Churches who sent delegates to Ottawa last year are to-day expressing their satisfaction re the results obtained, as boys who went last year obtained a grip of the situation and through the inspiration imparted to them have taken classes in hand with success.

The speakers are men with great personalities and experience; for example, A. E. Roberts, New York city, ten years' experience in boys' work, now on the International Committee; S. W. Halpenny, secretary of the Ontario Sunday School Association; F. A. Crosby, of Chicago, graduate of Springfield Training School, late secretary for Pensylvania; Mr. Frank Veigh, lecturer and Sunday School worker, well known all over Canada; Mr. H. G. Hammond, the out-standing man in the Boy Scout movement, he was in charge of the Ontario Boy Scouts at the Coronation; Mr. George Warburton, of Toronto, a phenomenal man at devising means to overcome pecuniary difficulties in boys' work; C. J. Atkinson, founder of the Broadview Institute, called the greatest boys' worker in the province; Mrs. Jean Blewitt, writer, lecturer and Sunday school worker. As she is well known to the public as a poetess she needs no introduction here. Mr. J. P. Dagerman, a Canadian, experienced in work among studnts, also in Sunday school work, is expected to be present.

DOCTOR'S BEARDS

It is a matter of much regret to me as it must also be to other deep thinkers, to find so many wasting so much valuable space in your paper in discussing such a trivial evil as the obacco habit. I desire to invite these contributors, and especially Dr. Charles G. Pease, to join the society of which I have the honour to be the head the object of which is to put down eradicate and tear out by the roots the most filthy, malignant and deadly curse of modern times, whose victims far outnumber those of war, pestilence and famine combined. It is needless to say that I refer to the frightful habit in vogue among many more or less distinguished members of the medical fraternity of wearing unsanitary, disease-carrying beards.

The deadly house fly	19,858
The bloody hatpin	1,798¼
The fragrant weed	6¼
Total	100,000

Soldiers of the common weal, join with me in this great movement for the uplift of the masses and classes, and bring joy into the innumerable homes now being decimated through the agency of that grim destroyer—the doctor's beard. Waste not your energy on the little nicotine devil, but attack something big and vital. Let the movement which I have thus modestly started grow like a snowball until the vast membership of our society shall outnumber even the countless thousands of hairs in the beard of the president of the N. S. P. L. of A. I remain, sir, a public benefactor,

P.S.—Personally, I am a moderate smoker, smoking only between meals, however, and never when asleep, and I did not acquire the habit until nearly six years of age. It never made me ill, but has stunted my growth, as I am only four inches above six feet and weigh but a paltry two hundred and fifty.—Evening Sun.

Russell Motor Cars

"Made Up to a Standard —Not Down to a Price."

"You've made it an issue—this matter of quality—but give us facts, facts about the quality of the Russell."

—said a man recently.

WILL you who select the safest road when you travel and take a Pullman for safety's sake as much as for comfort—will you buy a car that carries any element of risk?

Will you insure your life—insure your home—your store—your factory for the sake of self or family, and then risk life or limb in a car of uncertain quality?

The Russell frame—look at it. Made of best channel steel. Not brittle, but springy to ease each shock, and strong—wonderfully strong—rivetted by hydraulic power and reinforced at every joint and angle.

Russell front axle—a solid I beam section. Russell rear axle—a piece of construction that excites the admiration of every engineer who sees it.

Brakes double set, giving double security—instantly operated on drums on the rear wheels.

Safety! Is not safety something far more than a passing thought? It is. It should be first—first with every man who goes out into the market to buy a Motor Car.

Isn't a car that gives such safety, with everything else in keeping—the first car for you to consider?

Models from $2,350 to $5,000 equipped.

CHRISTMAS approaches very fast, and we have still a long way to go if we reach the goal we have laid out to attain in December, of a $25,000 output for the month. We must do it if it is within the bounds of possibility, even if the prices mean a very great loss to us.

For this reason, the GREAT RETIRING SALE will be to our patrons during the rest of December. Particular attention of course is being paid to the clearance of all Xmas goods between now & Xmas Eve, & it will pay everyone to take advantage of great price reductions in these lines.

No Goods Exchanged or on Approval. Same Courtesy as Before to Open Account Patrons.

INJURED BY SNOWBALL

An accident which might have resulted very seriously, occurred last evening on Charlotte street, about 5.30. A number of boys were throwing snowballs, and a gentleman, whose name is not to hand, who was walking past them, was either accidentally or wilfully struck in the face with one of the snowballs. Unfortunately the man was wearing glasses and these were shattered, some of the glass cutting his face badly, and one piece penetrating the skin just beneath the lower eye lash. Besides the possible injury to the eye, the spectacles were smashed to pieces. It is high time that boys who throw snowballs on the street should be punished.

PLOT IS ALLEGED

German Paper Says British Tried to Dynamite Port

NO FAITH IN GOOD-WILL

Cologne, Dec. 18.—The Rhenish Westphalian Zietung publishes a story of an alleged discovery of a plan on the part of Great Britain to blow up Wilhelmshaven. The Zietung professes to have received its information from one of the best informed officers, who said that the postal authorities, becoming suspicious of repeated money orders in favor of deck officers and chief mates, finally seized some of the letters passing through the postal department. These showed that the plans to the entrances to Wilhelmshaven war harbor, as well as plans of the water supply and the contents of the secret code book had been betrayed to the British Admiralty.

The paper points out that with such information at its command, Great Britain could blow up the entrances to the war harbor at the decisive moment, rendering the harbor utterly useless and Germany at the very beginning of war helpless to defend herself at sea. To prevent the threatened danger, The Zietung continues, a German squadron remained for weeks on patrol duty. Recent conferences between the Emperor, the Minister of Marine, the chief of the Admiralty staff, and the chief of the Marine Department, dealt with this danger.

Just a Romance.

London, Dec. 18.—The story that the British Admiralty has secured plans of the locks and water supply and the secret signal codes of Wilhelmshaven with the idea in event of war of blowing up the harbor entrances, and thus bottling up the German fleet, is regarded here as a mere romance. It is further alleged that to avoid this supposed danger, the German fleet kept for weeks to the open sea during the recent crisis. These stories are supposed to have been betrayed by German officers to the Rhenish Westphalian Zietung, which is strongly anti-British and the organ of the war material trade.

England Not Friendly.

Cologne, Dec. 18.—The Cologne Gazette's inspired Berlin despatch says yesterday, commenting on The London News' article in which Anglo-German relations are discussed: "The News correctly asserts that the desire for better relations will not be satisfied until English speeches are supported by English deeds. One could believe from reading The News that the greatest goodwill exists among the English, and that closer relations between Great Britain and Germany would be in no wise difficult.

"Unfortunately, it must be said that The News is far from expressing public opinion in England, which now, as formerly, approves the policies which can be blamed for the present situation.

"Of course," continues The Gazette, "there are some prominent Englishmen who have preserved the historic British open-mindedness towards us. Lord Charles Beresford appears to have joined these recently, but their influence is not strong enough to banish the hypnosis with which the English regard German policies and what they believe to be behind them. The conviction that Germany is threatening Great Britain with every sinister plan is so firmly rooted through years of incitement by a certain section of the press, that it would be difficult to shake off. How deep this conviction is and how it rises to blind hatred can be seen from the libels which have been uttered against Germany."

TAFT IS FIRM.

Will Abrogate Treaty, But Will Have No Insults.

Washington, Dec. 18.—The Russian treaty situation cleared materially yesterday, and the administration plans for the abrogation of the 1832 pact with the St. Petersburg Government became more definitely known. President Taft, it is said, has indicated emphatically that he would veto the Sulzer resolution instantly if it should be forced through the Senate to-day without modification. Nothing that can be construed as an offence to Russia will be permitted if the President can help it.

According to plans announced last night, Mr. Taft to-day will send two communications to the capitol, one a message addressed to the same to be considered in executive session, and the other a letter directed to Chairman Cullom of the Senate committee on foreign relations. In these communications, Mr. Taft, it is said, will outline his attitude plainly, and will call pointed attention to the fact that international relations are not lightly to be dealt with.

Despite the advice of certain of the Republican leaders of the House that the lower branch of Congress should be considered in the matter, President Taft said last night he was determined to ignore the House entirely in his further dealing with the Russian situation. Senate leaders expect to hear to-day that the President, through American Ambassador Guild at St. Petersburg, already has notified Russia of the impending abrogation of the treaty. This notice is believed to have been couched in the politest terms of diplomatic language, and to have stated that the American people had come to regard the treaty as obsolete in many of its provisions. The expiration of the treaty is fixed for Jan. 1, 1913.

Returned To Her Babe.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 18.—Reunited after a long separation, Mrs. O. H. Sang, wife of wealthy Japanese importer of New York, and her little five-year-old son, are together to-day. Behind the reunion here is an interesting story.

Five years ago "Yankee Consul" company played a one-night engagement at the International Theatre over the river. Olgo Sinclair, who was a Russain dancer with the company, was the mother of a two-weeks-old baby boy weighing scarcely three pounds. The manager refused to keep the young mother in the company unless she gave up the child. To leave the show meant starvation for both mother and child.

Harris Lumberg, who was at that time manager of the International, was appealed to by the almost distracted mother, and Mr. and Mrs. George Land, Chippawa, were induced to take the baby boy, the mother agreeing to pay $1 a day for his keep. For a few months the money came regularly, then all trace of the mother was lost and the Lands came to look upon the dancing girl's child as their own.

A week ago Land received a letter from a firm of New York lawyers seeking information concerning the Russian dancer's child. The mother arrived Saturday afternon and saw her boy for the first time in five years.

Mrs. Sang, who will take the boy back to New York with her, refused to talk of her fortunes during the past five years.

Berlin's New High School.

Berlin, Ont., Dec. 18.—The high school, which is nearing completion at a cost of $100,000, will be formally opened by the Minister of Education, Hon. Dr. Pyne, during the first week of the New Year. The Board of Education decided to name the school Victoria, owing to its close proximity to Victoria Park and the Queen Victoria monument. It is an eight-room school and is one of the most modern in the province. It is fireproof throughout, and has every convenience for teaching.

FEAR FOR THE KING

Great Britain is Anxious Lest Harm Befall Him

HIS MAJESTY OFF HUNTING

London, Dec. 18.—Apprehension for the safety of King George in India is now voiced openly in official circles. The rumor of the King's assassination on Friday was the natural outcome of the apprehension felt in London and shows how keenly the nerves are on edge of those who realize the danger of the crisis which would be precipitated if harm came to the sovereign.

Every effort was made to persuade the King to abandon his visit, but he was obdurate in the face of evidence presented to him of Indian unrest which was not seeking an opportunity such as the royal presence would afford to demonstrate its strength. Those whose advice he did not heed now feel justified in saying "I told you so!"

An appreciation of the danger of the situation is shown by Parliament in its present treatment of the announcement of the removal of the capital from Calcutta to Delhi and the readjustment of the boundaries of Bengal and Assam. It was a stroke of genius for the Ministry to induce the King to make the announcement. This fact in a measure stifled criticism on account of the desire not to reflect on the King-Emperor. But the main consideration causing the present reticence is that which was implied by Bonar Law, the leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, when he said that it would be dangerous to the King's safety to agitate the subject while royalty is in India. The first bitter outburst of the Marquis of Lansdowne and Lord Curzon, both of whom were former viceroys, were frowned upon in the press and elsewhere, and there is evidence that the would-be critics of the Indian changes will remain silent until the King has started for England.

While the reports that the burning of the durbar tents was caused by incendiaries have been discountenanced by the press, the belief is widespread that the fires were purposely set as a protest against British rule. The Ministry will breathe a sigh of relief when the Indian excursion passes into history.

Hunting In Nepal.

Delhi, India, Dec. 18.—King George, who Saturday left for Nepal on a shooting expedition, was notified before his departure of the death of Maharajah of Nepal, Shamsher Jang Bahadur, on Dec. 11. Before his death the maharajah expressed the wish that his illness would not interfere with the King-Emperor's visit. The succession of his son, Hair, has been announced and the mourning ceremonies will be hastened. The King decided to fulfil his engagement.

Earthquake In Mexico.

Mexico City, Dec. 18.—Mexico was rocked from ocean to ocean and from Guanajuato on the north to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec on the south by an earthquake yesteredy. One old woman was so badly injured in a falling hut that she may die. Mrs. Dora Chenoweth, wife of an American dentist, succumbed to heart trouble aggravated by the shock.

The disturbance was most severely felt in the State of Guerrero, especially in Chipancingo, the movement was much greater. A few flimsy buildings were thrown down.

The quake caused a panic here. Hundreds rushed terrified to the Zocalo, where they ran aimlessly about or fell on their knees in prayer.

Telegraph and telephone wires were snapped and for a time the city was without light and electric power.

The first shock was felt at 12.40 and continued for a few seconds more than two minutes. The instruments registered an oscillatory movement from southwest to northeast. Two slight tremors were recorded at 2.16 and 8.13 p.m.

Lloyd-George Wounded.

London, Dec. 18.—David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, was seriously injured while leaving a Women's Liberal meeting here on Saturday evening, at which he had just made an address. A male suffragist hurled a brassbound box at the Chancellor, which struck him full in the face, cutting his lip and badly injuring his eye. A doctor who attended the Chancellor's injuries, said that he had a narrow escape from losing the eye.

Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Lloyd-George both addressed the meeting in favor of including female franchise in the Government's suffrage bill next year. The police had taken extraordinary precautions to exclude militant suffragists from the meeting, but evidently some of them forced their way through the barrier.

Strikebreaker Shot Dead.

Houston, Tex., Dec. 18.—The third killing during the strike of Harriman line shopmen here occurred yesterdey, when Thomas C. Lyons, a carpenter, was shot dead in the Southern Pacific Railroad yards. Lyons came here from Kansas City.

The assassin has not been identified and no arrests have been made.

Building Permits In Galt.

Galt, Dec. 18.—This year was the first that a building permit bylaw has been in force in this town, and it has worked out very satisfactorily. The town engineer's report shows that 267 permit swere granted, representing a sum of $283,334 spent in buildings in Galt this year.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Daniel Murphy, for fifteen years mayor of Carillon, Que., died yesterday of a cold contracted in driving to Lachute. He was a well-known Conservative in Argenteuil.

A settlement has been effected between Nat Goodwin and Edna Goodrich, his ex-wife, by which the actress receives $115,000 in cash and real estate to the value of $500,000.

Nathaniel Towles, a negro, alleged to have slashed the throat of Miss Iva O'Connell, a telephone operator, was trailed and caught by the aid of bloodhounds at Lafayette, Ind., last night.

Announcement was made yesterday of the fusion of the Union Castle Line, the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., and the Elder-Dempster Line, making a combined total of 181 vessels, of 738,000 tonnage.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux was the guest of honor Saturday evening at the Montreal Reform Club, and most of the stalwarts of the party were present to meet the federal party leader in the District of Montreal.

The Persian Minister at Paris has informed the Foreign Office at Teheran that the attitude of the Russian Foreign Minister leads to the belief that a conciliatory solution of the Russo-Persian question is highly probable.

B. B. Clark, former manager of a branch of the Bank of New Brunswick at St. John, who was arrested in New York in connection with certain bank transactions, was yesterday committed for trial at the County Court next month.

Alfred Vanderbilt Weds.

London, Dec. 18.—Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim, formerly Miss Margaret Emerson of Baltimore, were married at Reigate at one o'clock yesterday afternoon, the banns having been announced in the customary manner.

The couple have gone on a motor wedding trip. It is said at the Vanderbilt apartmnets in London to-day that their destination was not known.

"Trusty" Makes Escape.

Ottawa, Dec. 18.—Felix Gagne of Montreal, a prisoner serving a sentence of two months in Hull Jail, escaped from that institution on Saturday evening, and, despite rigorous search, has not yet been recaptured. He was a "trusty" and working in the cellar at the furnace. There was a loose bar to the 18-inch window and while the jailer went upstairs he got through and escaped.

POWERS TO STEP IN

They Will Interfere to Stop Troubles in China

OFFER TO MEDIATE FIRST

Tokio, Dec. 18.—It is unofficially stated that Japan and Great Britain have offered, or are about to offer, to mediate between the Chinese Government and the rebels, and will adopt further measures if this is refused. The newspaper Yoroazu says Japan on Dec. 11 notified China of her intnetion to make such an offer and said an agreement had been made with Great Britain by which the two Governments would act in concert in the matter. Mr. Ijuin, the Japanese Minister at Pekin, was notified of this action on Dec. 16, and it is understood that he forthwith informed Premier Yuan Shi Kai and the rebel leaders at Shanghai that Japan and England were instructing their respective consuls-general at Shanghai to offer to mediate.

The Ji-Ji Shimpo adds to the above that if the terms suggested by Japan and England are refused they will take decisive measures.

The Foreign Office refuses to confirm or deny the story, but says its publication was not authorized. It adds that it is impossible to make a statement now owing to pending negotiations.

Some action of this sort has been expected for several days. Japan recently sent councillor of the Foreign Office Matsui, who was at one time Charge d'Affaires at Washington, to Pekin, where he has held frequent conferences with Premier Yuan Shi Kai. It is reported that Sir John Newell Jordan, the British Minister at Pekin, left for Shanghai on Dec. 16.

A despatch from Shanghai reports that Japan and England have notified the revolutionists that they are prepared to guarantee certain terms of peace.

New Election Demanded.

Oshawa, Dec. 18.—There is a movement on foot to demand another provincial election in South Ontario, because of alleged mistakes on the part of Crown Attorney Farewell in issuing the voters' lists and giving instructions to deputy returning officers.

It is stated that Col. Farewell did not act under the revised statutes in handling the lists, but under the old provisions of the law, that there were some errors in the polling books and instructions given D. R. O.'s were vague, and that the returns from the polling books were not systematically handled.

Two Nearly Suffocated.

Port Hope, Dec. 18.—Fire was discovered at about 1 o'clock yesterday morning in the lockup of the Town Hall, where a commercial traveler, for being drunk and disorderly, and also a young man, charged with stealing a horse, were confined. Constable Chester and family, who live in the building, were aroused by the shouts of prisoners and liberated them just in the nick of time, as they were almost overcome by the smoke. The fire was extinguished after it had done a few hundred dollars' worth of damage, and thus the town hall was saved. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

Royalty Will Enjoy Winter.

Montreal, Dec. 18—That Their Royal Highnesses intend to enjoy the Canadian winter in true Canadian fashion was made evident by some purchases made by Captain Buller, A.D.C., before the departure of the royal party. He visited a well-known sporting goods establishment and purchased toboggans, skis, snowshoes, etc., ordering the store authorities to send them to Rideau Hall.

U. S. Financing for Nicaragua.

San Juan Del Sur, Nicaragua, Dec. 18.—The Nicaraguan Finance Minister has handed over the custom houses to the American financial adviser of the Nicaraguan Government, Ernest H. Wands. This action is taken in connection with the readjustment of Nicaragua's finances, which is to be carried out with the aid of the American Government, and with the loans which are forthcoming from American bankers.

A Costly Fire.

Hudson, N.Y., Dec. 18.—Fire starting at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the large storehouse of the New York and Hudson Steamboat Co. here burned that building and its contents, spread to the Washburn ice house, which was also destroyed, and to the Hudson Wholesale Grocery Co.'s building, all but one end of which was saved. The total loss is estimated at more than $200,000.

Pioneer Steel Man Dead.

Pittsburg, Dec. 18.—Thomas Noble Miller, aged 76, merchant, manufacturer, railroad operator, inventor and pioneer steel man, died here Saturday, after a two-day's illness, from pneumonia. Mr. Miller in his youth was engaged with Andrew Carnegie and Henry Phipps in the steel industry. He is the last of his family.

THREE WOMEN AND A BONNET

(Short Story.)

"I shall have an Easter bonnet this year that will make Em Gassoway turn quite pale," said Miranda, decidedly.

"And so shall I," said Miss Camilla, less decidedly.

Her sister whirled about. "Nonsense," she said, scornfully. "I am the head of this family, and the head of the family is the one to wear the new bonnet!"

Her speech was a trifle ambiguous, but the meaning was clear. Miss Miranda seldom mentioned her numerous years; when she did she meant to take advantage of every one of them.

"It's no use," said Camilla to herself. "If she intends to have a new bonnet she will—and we must diet for it. I shan't tell Luke about it yet," she added.

And she knew of what she spoke, for genteel poverty was the family fate, and Miss Miranda was a housewife who made one egg do duty for three, and who had difficulty in finding either the butcher or his assistant at leisure to wait upon her when she happened to do her own marketing. She was a morsel of a woman with a will of steel, and mild blue eyes which made people who did not know her fancy that she was easily imposed on—until they tried it. The wiry hair was always decorously curled, her own sister knew not how, but sundry twisted bits of paper, found in sweeping, caused her to draw her own conclusions.

It was the second Sunday in Lent before the ostensible head of the family knew what was before him. He was seated at the breakfast table, and, glancing at the dish before him, he said, in a coaxing tone:

"Don't you think, 'Randy, that liver and bacon sort of pall on the appetite after you have eaten them for eleven consecutive mornings?"

"Luke Harrison," cried his elder sister, "you have no appetite, and now that I notice it, you look sallow, too. Go right upstairs to bed and pile on plenty of covers, while I mix you a good hot dose of Grandma Todd's tea. Luckily I have all the ingredients at hand."

Luke hesitated, looked into her eye, and—helped himself for the second time to liver and bacon.

"What is it this time, Camilla?" he whispered, after Miss Miranda had gone to dress for church. "Is it home missions or a plush album for the parlour?"

"Worse. An Easter bonnet," she returned, dolefully. Then, turning on her ally, she added: "It's because of Em Gassoway's bragging, too. And why Em Gassoway comes here so often is for you to know!" which was especially unfair, since Luke—timid bachelor!—took to the hayloft at sound of the buxom widow's voice. Miss Camilla's heat was excusable, however; she dearly loved the pleasures of the table, her favourite reading being the richest recipes in the cookery book, and her culinary path was now a rough one.

"How lucky a grocer's wife is!" she soliloquised, not being, perhaps, conversant with a certain proverb concerning the feet of shoemakers' wives. "To think of being able to try all the recipes in the cookery book!" She stopped, crimson, for Job Carter, widower, owned a flourishing grocery.

"Goodness, Camilla," cried her sister, entering suddenly, "what makes your face so red? Truly, you eat too much. I must look closely to your diet after this. I think I shall have pink roses in my bonnet—lace, too, maybe," she added, with irrelevance which was only apparent. Glancing out of the window as she spoke, she saw Job Carter on his way to church. She was Spartan, but she was human. Job had called ostensibly on Luke once or twice lately. She went hastily out, without looking to see how much of yesterday's roast remained for dinner.

Next day she pored over a fashion book. "Not that I care for them as Em does," she said. "'Tisn't right to spend a lot of money for clothes—unless it is money earned by self-denial. What are you muttering about Camilla?"

"I—I was only saying that I think it's hard to save and save without—I do want an Easter bonnet, too, Miranda!"

"Sit right down, Camilla, while I mix you a dose of Grandma Todd's tea. Your face is as red as an apple, and you are quite feverish."

"I don't want any tea, and I do want an Easter bonnet!" wailed Camilla, feeling that she, asking bread, had received a stone; but she spoke to deaf ears.

Easter drew near, and Miss Miranda's hoard, left in one of Job Carter's boxes, grew apace. The butcher's boy and the grocer's assistant almost forgot the way to the house, but neither Luke nor Camilla dared complain. They knew that a bottle of Grandma Todd's tea stood ready in the cupboard.

Miss Miranda gloated over her prospective purchase, warming towards Em Gassoway, who had reminded her that her old bonnet was a head covering, not a decoration. One agonizing thought, however, poisoned her mind. Which of the two milliners should she patronize?

"If I go to Em's milliner she'll likely see it before, and not be surprised on Easter. If I go to the other one she'll maybe say it was old-fashioned."

The bonnet was purchased, however, and came home in good time, and not even a more substantial tea than usual prevented the iron from entering Camilla's soul.

Fate, however, is prone to trip us by the heels, and so it tripped Miss Miranda on the Thursday before Easter, as she was coming downstairs in the dusk, after a peep at her new bonnet, hidden in the "spare room" closet. And the instrument of fate was her sister's "Dutch blue" apron, dropped by her in a guilty flight after an unauthorized glimpse at the same object of art.

The result was a sprained ankle, a sprain of such gravity that Luke and Camilla, though conscious that by incurring a bill they cut the ground from under their feet, sent hastily for the doctor.

"Remember, doctor, that I must go to church at Easter," groaned the patient.

"Yes, yes," replied the doctor, soothingly. But he told Camilla downstairs that a sofa and arnica must be her sister's portion for weeks. "But on no account allow her to fret,' he added. A remark which caused poor Camilla's opinion of masculine wisdom to go down several and a reluctantly resigned. "I can go to church in a Sunday or two," she said. "By that time Em's bonnet will be an old story. You go to-day, Camilla, and during the sermon mark Em's bonnet well."

Miss Camilla protested weakly that she had "nothing fit to wear." Her sister replied firmly: "You need fresh air, or else a dose of Grandma Todd's tea." Of course Camilla yielded.

"Be sure to tell me just how it's trimmed," she called after her, "for here I am at the back of the house, not even able to see Em go by!" At these words a guilty thought flashed into Camilla's mind. Half an hour later she peeped through the shutters of the "spare room," and saw Job Carter at the door.

"I know it's me that makes him look so red if he looks this way," she mused. "If I only had a pretty bonnet to wear to-day I know I could muster courage to ask him if sugar's gone up, or something like that."

These cogitations must have made her late, for she merely called goodbye, without entering her sister's room, and evidently failed to hear a request to bring the new bonnet in to keep Miss Miranda company. On her return, it seemed to the invalid that she delayed long in taking off her wraps, while her description of Em's bonnet was of the vaguest.

"I suppose Job Carter was more interesting than a mere bonnet," remarked Miss Miranda, scornfully.

And Camilla replied almost boldly: "He walked home with me, anyhow, and he's coming to take me to Wednesday prayer meeting."

While Camilla was preparing a lavish tea for Luke, Em Gassoway came in. "Don't mind me," she said, "I know the way upstairs. I'll run up and tell Miranda what people wore at church to-day. What's the matter—got a chill?" For Camilla's teeth chattered.

"That was a gay bonnet Camilla wore to church to-day," she remarked, after her own bonnet had been duly admired by the complacent Miss Miranda. "I can't say, though, that pink roses became her. Mercy, Camilla you startled me, coming in like a ghost—you look like one, too!"

"What's that about pink roses? No, Camilla, I'm not talking too much. Go right and get my new bonnet. No, I'm not feverish, and another time won't do as well! Now, hold the light while I show it. There, Em! Did you ever see one like it? Look out Camilla, you'll drop that lamp!"

"Never until to-day," Em replied, demurely. "Why did you have them alike, girls?"

With a gasp, Miss Miranda held her treasure closer to the light. There, clear to her scrutinizing gaze, were two tiny perforations made by unauthorized bonnet pins!

Crippled With Sore Back

Kidneys Were Badly Diseased and She Didn't Know It

Was Completely Cured by Less Than Three Boxes of

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Women are very often deceived and mistaken in regard ot kidney disease. The pains in the back are attributed to other derangements, and kidney disease is allowed to run on and on until beyond the reach of medical science.

There is needless suffering, and life itself is risked, because backache is not recognized as the most marked symptom of kidney disease.

There is no treatment which so quickly relieves and cures kidney pains in the back as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. As proof of this read Mrs. Patterson's letter:

Mrs. Richard Patterson, Haldimand, Gaspe Co., Que., writes: "I will gladly say that I was cured of kidney trouble by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. When I began using this medicine I was crippled with sore back and did not know what was the trouble. In looking over Dr. Chase's Almanac I saw Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills advertised and decided to try them.

"I had not used two boxes before my back was all right, and before I had completed the third box was entirely cured. There has been no return of the old kidney trouble, and I therefore believe the cure to be permanent."

One pill a dose, 25c a box, at all dealers, or Edmandson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

NERVOUSNESS AND DYSPEPSIA

CURED BY "FRUIT-A-TIVES" THE GREAT FRUIT MEDICINE

In Nervous Dyspepsia, the Dyspepsia does not come from the Nervousness—but the latter trouble does come from the Dyspepsia.

The stomach is a network of nerves. Now if all these nerves are irritated by improper food, hasty eating, or poisoned by gases from the constipated bowels, then they will make one nervous.

"Fruit-a-tives" cures both the Nervousness and the Dyspepsia because "Fruit-a-tives" cures all stomach troubles, keeps the stomach sweet and clean, and enables you to eat and sleep as you did when a child.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers, or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

MAKE PAPER RAINCOATS

From time to time efforts are made by the Department of Agriculture to induce our paper manufacturers to profit by the Japanese paper plants that were introduced into the United States some years ago. These plants are said to thrive in this country as well as they do in Japan.

From the barks of trees and shrubs the Japanese make many varieties of paper far superior in quality to ours. The walls of the Japanese houses are wooden frames covered with thin paper that keep out the wind but let in the light. It has been pointed out that, when one compares these paper-walled doll houses with the gloomy bamboo cabins of the inhabitants of Java or with the small-windowed huts of our forefathers, he may realize that without glass and in a rainy climate these ingenious people have solved in a remarkable way the problem of lighting their dwellings, and at least in a measure of keeping out the cold.

The Department of Agriculture has obtained specimens of paper productions from Japan, and the variety of these is truly amazing. The oiled papers are durable and are said to be very cheap. As a protection for his load of tea when a rainstorm overtakes him the Japanese farmer spreads over it a tough, pliable cover of this oiled paper, which is almost as impervious to rain as a tarpaulin and as light as gossamer.

The rickshaw coolies in the large cities wear rain mantles of this oiled paper, which costs less than 18 cents, and with constant use endure for more than a year. An oiled paper tissue which is as tough as our writing paper can be had at the Japanese stationer's for wrapping up delicate articles. The shibu gami forms an unrivalled wrapping paper for tea, as it is practically impervious to atmospheric conditions. It is prepared by a tanning process, and with careful use retains its efficiency for many years. Grain and meal sacks are almost always made of this paper in Japan, for it is not easily penetrated by weevils or other insects.

Perhaps the most interesting and remarkable of the specimens gathered by the Department of Agriculture is a leather like paper of which tobacco pouches and pipe cases are made. This is almost as tough as French kid, and so transparent that one may almost see through it. A tobacco pouch made of this material alters one's notions of the characteristics of paper, for the stuff is as thick as cardboard, but as flexible as kid.

These Japanese papers are made from the inner bark of shrubs or small trees, while the papers of Europe and America are made either from wood pulp, the mascerated stems of wild grasses or cotton or linen rags. To the fact that the Japanese papers are made from bark they owe their peculiar character. They are, as a rule, softer, silkier, tougher and lighter than any product of this country in the paper line. If wet they lose their strength like tissue paper, but in drying retain it. They are usually absorbent, a fact which made them useful in surgery before modern methods were introduced.—New York Press.

LAUGHTER AND BEAUTY

A new plan of attaining or retaining beauty comes out on the average once a week and some of the suggestions are sufficiently weird, but one which appears to-day has certainly not been surpassed in strangeness.

It is simply that the person who desires to remain young should refrain from laughter. "You must," according to a lady who describes the system, "choose between looks and laughter; the two cannot go together. Laughing lines and wrinkles the face."

"There has lately sprung up in London a set of expressionless women," she added. "These women—there are from fifty to eighty of them at the moment—steadily refuse to laugh at anything. They are all, more or less, forty years old—woman's 'dangerous' age, and it is their daily belief that by refraining from laughing they are retaining their looks.

"I first met the high priestess of the cult at the last big reception at Stafford House and a few days later I went to tea with her.

"She has a beautiful but impressive face. She does more than keep her face from smiling. 'I haven't laughed for two years,' she said, with the nearest approach to joy which she permits herself. Also she avoids all manual labour and strain.

"For example, she began to pour tea, and then apparently remembering that even this might cause some expression to come into her face, suddenly stopped and ordered a man servant to do it for her. 'A woman can keep ten years off her face by avoiding doing things like that,' she explained.

"This woman and her followers have almost reduced keeping straight faces to a second nature."—London correspondent New York Times.

"Chick" Gandli, the Montreal first baseman, is very much in demand. The owners of the Royals have had a dozen offers for the player at this meeting, but, preferring not to lose him, they have placed a prohibitive price on him.

GOD'S PROMISE TO BE FULFILLED

His Kingdom on Earth to be Established, But Not by Human Power.

Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands. Dec. 17.—The International Bible Students Committee of Foreign Missions Investigation stopped at Honolulu and made observations. Pastor Russell, Chairman of the Committee, delivered a public address. He had a large audience and attentive hearing. His text was from Isaiah lxvi, 8, respecting the birth of a nation in a day. He said:

In my childhood days every penny I could save was devoted to Foreign Missions. The Hawaiian Islands and the Fiji Islands were prominent before the Christian world as missionary fields. I remember well that the establishment of a civilized government in these Islands were hailed as the fulfilment of the text I have chosen—"a nation born in a day." The thought then was that thus speedily the world would be converted and the glorious promises of the Hebrew prophets fulfilled. How earnestly we labored and prayed, "Thy Kingdom come," thinking all the while that we were bringing the Kingdom of God to earth and fulfilling the Lord's Prayer!

Alas! we are having a rude awakening from such dreams. We are finding that if the Kingdom of God must be established by human power it will never be established. We are finding that the world's population is doubling every century. If we double our missionary enterprises every century we would only be keeping pace with the natural increase of the human family. Statistics show us that there are twelve hundred millions of heathen to-day and that a century ago there were only half as many. Alas! these missionary hopes of ours have gone glimmering.

But the awakening has done us good; it has taught us to think a little. We are now sensibly inquiring, Suppose we should convert all the heathen and make the whole world a Christendom of the same sort that we have in Europe and America! What then? Would God's will be done on earth as it is done in heaven—perfectly? Could we thus hope to bring in the glorious conditions prophesied, in which not only the knowledge of God would fill the whole earth, but additionally every knee should bow and every tongue confess in such a manner as to be to the glory of God? We see that such hopes would be worse than foolish; they would be ludicrous. Thus our awakening has done us good, and sent us again to God's Book to see wherein we erred in our expectations.

The disillusion respecting great works of our own humbled us before God and made us realize our dependence upon Him for the fulfilment of the glorious prophecies. We have read our Bibles afresh. We have taken from our minds the spectacles of our forefathers with the color and gloss which they handed down to us. We are now reading God's Book in its own light, allowing God to be His own Interpreter, and Himself to make it plain. And what do we find? Ah! wonder of wonders! We find the Divine Plan wider and deeper and higher than we had ever dreamed.

We find that the present Age, from Calvary and Pentecost to the second coming of Jesus, is not God's time for dealing with the world, opening their blind eyes, unstopping their deaf ears and making every knee to bow and every tongue to confess. It is merely His time for the gathering out from every nation, people, kindred and tongue a "little flock" of such as have the hearing ear and the appreciative heart, to become the Bride of Christ and His joint-heirs in His glorious Kingdom, the establishment of which will mean the blessing of all the families of the earth, as was promised to Father Abraham.

Well may we reason that if our God waited for four thousand years before He sent His Son to redeem the world, and has since waited two thousand more for the selecting of the Bride of Christ, He must intend that the great Kingdom of His Son, the Messianic reign of a thousand years, is to do a great work for mankind in general. Such broad foundations, such deep laid plans and arrangements foretell a grand and glorious outcome. Evidently God's Word shall be fulfilled, which He spoke, saying, "My Word that goeth forth out of My mouth shall not return unto Me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it."

The message went forth in a primary sense in Eden, when God declared that eventually "the Seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head"—should crush evil. His Word went forth still more distinctly to Father Abraham, assuring him that he would have two seeds, two posterities, one "as the stars of heaven" and the other "as the sands of the seashore." The Church, with Christ her Head, constitutes this heavenly, starry Seed of Abraham, as saith the Apostle (Galatians iii, 16, 29), and with the completion of the Church will come the secondary blessing—the development of the seed of Abraham as the sand of the seashore for multitude, every knee bowing and every tongue confessing, to the glory of God.

But this secondary seed of Abraham, the earthly seed, is to receive its blessing from the Heavenly Seed, hence everything waits now until the Church shall have been completed—until the "very elect" shall have been gathered "from the four winds of heaven"—until all the followers of Jesus shall have been changed, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," as participants in the First Resurrection.

Then will glorious Day! the Sun of Righteousness will shine forth—Christ and His faithful Bride—to chase away the darkness, ignorance and superstition from the world and to fully enlighten mankind of every nation, people, kindred and tongue. In that glorious work of enlightenment the natural seed of Abraham will have a blessed share, and Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the Prophets shall be "Princes in the earth" (Psalm xlv, 16), perfect men, representatives of the glorious Messiah and His Bride in the earth, administrators of the Law, which will go forth from the glorious Christ, invisible to men.

Ah! that will be Earth's Jubilee! As in olden time, in the Jubilee year, the Israelites returned to their own possessions, to their own homesteads, so in the Antitype, only the latter will be still more grand: The human family will come back into possession of its own—that which was lost by sin and its penalty, that which was recovered by Jesus, that which will be restored by resurrection power during the Messianic reign.

But what about our text? Did we misinterpret the Divine statement when we applied it to the acceptance by the people of civilization? Ah! yes; we made a very foolish mistake; the wish was father to the thought. Our misconceptions blinded us to the proper interpretation of that Scripture. What then does it mean? How should our text be applied? Ah, Beloved, that Nation to be born in a day is the Church, the Holy Nation, of which St. Peter spoke, "Ye are a Royal Priesthood, a peculiar people, a Holy Nation." (I. Peter ii, 9.) The begetting of this Holy Nation began at Pentecost, and has continued down through the succeeding eighteen centuries and more. The birth will be the resurrection.

All who now receive the begetting of the Holy Spirit are reckoned as members of this Holy Nation, but their membership in it is dependent upon their faithfulness; as we read, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My Throne." The present life is to every one of these royal priests, or priestly kings, as we may choose to express it, a period of probation. Will we or will we not "make our calling and election sure?" Not at the beginning nor at the time of our consecration is the matter decided, but after we "have fought the good fight and finished the course" and won the crown, by obedience even unto death.

For nearly nineteen centuries these royal priests have been testifying for the Lord, each in his turn. For all the faithful there is a crown of righteousness laid up; as St. Paul said, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me at that day"—early in that day of Messiah, in the resurrection morning. All these have a part in the First Resurrection, and will be members of that Holy Nation, that royal priesthood; as we read, "Blessed and holy are all they that have part in the Chief Resurrection; on such the Second Death hath no power; but they shall be kings and priests unto God and unto Christ and shall reign with Him a thousand years.

Thus will that Holy Nation which God has been gathering and electing during the nineteen centuries, out of all nations, peoples, kindreds and tongues, from Jews and Gentiles, bond and free; be born in a day—come forth perfect and complete, the Holy Nation of Divine promise which, as God's spiritual Empire, is to take over the control of the world for a thousand years and rule it in righteousness, to free all from the power of Satan, sin and death, and to lift up again as many as are willing to the image and likeness of God, and to destroy all who love unrighteousness and work iniquity.

This is the Kingdom of Messiah, whose dominion is to be established on the earth, and for which Jesus taught us to pray, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven." It will require the entire work of a thousand years to fully accomplish all of this glorious prophecy, but we have the Divine assurance that by that time God's will will be as perfectly done on this earth as it is now done in heaven itself.

I can now well understand why your beautiful island has been described as the Paradise of the Pacific. I note your wonderful climate and everything which co-operate with it to bring about this Paradise likeness. I say to myself, How gracious is our God! Not only has He provided a heavenly Paradise for the Church, that they should be sharers with their Lord on the spirit plane, partakers of the divine nature, "far above angels, principalities and powers," but how gracious has God also been in His provision for the world at large—His promise of an earthly Paradise for such of humanity as, when brought to a knowledge of Himself and His requirements, shall gladly, heartily accept the same!

How wonderful is the Wisdom and Power of God by which He can make use of even the reign of sin and death to teach great lessons both to angels and men respecting the exceeding sinfulness of sin! And how merciful and gracious is the arrangement He has made that when this reign of sin and death shall have accomplished His intended purposes, He will bring it to an end. Those twin monarchs which have ruled the world for six thousand years—Sin and Death—shall be vanquished; and ultimately every member of Adam's race shall be delivered from their power. For the willing and obedient, the earthly Paradise, human perfection, the image of God in the flesh, is to be the reward—an earthly reward; and for the rebellious the Second Death, from which there will be no redemption, no recovery, and in which, thank God! there will be no suffering, for they shall perish like the brute beasts, as St. Peter declares.—II. Peter ii, 12.

Much as your island may resemble the Garden of Eden, it is not Paradise, and cannot be Paradise so long as you have sin and sorrow, pain and death amongst you. One of the first objects that greeted my sight as I landed was your cemetery, and I said, Oh! yes, death is here, and everywhere—God's curse, declaring that no imperfect being may live. Well, I thank God for that, too. Centuries of life with imperfection would doubtless be too much for us to enjoy. Far better is it as Divine Wisdom has arranged it—a birth, a struggle for existence, a battle with self and sin, the world, the flesh and the Devil, and then a falling asleep in death, until the morning of the resurrection. There will be no consciousness of even a moment's intervening until the glorious day shall have dawned, and the new order of things shall have been introduced and established; and then the sleepers will come forth to see a brighter side than any that they have previously experienced or ever heard of.

The Kingdom of God's dear Son and His elect Bride will be in power and nothing shall hurt or destroy in all His holy Kingdom. The blessing of the Lord shall be upon man, and his earthly dominion. Restitution influences will be at work for the bringing of everything to perfection—especially for the bringing of man up, up, up out of sin, weakness, degradation and death to the full glory of perfection of mind and body and vitality—the image and likeness of God, as at first, before sin entered.

You still have your rich and poor; there still is caste amongst the children of the one parentage; but when the unlifting influences of Messiah's reign shall have done their work, these things will all be in the past. He that sitteth upon the Throne shall say, "Behold, I make all things new!" In that glorious time there will not be rich and poor, there will be socialism in the proper sense, as the Scriptures clearly point out; they say, "Every man shall sit under his own vine and under his own fig tree; and none shall make them afraid." And again, "They shall not build and another inhabit, they shall not plant and another eat the fruit thereof." There will be no tenantry, no landlordism then.

Do not understand me to be inciting dissatisfaction with the present conditions. In many respects what we have to-day is the very best possible thing under present conditions—man's fallen nature and selfish temperament taken into consideration. The counsel of God's Word is that all who trust in Him are to wait for Him to bring in the better conditions. Some very well intentioned people are making a sad mistake; just as the morning is about to dawn—about to bring in the great blessings of restitution, socialism, etc., they blindly look in another direction and declare that unless they bring socialism to pass it will never come. We grant, indeed, that it would be foolish to expect that the rich would bring about the wonderful changes which the Bible foretells—it would be contrary to human nature to so expect. But we do say that those who think to bring about socialism by human wisdom and human strength are deficient in wisdom. They do not see that what they propose is absolutely impossible—their eyes are holden.

The Bible alone shows us what will be the outcome of the present unrest and selfishness and dissatisfaction. The Bible tells that what will start as socialism will eventually develop into anarchy. The Bible shows that those who think they can bring in the Messianic blessings by carnal weapons are deluding themselves—they will instead bring upon themselves, as well as upon the rich, the great and awful trouble which the Scriptures foretell as being now imminent—"a time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation." (Daniel xii, 1.) Our Lord Jesus quoted this passage and added to it the words, "No, nor ever shall be." (Matthew xxiv, 21.) Thank God! that this one, great, awful conflict, in which every man's hand shall be against his neighbor and against his brother, will be the last. It will be so awful as to make the entire world sick of strife, of selfishness, of sin. Thus it will act as a great plowshare in the hearts of mankind in general, to break the hard-hearted and to turn all hearts in expectation to the Lord and His glorious Kingdom.

The Money Power.

Bragg—It is positively absurd to talk about a "money power." There is no such thing.

Wagg—I'd just like to discuss that with you. Have you got a minute to spare?

Bragg—Not a minute. I've got a note due at the bank and they're bothering me to death about it.

Competition.

"You still assert that competition is the life of trade?"

"Oh, yes," replied Mr. Dustin Stax. "But we don't care to compete for a chance to sell our goods. What we want is to find people with their money out competing for the privilege of buying them."

Classified.

"John," exclaimed the inebriated printer's wife, "when you come home in that condition at this unseemly hour I hardly know what to call you."

"'At's awright, m'dear," cajoled the printer. "Jus' put me in the 'too late to classify' department."

Aspiring Vocalist—Professor, do you think I will ever be able to do anything with my voice?

Perspiring Teacher—Well, it might come in handy in case of fire or shipwreck.—Cornell Widow.

Grocer—Did that watermelon I sold you do for the whole family?

Customer—Very nearly. The doctor is calling yet.—Toledo Blade.

ITEMS OF GENERAL INTEREST

SPORTS

Carl Morris, the "Oklahoma Giant," made short work of Al. Williams of Cleveland, a few nights ago. The fight was stopped in the third round. Williams was punished severely and was helpless against the jabs dealt by Morris. The latter weighed 228 pounds, and towered over the Cleveland man, who tipped the beam at 205. Williams was bleeding freely, and in the second round went to the floor on the count. He was down twice in the third. Morris was unscarred and seemed not to feel the few blows that Williams landed. He has evidently learned something from his instructors.

CHAUCER ELLIOTT IN CHARGE OF TEAM

Chaucer Elliott was in Toronto yesterday and signed his contract to manage the Toronto professional hockey team for the coming season. Elliott will attend the N. H. A. meeting in Montreal on Saturday night to look after the interests of the Toronto club and to arrange for a trade of Odie Cleghorn, formerly of Renfrew, for "Pud" Glass, the Wanderer player. Glass will be played on the defence, if secured by Toronto. The forwards will be young and vigorous, and the old timers will be given a wide berth.

As yet the Ottawas have not signed up their players and there are rumours of some of the men jumping to the West, although Frank Patrick claimed that he would not take any of the champion team. "Dubbie" Kerr is mentioned as having received a good offer, and there is a chance that he will accept. He has held back from affixing his signature to an Ottawa contract. Percy Lesueur, Jack Darragh, and "Skene" Ronan are the only men who have been signed up as yet.

BASEBALL BREVITIES

The signed contract of Shortstop Vincent Cassani has been received by Brantford.

Pitcher "Lefty" McDonald, claimed by Hamilton and New Bedford, Mass., has been awarded by the Board of Arbitration to New Bedford.

The annual meeting of the Canadian League will be held at Hamilton to-morrow night. The Berlin franchise will be transferred but its new location is quite unsettled.

The world's series ticket scandal continues to hold the spotlight in New York. President Brush of the New York Giants, who made public his report to the National Commission on the scandal, addressed a pungent letter to Ban Johnson, asking him to explain a few things alleged to have happened to the pasteboards in Philadelphia.

Frank O'Day was the pitcher and Connie Mack the catcher on the old Washington team in 1886. O'Day later became a pitcher on the Giants. "Are you going to wear a uniform, Hank?" the new manager was asked. "Sure," he replied, "and I'll trade some players, too."

With Brooklyn and Philadelphia opposing, President Lynch was re-elected president of the National League yesterday, the losing candidate being Robert W. Brown, a Louisville newspaper man. James E. Gaffney, who decided over night to buy the Boston club, and did so, sat in the council, which also included a woman for the first time in its history—Mrs. Helen Hathaway Britton, owner of the St Louis Club.

CONVENIENCES FOR TRAVELLING

A well known shop in Piccadilly, which specializes in baggage and motor and travel requisites, has just brought out a new weatherproof luncheon case for motoring. It is handmade throughout of leather—and so built that it is absolutely dust proof and water tight. Besides the usual equipment of motor cases, there are soup plates, two large nickel vacuum jars for carrying hot food, and a silver plated tray attached to the fall front of the basket. Complete for the use of four people, it costs 13 guineas.

English people travel so much that they are never without baskets or cases which will give them food and drink at a moment's notice. The newest models, brought out especially for the autumn travels in Egypt, India and other parts of the East are the "en route" tea and luncheon baskets.

There is an extra light wicker luncheon basket built for two; a basket especially attractive for its small size, and for the fact that it is the lightest that has yet been produced for two people—10x9x7½ inches are its measurements—and yet it contains everything needful, including provision tin and drinking cups. It only costs two guineas, or £3 6s 9d if the food tins are plated inside and out; and there are silver plated cups and forks instead of steel ones.

From the English point of view a tea basket is essential, and the "en route" tea basket has the kettle so arranged that it carries the water ready for boiling in the basket just as it stands.—Vogue.

The Weak, Lame, Aching Back

Comes From The Kidneys.

Those who have never been troubled with kidney trouble do not know the suffering and misery which those afflicted undergo.

On the first sign of backache Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken immediately so as to avoid years of suffering from kidney trouble.

Mrs. Joseph Throop, Upper Point de Bute, N.B., writes:—"I cannot speak too well of Doan's Kidney Pills. For two years I was so tired life was a burden, and I got up more tired than when I went to bed, and my back was so lame I could hardly straighten up. I took different kinds of medicine, but none of them did me any good until a friend advised me to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I did so, and to-day I don't know what it is to be tired, and my lame back is all gone. I can recommend them to any person suffering with lame back and that terrible tired feeling."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

CARDS APT SYMBOLS

Inspired by a pack of cards, Father Vaughan, the noted English Jesuit, preached a remarkable little sermon. The occasion was a whist party given by the Young Men's Catholic Association of Boston College.

Father Vaughan stepped upon the platform and said: "So you are playing cards. I really don't know much about cards. I know that there are four suits—clubs, diamonds, hearts and spades. They are apt symbols, and they are used in the game of life.

"Some people play that game with clubs. They want power and take things by force.

"You are not playing for money, therefore you must be playing for love, and you use hearts.

"As a priest it is my duty to remind you that in the end spades will be trumps.

"God bless you all. Please go on with your game."

WHAT HE TOOK

Hilary K. Adair, the Western detective, was praising at a dinner in Dubuque, the generous warmth accorded by John D. Rockefeller to sheriffs, bailiffs, and other myrmidons of the law.

"They don't get treated at John D.'s," said Mr. Adair, "as old Cluss on e treated me."

"Cluss runs, you know, a saloon. I was waiting in his place one cold December night to nab a bigamist, when Cluss came out from an inner room wrapped in a heavy ulster.

"'Why, hello, Adair,' he said, shaking me warmly by the hand, 'I'm glad to see you. What'll you take?'

"'Well,' said I, 'I don't know—I'm not particular—'

"Cluss, who had been watching me anxiously, now butted in with the words:

"'Good! Slip on your overcoat, then, and we'll take a walk. I was just starting out.'"—Boston Post.

HIS CHOICE OF LANGUAGE

It was his first term at college, and his people were very anxious to know what progress he had made.

"And now," said his father, "how about language? What particular language have you decided to take up?"

"Well," responded the son and heir, hopefully, "I've thought it over very carefully, and have definitely decided to go in for Pictish."

"Pictish?" asked the puzzled parent. "Why Pictish?"

"Because," the would-be student said, "you see, only five words of it remain."—Troy Times.

INVENTOR EXPLAINS CRAFT OF MYSTERY

Boston, Mass., Dec. 13. — Wallace Tillinghast, of Worcester, who says he made long flights over New England, and from Worcester to New York two years ago, asserts that his machine, on which he declares he uses a sail, has remained in the air an hour without the engine going. In his machine, he says, he has made a hundred miles an hour. According to Mr Tillinghast, the machine carries a mast, spars and rigging for a lateen sail and also has a small "fin" sail aft. Mr. Tillinghast calls it an "auxiliary yawl," and says that it is the first aeroplane to be sailed.

"It is strictly neither monoplane nor biplane, but a multiplane," said Mr. Tillinghast. "Its upper wings, or 'establishers,' do away with all wing warping and all ailerons.

"Sailing by night has been a hobby of mine. I have not chosen this time merely for the sake of privacy, but also because it is more favourable for flying. There are then none of the atmospheric disturbances caused by radiation."

The public has never been fortunate enough to get a glimpse of Mr. Tillinghast's craft, either in action or repose.

GEMS WORTH $40,000 LOST DURING JAG

Chicago, Dec. 14. The expert accountants who have been going over the books of George E. Marshall, Incorporated, diamond dealers, have found a shortage of $40,000 in diamonds.

The business is conducted by the widow of George E. Marshall, Sarah Marshall; George B. Moore was manager. The latter is alleged to have been the hero of the most picturesque spree of the year. Before he finished the corporation was in the hands of the receivers. Pawn tickets for $25,000 worth of diamonds, on which he obtained $13,000, were found. The creditors put accountants to work and in their bill in court charge the $40,000 shortage to the lapse of the manager. It is asserted that he scattered diamonds about like hailstones. He is now recovering at his home.

The life of a goldfish is rarely more than five years in captivity under the most favourable circumstances.

IF DIVORCED, WEAR LITTLE FINGER RING

Chicago, December 13. — A new fad in the Chicago divorce colony has been started by Mrs. Marina del Gado Parke, divorced wife of the Secretary of the Board of Supervising Traction Engineers. She explained to friends the significance of a plain gold band ring on her little finger.

"Why, that's a divorce ring," she said. "I invented it. And now quite a few women are wearing rings like it. Pretty soon everybody will know that a plain ring on the right little finger means its wearer is divorced, and the plan of indicating a person's matrimonial status in this way will come into general use.

"It's so economical, too. The divorced woman can have her wedding ring cut down to fit the little finger.

"The divorce ring will save a lot of embarrassment. New acquaintances will not inquire about your husband, and old friends who haven't heard of your divorce will not embarrass themselves with awkward questions."

GOLF ON NEW LINER

Remarkable details are now known of the thousand foot liner, the Gigantic, which the White Star line has commissioned Harland & Wolff to build at Belfast.

The beam will measure between 11' and 112 feet; the displacement will be 70,000 tons and the gross tonnage over 50,000. The levels will be a dozen or thirteen, with the highest over seventy-five feet above the water line. The passenger accommodation will be increased in the first class from 800 to 1,000 or more, and the total passengers that can be carried will number over 4,000.

The Gigantic will not be an ocean-greyhound, but a seven-day boat. She will have both reciprocating and turbine engines. The cost is to be closer on to 2,000,000 pounds or $10,000,000. She will have a cricket field, a tennis court, golf links, and reception and ball rooms, and restaurant and veranda cafes, which will be placed forward instead of aft. There will also be a plunge and all kinds of baths, and a gymnasium.—Boston Herald.

TEST OF NEW ARMOR PLATE

An entirely new kind of armor plate which has just been tested by the German naval authorities and reported upon favourably has been invented by a German engineer named Schaumann.

Although very much lighter than the Krupp armor it is said to be of equal if not greater, resisting power. The armor is made of a special aluminum alloy faced by a thin, hardened steel plate. Gun shields of it have been definitely ordered for the new cruiser Strasburg, and its extensive employment is anticipated.

At present it is considered doubtful whether the new system of armor is applicable to the belt armor of battleships, which have to stand the shocks of heavy projectiles as well as face penetration, but it is expected to be extremely useful for armor-belting small vessels. More important still, the system is likely to be found applicable to destroyers without appreciably reducing their speed—the thing that has always defeated all attempts to armor destroyers in the past.—Washington Star.

The lady jury had been out for hours.

The judge looked tired, the clerk yawned, the loungers slept.

And then, quite unexpectedly, the jury announced it was ready to report, and the twelve ladies filed in.

"Have you agreed upon a verdict?" the judge demanded.

The forelady nodded and smiled.

"We have agreed upon twelve verdicts, your honour," she told him in her flute-like voice.

"You are discharged," roared the judge.

"Isn't he horrid?" said the ladies.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

ITEMS OF GENERAL INTEREST

SPORTS

Carl Morris, the "Oklahoma Giant," made short work of Al. Williams of Cleveland, a few nights ago. The fight was stopped in the third round. Williams was punished severely and was helpless against the jabs dealt by Morris. The latter weighed 228 pounds, and towered over the Cleveland man, who tipped the beam at 205. Williams was bleeding freely, and in the second round went to the floor on the count. He was down twice in the third. Morris was unscarred and seemed not to feel the few blows that Williams landed. He has evidently learned something from his instructors.

CHAUCER ELLIOTT IN CHARGE OF TEAM

Chaucer Elliott was in Toronto yesterday and signed his contract to manage the Toronto professional hockey team for the coming season. Elliott will attend the N. H. A. meeting in Montreal on Saturday night to look after the interests of the Toronto club and to arrange for a trade of Odie Cleghorn, formerly of Renfrew, for "Pud" Glass, the Wanderer player. Glass will be played on the defence, if secured by Toronto. The forwards will be young and vigorous, and the old timers will be given a wide berth.

As yet the Ottawas have not signed up their players and there are rumours of some of the men jumping to the West, although Frank Patrick claimed that he would not take any of the champion team. "Dubbie" Kerr is mentioned as having received a good offer, and there is a chance that he will accept. He has held back from affixing his signature to an Ottawa contract. Percy Lesueur, Jack Darragh, and "Skene" Ronan are the only men who have been signed up as yet.

BASEBALL BREVITIES

The signed contract of Shortstop Vincent Cassani has been received by Brantford.

Pitcher "Lefty" McDonald, claimed by Hamilton and New Bedford, Mass., has been awarded by the Board of Arbitration to New Bedford.

The annual meeting of the Canadian League will be held at Hamilton to-morrow night. The Berlin franchise will be transferred but its new location is quite unsettled.

The world's series ticket scandal continues to hold the spotlight in New York. President Brush of the New York Giants, who made public his report to the National Commission on the scandal, addressed a pungent letter to Ban Johnson, asking him to explain a few things alleged to have happened to the pasteboards in Philadelphia.

Frank O'Day was the pitcher and Connie Mack the catcher on the old Washington team in 1886. O'Day later became a pitcher on the Giants. "Are you going to wear a uniform, Hank?" the new manager was asked. "Sure," he replied, "and I'll trade some players, too."

With Brooklyn and Philadelphia opposing, President Lynch was re-elected president of the National League yesterday, the losing candidate being Robert W. Brown, a Louisville newspaper man. James E. Gaffney, who decided over night to buy the Boston club, and did so, sat in the council, which also included a woman for the first time in its history—Mrs. Helen Hathaway Britton, owner of the St Louis Club.

CONVENIENCES FOR TRAVELLING

A well known shop in Piccadilly, which specializes in baggage and motor and travel requisites, has just brought out a new weatherproof luncheon case for motoring. It is handmade throughout of leather—and so built that it is absolutely dust proof and water tight. Besides the usual equipment of motor cases, there are soup plates, two large nickel vacuum jars for carrying hot food, and a silver plated tray attached to the fall front of the basket. Complete for the use of four people, it costs 13 guineas.

English people travel so much that they are never without baskets or cases which will give them food and drink at a moment's notice. The newest models, brought out especially for the autumn travels in Egypt, India and other parts of the East are the "en route" tea and luncheon baskets.

There is an extra light wicker luncheon basket built for two; a basket especially attractive for its small size, and for the fact that it is the lightest that has yet been produced for two people—10x9x7½ inches are its measurements—and yet it contains everything needful, including provision tin and drinking cups. It only costs two guineas, or £3 6s 9d if the food tins are plated inside and out; and there are silver plated cups and forks instead of steel ones.

From the English point of view a tea basket is essential, and the "en route" tea basket has the kettle so arranged that it carries the water ready for boiling in the basket just as it stands.—Vogue.

CARDS APT SYMBOLS

Inspired by a pack of cards, Father Vaughan, the noted English Jesuit, preached a remarkable little sermon. The occasion was a whist party given by the Young Men's Catholic Association of Boston College.

Father Vaughan stepped upon the platform and said: "So you are playing cards. I really don't know much about cards. I know that there are four suits—clubs, diamonds, hearts and spades. They are apt symbols, and they are used in the game of life.

"Some people play that game with clubs. They want power and take things by force.

"You are not playing for money, therefore you must be playing for love, and you use hearts.

"As a priest it is my duty to remind you that in the end spades will be trumps.

"God bless you all. Please go on with your game."

WHAT HE TOOK

Hilary K. Adair, the Western detective, was praising at a dinner in Dubuque, the generous warmth accorded by John D. Rockefeller to sheriffs, bailiffs, and other myrmidons of the law.

"They don't get treated at John D.'s," said Mr. Adair, "as old Cluss once treated me."

"Cluss runs, you know, a saloon. I was waiting in his place one cold December night to nab a bigamist, when Cluss came out from an inner room wrapped in a heavy ulster.

"'Why, hello, Adair-' he said, shaking me warmly by the hand, 'I'm glad to see you. What'll you take?'

"'Well,' said I, 'I don't know—I'm not particular—'

"Cluss, who had been watching me anxiously, now butted in with the words:

"'Good! Slip on your overcoat, then, and we'll take a walk. I was just starting out.'"—Boston Post.

HIS CHOICE OF LANGUAGE

It was his first term at college, and his people were very anxious to know what progress he had made.

"And now," said his father, "how about language? What particular language have you decided to take up?"

"Well," responded the son and heir, hopefully, "I've thought it over very carefully, and have definitely decided to go in for Pictish."

"Pictish?" asked the puzzled parent. "Why Pictish?"

"Because," the would-be student said, "you see, only five words of it remain."—Troy Times.

INVENTOR EXPLAINS CRAFT OF MYSTERY

Boston, Mass., Dec. 13. — Wallace Tillinghast, of Worcester, who says he made long flights over New England, and from Worcester to New York two years ago, asserts that his machine, on which he declares he uses a sail, has remained in the air an hour without the engine going. In his machine, he says, he has made a hundred miles an hour. According to Mr. Tillinghast, the machine carries a mast, spars and rigging for a lateen sail and also has a small 'fin' sail aft. Mr. Tillinghast calls it an "auxiliary yawl," and says that it is the first aeroplane to be sailed.

"It is strictly neither monoplane nor biplane, but a multiplane," said Mr. Tillinghast. "Its upper wings, or 'establishers,' do away with all wing warping and all ailerons.

"Sailing by night has been a hobby of mine. I have not chosen this time merely for the sake of privacy, but also because it is more favourable for flying. There are then none of the atmospheric disturbances caused by radiation."

The public has never been fortunate enough to get a glimpse of Mr. Tillinghast's craft, either in action or repose.

GEMS WORTH $40,000 LOST DURING JAG

Chicago, Dec 14. The expert accountants who have been going over the books of George E. Marshall, Incorporated, diamond dealers, have found a shortage of $40,000 in diamonds.

The business is conducted by the widow of George E. Marshall, Sarah Marshall; George B. Moore was manager. The latter is alleged to have been the hero of the most picturesque spree of the year. Before he finished the corporation was in the hands of the receivers. Pawn tickets for $25,000 worth of diamonds, on which he obtained $13,000, were found. The creditors put accountants to work and in their bill of court charge the $40,000 shortage to the lapse of the manager. It is asserted that he scattered diamonds about like hailstones. He is now recovering at his home.

The life of a goldfish is rarely more than five years in captivity under the most favourable circumstances.

IF DIVORCED, WEAR LITTLE FINGER RING

Chicago, December 13 — A new fad in the Chicago divorce colony has been started by Mrs. Marina del Gado Parke, divorced wife of the Secretary of the Board of Supervising Traction Engineers. She explained to friends the significance of a plain gold band ring on her little finger.

"Why, that's a divorce ring," she said; "I invented it. And now quite a few women are wearing rings like it. Pretty soon everybody will know that a plain ring on the right little finger means its wearer is divorced, and the plan of indicating a person's matrimonial status in this way will come into general use.

"It's so economical, too. The divorced woman can have her wedding ring cut down to fit the little finger.

"The divorce ring will save a lot of embarrassment. New acquaintances will not inquire about your husband, and old friends who haven't heard of your divorce will not embarrass themselves with awkward questions."

GOLF ON NEW LINER

Remarkable details are now known of the thousand foot liner, the Gigantic, which the White Star line has commissioned Harland & Wolff to build at Belfast.

The beam will measure between 81' and 112 feet; the displacement will be 70,000 tons and the gross tonnage over 50,000. The levels will be a dozen or thirteen, with the highest over seventy-five feet above the water line. The passenger accommodation will be increased in the first class from 800 to 1,000 or more, and the total passengers that can be carried will number over 4,000.

The Gigantic will not be an ocean greyhound, but a seven-day boat. She will have both reciprocating and turbine engines. The cost is to be closer on to 2,000,000 pounds or $10,000,000. She will have a cricket field, a tennis court, golf links, and reception and ball rooms, and restaurant and verandah cafes, which will be placed forward instead of aft. There will also be a plunge and all kinds of baths, and a gymnasium.—Boston Herald.

TEST OF NEW ARMOR PLATE

An entirely new kind of armor plate which has just been tested by the German naval authorities and reported upon favourably has been invented by a German engineer named Schaumann.

Although very much lighter than the Krupp armor it is said to be of equal if not greater, resisting power. The armor is made of a special aluminum alloy faced by a thin, hardened steel plate. Gun shields of it have been definitely ordered for the new cruiser Strasburg, and its extensive employment is anticipated.

At present it is considered doubtful whether the new system of armor is applicable to the belt armor of battleships, which have to stand the shocks of heavy projectiles as well as face penetration, but it is expected to be extremely useful for armor-belting small vessels. More important still, the system is likely to be found applicable to destroyers without appreciably reducing their speed—the thing that has always defeated all attempts to armor destroyers in the past.—Washington Star.

The lady jury had been out for hours.

The judge looked tired, the clerk yawned, the loungers slept.

And then, quite unexpectedly, the jury announced it was ready to report, and the twelve ladies filed in.

"Have you agreed upon a verdict?" the judge demanded.

The forelady nodded and smiled.

"We have agreed upon twelve verdicts, your honour," she told him in her flute-like voice.

"You are discharged," roared the judge.

"Isn't he horrid?" said the ladies.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Weak, Lame, Aching Back

Comes From The Kidneys.

Those who have never been troubled with kidney trouble do not know the suffering and misery which those afflicted undergo.

On the first sign of backache Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken immediately so as to avoid years of suffering from kidney trouble.

Mrs. Joseph Throop, Upper Point de Bute, N.B., writes—"I cannot speak too well of Doan's Kidney Pills. For two years I was so tired life was a burden, and I got up more tired than when I went to bed, and my back was so lame I could hardly straighten up. I took different kinds of medicine, but none of them did me any good until a friend advised me to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I did so, and to-day I don't know what it is to be tired, and my lame back is all gone. I can recommend them to any person suffering with lame back and that terrible tired feeling."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

The Fountain Head of Life Is The Stomach

A man who has a weak and impaired stomach and who does not properly digest his food will soon find that his blood has become weak and impoverished, and that his whole body is improperly and insufficiently nourished.

Dr. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY makes the stomach strong, promotes the flow of digestive juices, restores the lost appetite, makes assimilation perfect, invigorates the liver and purifies and enriches the blood. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and restorative nerve tonic. It makes men strong in body, active in mind and cool in judgement.

This "Discovery" is a pure, glyceric extract of American medical roots, absolutely free from alcohol and all injurious, habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients are printed on its wrappers. It has no relationship with secret nostrums. Its every ingredient is endorsed by the leaders in all the schools of medicine. Don't accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this time-proven remedy of known composition. Ask your neighbors. They must know of many cures made by it during past 40 years, right in your own neighborhood. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

"NA-DRU-CO DYSPEPSIA TABLETS Proved of Great Value to Me"

There is only one explanation for the numbers of enthusiastic letters that we receive praising Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets, and that is that these tablets certainly do cure any kind of stomach trouble.

Here is a typical letter from Miss Eliza Armsworthy, Canso, N.S.:

"It is with pleasure I write to inform you that your Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets have proved of great value to me. I tried remedy after remedy but without any lasting good. Having heard of your tablets curing such cases as mine I decided to give them a fair trial. They proved satisfactory in my case."

The remarkable success of Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets is such a success as can only come to an honest remedy, compounded according to an exceptionally good formula, from pure ingredients, by expert chemists. If you are troubled with your stomach just ask your Druggist about Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets, compounded by the National Drug and Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, and sold throughout the Dominion at 50c. a box. 142

FRIGHTFUL LEAP TO DEATH

CHICAGO, Dec. 15.—James G. Greek, a machinist, disrobed in the corridor on the nineteenth floor of the Masonic Temple, and climbed over the five-foot railing to a girder which spans the top of the court. On hand and knees he worked his way to the centre of the beam. He stood up and raising his hands like a diver, leaped.

He dropped 225 feet. The descending body, having acquired almost irresistible momentum, struck Harry Evans, 6,408 Vernon Avenue, who was buying a smoke at the cigar case on the main floor. Almost simultaneously it hit the counter with a crash that emptied offices of startled workers and brought them fearfully to the railing which guards the open court on the main floors.

Greek, who came from El Pasco, Tex., and has been rooming at the residence of William Cormack, at 4,258 Carroll Avenue, died instantly. Evans was hurried to the Practitioners' Hospital. After a consultation at night physicians said he had one chance in a hundred to survive. The bones of his chest were crushed in, causing internal injuries which probably will prove fatal. The ligaments of his left knee were also torn by the strain of the impact.

The injured man is 23 years old. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Evans. His father is a lake captain, and the son worked in his employ.

Greek's death is the most horrible of the eight which has resulted in Chicago by leaping from high buildings. Four of these deaths have occurred in the Masonic Temple, two of them this year. They are:

The tall Chamber of Commerce building also has claimed four victims of the "leap lust." Of the eight who have died thus, Greek leaped from the highest point.

The suicide occurred about 12.30 o'clock. Greek first was noticed by Sebastian Tolmairie, 3,616 Dearborn Street, a porter on the nineteenth floor. Looking across the court, Tolmairie saw the naked maniac clambering over the railing. At first he didn't realize what the man was doing. Then he saw him climb out on the girder. Tolmairie called to him. His shouts brought the man to the attention of Mildred Alexander, 2,300 Indiana Avenue, a manicurist, and R. D. Russell, 5,351 Fulerton Avenue who sells tickets for the observatory.

J. J. Sullivan, 3,324 Archer Avenue, who operates the elevator in the north shaft, saw Greek climbing over the cross beam. He left his car and walked to the railing. The three others shouted to him. He paid no attention to them.

"Wait a minute, old man," Sullivan called to the crazed man. "Let's go get a drink."

"I'm going swimming. Go away and leave me alone."

Then he continued to the middle of the beam, critically surveying the void below, as if looking for a better position. As he rose to his feet the watchers saw there was a half burned unlit cigarette in his lips. Greek raised his arms over his head after the fashion of a diver. He poised himself, then he shot downward, head foremost.

Above the cigar stand in the rotunda is a canopy. Greek's right arm struck this. The limb was severed at the elbow and it fell about fifteen feet away. Evans was knocked flat. The body of the suicide rested on the right side of the demolished counter. It was horribly maimed, only the head escaping disfiguration.

Greek left El Pasco in June. He had been working as a machinist in the North-western railroad shops. A cheque for $63.80 was found in his pocket. He carried a card of the International Association of Machinists and was a Mason.

News of the injury of Evans revived the activity of city officials in advocating an ordinance to compel the installation of screens in open courts of skyscrapers to prevent injury of persons by falling bodies.

WAS A GREAT SUFFERER FOR FIVE YEARS FROM DYSPEPSIA.

Dyspepsia is one of the most prevalent troubles of civilized life, and thousands of people suffer untold agony after every meal, for nearly everything that enters a weak dyspeptic stomach acts as an irritant.

The long train of distressing symptoms, which render life a burden to the victim of dyspepsia, may be promptly cured by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. Mrs. Wm. J. Boyne, Lepreau, N.B., writes:—"I thought I would write and tell you of the good Burdock Blood Bitters has done me and also tell you how thankful I am.

"For five years I had been a great sufferer from dyspepsia, and tried different doctors and proprietary medicines, but could get no relief. One day a friend told me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I did not have much faith in it, but I thought I would give it a trial. To-day I am completely cured, and I will always recommend it."

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for about thirty-five years and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

"The Liver Pills act So Naturally and Easily."

Such a statement, coming from the cashier of a bank, shows what confidence responsible people have in these pills. Mr. A. L. Wilson after trying them wrote:

"I have used Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills and also your Anti-Pain Pills, on myself, with good results. The Liver Pills act so naturally and so easily that I scarcely know that I have taken a pill. Frequently being troubled with headache I take an Anti-Pain Pill and get immediate relief in every case."

A. L. Wilson, Sparta, Ill.

Mr. Wilson was for a number of years cashier of the First National Bank of Sparta.

CHICAGO'S OLDEST SETTLER

Chicago has no less than five persons who came to it as early as 1835. One of them arrived with his parents from England three years before that date. But the title of Oldest Settler which has been in good-natured dispute since the recent death of Fernando Jones, seems to belong to Mrs. Eleanor Hamilton Keenon, who was born with old Fort Dearborn on St. Valentine's Day, 1832, and who has lived in Chicago continuously ever since, except for periods when she was with her husband at "the front" during the war. The city contained a population of 150 at the time of her birth, and she has shared its vicissitudes from that stage, through the destruction caused by one of the greatest fires in history, to its present proud position as the fourth city in size in the world, with a population of almost 2,500,000. The farm which her father bought "west of town" in her childhood, is now far within its limits, and she herself lives in one of a series of houses which she built over half a century ago, and which was a material addition to the slowly growing town of that day. Two of her competitors for the distinction of longest residence reached the hamlet on successive days in 1835, and two others entered it in the year of her birth. But the fitness of things, no less than accuracy, is best satisfied by the bestowal of the honour upon one who not only spans the greatest stretch of time spent in the city, but whose nativity is identified with the oldest and most historic spot within the boundaries.—New York Evening Post.

$5 NOT ENOUGH

Cambridge, Dec. 13.—Love cannot live on $5 a week. This is one cause for the divorce suit filed by Graham Glass, Jr., former Harvard student, against Helen Roche, a beautiful Roxbury girl, with whom he eloped last February. He charges that she was too friendly with other men during a trip in Paris last summer. They were married in Nashua, N. H., and lived together only one month.

Following their marriage Glass, who is the son of wealthy Portland (Ore.) parents, was cut to a $5 week allowance. The couple moved from the Hotel Westminster, to No. 11 Everett street. They separated soon afterwards.

In April Mrs. Glass brought suit for divorce. The suit was the result of the failure of Mrs. Glass to reach an agreement or reconciliation with the parents of her husband.

She declared that she was cruelly deserted by Glass and that he has refused or neglected to provide for her. Her suit is still pending and the counter suits will probably be heard together.

Glass, who is one of the best known Harvard athletes, returned to Harvard after being called home following his marriage. He took bachelor apartments with a friend in Ridgeley Hall, one of the college dormitories, and finished his college course last June.

Up to the time of his sudden marriage he had been one of the "Gold Coast" students at Harvard. It was his chum, Nelson Gammons, who married the divorced wife of Rufus Gaynor, son of Mayor Gaynor of New York. The Glass elopement immediately followed that marriage. Efforts were made by students at Harvard to kidnap Glass before he eloped. It was said at the time that they acted at the request of Glass's father.

Mrs. Glass before her marriage lived at No. 60 Holworthy street, Roxbury.

The first of last April, just after the romance ended, Mrs. Glass gave an interview in which she reviewed her courtship and brief married life. In the course of this interview she said:

"Graham has left me. Two weeks ago his father came here from his home in Oregon. Out there the Glasses are big people. You know Graham's father ran for United States Senator. He came to Boston secretly and put up at the Hotel Touraine. He did not register. He spent four days trying to dig up my past. Then he talked with Graham. He robbed me of my husband. Now Graham is living in Ridgeley Hall and I am packing up to live with my friend, Mr. Estelle L. Walton.

"The past month has been a terrible one for me. There were two weeks of great happiness. Oh, they went by so fast. It was like a dream. Now everything is changed.

"Graham and I were never formally engaged. But we did love each other so. He was sincere, and I was, too, and there wasn't the least hypocrisy about it. He kept urging me to marry him, but I kept putting him off. Finally, one Sunday night, I promised I would marry him.

"After the story came out in the paper there was nothing left but to have a wedding."

BARRY A SUCCESS

Jimmy Barry, the wonderful little champion of the ring in his day, also is living in Chicago. Jimmy continues to make friends just as he always did, and is earning a living with something besides swinging on the other fellow's jaw. Barry spends the summer months working in the public playgrounds, where he is considered a huge success.

Kid Herman, another Chicago lightweight, is a real business man, and success has brought him plenty of the shekels. The Kid is in Seattle, Wash., where he is proprietor of a florist's shop. Herman almost reached the pinnacle of fame, the obstacle in his path being that wonderful coloured fighter, now dead.

Joe Choynski, who has made Chicago his home for many years after leaving California, has earned a living, and a good one, too, by teaching the game that made him famous.

Choynski now is boxing instructor at the millionaire athletic club of Pittsburg. Previous to leaving Chicago he conducted a physical culture school, and also was instructor at the Illinois Athletic Club.

Tommy White, who gained fame by his great fights with "Terrible Terry" McGovern, still holds forth in Chicago. For the last couple of years he has been employed in construction work on a big underground telephone tunnel.

Then there is Eddie Santry, who at one time claimed the featherweight championship. Eddie, a couple of years ago, was proprietor of a saloon, but now is officiating as referee of bouts in Wisconsin cities.

BURNS, FATALIST, SAYS "THEY'RE SURE TO GET ME"

Detective in the McNamara Case Doesn't Expect to Die in Bed—Scoffs at Sherlock Holmes Methods and Attributes Success to Eighteen Hours' Work a Day—Some Narrow Escapes

"THREATENED men live long," so runs the old proverb out of which William J. Burns, the detective, the power behind the throne in the case of the McNamara brothers which has just reached so startling a conclusion, may take what comfort he can.

For while the confession and the sentencing of the McNamara brothers may have seemed, to the world at large, a brilliant climax to Burns' long trailing and persistent pursuit of the Los Angeles dynamiters, to Burns himself the tragic climax marks only an epoch in the work he has started out to do. In his mind the biggest part of the work remains to be done. He is after "the man higher up."

"They may get me yet," was the remark Burns made not long ago, discussing the McNamara case. He said it, not bitterly nor fearsomely, but as a fatalist might say it. For he knows that while his path of duty leads him straight onward he is environed always with deadly enmity.

"It is inseparable from my profession," the detective said, "the knowledge that one is surrounded by constant danger. Always I am making enemies of desperate and dangerous men, and unless I walk warily and am exceptionally lucky it seems certain that, sooner or later, some one of them, braver or more desperate than the rest, will get the drop on me and end my career."

It was just after one of his visits to Indianapolis that Burns spoke so freely of the work he was doing and of his personal attitude toward it. He spoke at the time when he had just forged the last link in the chain of evidence that was to land the McNamaras where they are to-day.

"I have never minimized the element of personal danger in my work," said Burns. "Always have I borne in mind that when a detective sets out to hunt down a criminal or a band of criminals it is up to him to think harder and more quickly than they do. From the outset the odds are against him, and for him eternal vigilance is the price of staying on the job. I was referred to once as an 'eighteen hour a day man,' meaning that I worked eighteen out of every twenty-four hours. Since the McNamara case started, if they had said I was a twenty-four hour a day man they would have been nearer the truth. There has not been time for a minute's respite. It has been work and watchfulness, watchfulness and work, all the way through."

William J. Burns has stated confidently that he was "going to get" the men higher up, and that nothing could deter him. This recalls something Burns said once when he was working on the Oregon land frauds. He was called before Mr. Ethan A. Hitchcock, Secretary of the Interior, to whom he said not only that he knew the ring leaders in the land conspiracy, but that one of them was a Senator of the United States.

Secretary Hitchcock could not believe this. The cool statement of the detective made him angry and he gave Burns the lie direct.

The secret service man swallowed hard and choked back the retort that it would not have been wise to make to his superior in office. But he said:—

"I have never dropped a case yet that I had once fairly started. Unless I am interfered with and hampered by influences that have already placed many obstacles in my way, I shall bring the culprits before you, before long, and each will confess his part in the big steal. And, Mr. Secretary, your friend the United States Senator will be among them."

The Oregon land case is history. Senator Mitchell died in jail awaiting trial for the part he had played in the land frauds, the evidence of which had all been collected by Burns.

The same tenacity and fighting spirit with which he worked in the Oregon case mark him to-day in the dynamiting cases. There were many who predicted that the McNamara case would prove the undoing of Burns. He paid no heed to the prophets of disaster, but worked on diligently and silently until the confessions of the guilty men set the seal of justification upon his work.

Just what that work has been will certainly not be known for some time, for the conclusion of the McNamara case is but a starter in the crusade that is being waged against dynamiters. Burns is at work on the dynamiting cases just as hard to-day as he was six months ago, and it will not be until the cases are completed, until the world knows what power and influences were behind the McNamaras, that he can find time to tell the story of the paths he has trodden on the trail of crime ever since that day when he was called upon by the municipality of Los Angeles to take charge of the case.

Of course, the path that Burns has followed, wherever crime led, has been often beset by danger. As head of a big detective agency he has come into personal contact with the worst criminals in the world. Many have tried to kill him. Asked as to the nearest call he had ever had, Burns replied:—

"I have had so many that it is hard to single them out. I've had guns poked into my face, jabbed into my ribs and nestled against the pit of my stomach. But, fortunately, the man behind the gun always lost his nerve and that gave me my chance. I turned the tables, got the drop on him and gathered him in."

"Is it because the crooks have not nerve enough to shoot?"

Shooting of Mr Heney.

"That's about it," the detective answered. "When a crook gets in the toils he may bluster a bit and make threats, but none knows better than he that gunplay is a dangerous pastime. The crook is usually smart enough to know that he is not going to help his cause much by having a charge of murder heaped up on the original charge for which he was wanted. If one keeps cool and puts the case squarely before them the crooks will usually cave in."

That this is not theory but the outgrowth of personal experience many cases in the career of Burns go to show. There was that episode of the court room in San Francisco where Morris Haas, after shooting District Attorney Heney, turned the revolver on Burns, the man who had gathered all the evidence that served to convict that notorious band of boodlers. But the aim which proved disastrous for Mr. Heney failed when Burns was its object, and once more the detective escaped without a scratch.

Many have wondered whether Burns goes armed. He is practically never without a revolver and, indeed, sleeps with it in easy reach. But the many threats that are hurled against him have ceased to have a disquieting effect. They cannot make him more ready than he always is for the attack which he knows may come at any time. An old Secret Service man who has worked long with Burns said once:—

"The man who gets Billy Burns will have to nail him from behind, for he has eyes as sharp as a ferret's and he can smell powder as readily as a crow. He can spot a gun-man as far as he can see him."

And in spite of the dangers that beset him Burns never allows a bodyguard to accompany him on any of his expeditions. He trusts solely to his own quickness and watchfulness.

One of the close calls due to this policy of working alone came in the case of Charles Ulrich, a noted counterfeiter. Burns found that Ulrich had a friend whose evidence was necessary before the case could be called complete. It was in the Boston Post Office that Burns ran down this "pal," but before he could get hold of him the man had drawn a revolver and jabbed it against the detective's ribs, ordering him in a low voice to hold up his hands. Burns has been "stuck up" too many times not to know that it was the part of wisdom to obey. But as his hands went up in the air he shot his knee into the pit of the stomach of the criminal, doubling him up.

Before the man could recover Burns pounced upon him, yanked the revolver from his hand and landed a stiff right hand punch on the jaw that left him master of the situation. The prisoner was landed in the police station, and Burns succeeded in getting from him the information that resulted in the complete disruption of a most dangerous band of counterfeiters.

It was in Boston, too, that Burns had another close call of a similar nature and one in which he did not fare so well. He had trailed S. S. Pewter, wanted in connection with the Oregon land frauds, clear from the Far West to Boston, and once more he got his quarry at the Post Office. He placed Pewter under arrest and felt outside of the prisoner's clothes for any traces of a weapon. He found none and so started off to take the prisoner to the police station. But when they reached the street Pewter produced a revolver from his handkerchief pocket and in a flash had the muzzle of the weapon poked hard against the detective's stomach.

Pewter backed Burns up against a wall, and before the detective knew what was happening the captive had tripped him up. Burns fell heavily to the ground, and when he got to his feet again Pewter had disappeared in the crowd.

Asked afterward if he thought his time had come when he felt that revolver against his stomach, Burns replied:—

"I was so confounded mad to think that I had overlooked the gun, and thus given Pewter a chance to show me up before a crowd, that I didn't give a hang what happened. I only know that just before I hit that pavement I had registered a vow to get Pewter and make him pay for the trouble and the humiliation he had caused me."

He was compelled to follow the trail of Pewter out to the Pacific coast once more. He shadowed the home of Pewter's sweetheart for two long months, but in the end he got his man, convicted him and had him sent to prison.

It is that tenacity of purpose, that grim determination to finish a task once he is embarked on it, which has made Burns what he is to-day. No detail in a case is too trivial for his consideration. Some of the most successful of his cases have been won solely by his close attention to detail, and it is his ability to make the most of the little details of a case that caused Chief Wilkie, of the United States Secret Service, to characterise Burns as the greatest detective the government has ever had in its employ. His specialty in the government service was running down counterfeiters, and some of his solutions of these cases have been little short of marvellous.

All over the world he has followed criminals, and never has he returned empty handed. He came back either with the man he went after or with the evidence that would convict the criminal at home.

Perhaps the strongest part of Burns' work as a detective has been in procuring confessions from the criminals he goes after. No matter how much evidence he has gained against a prisoner, nor how certain he is of a conviction, he feels that his work has not been sealed until the prisoner makes a confession to the authorities. And he is the more insistent on this because it often gives him an opportunity to plead for some clemency to be shown to his captives. He says:—

"Get a man's confession—a bona fide confession, I mean—and there is no going back on it when the case comes to trial. Such a document materially shortens the trial and saves the country, State or government no end of expense. It also serves to stop all charges of a 'frame up' or of planted evidence."

Scoffs at Stage Detectives.

In appearance there is nothing of the traditional or fictional detective about William J. Burns. Round and hale, his face might well be that of a successful business or professional man. He fairly radiates cordiality, and in conversation, with newspaper men or others, he studiously avoids the cut-and-dried phrases that make up so large a part of the vocabulary of many detectives. The only thing about his face that contradicts the impression of geniality and mild good humor are the "cold steel blue eyes."

Burns himself declares that the basis of any success he has won as a detective is simply common sense. He has no use for the theories and deductions of the detective of fiction, the Monsieur Lecoq or the Sherlock Holmes. He maintains that when a detective starts out to run down a case all he needs is to stick to fact, employ good horse sense and work hard.

"The stage detective," says Mr. Burns, "is just as ridiculous as the stage reporter, who is invariably portrayed with notebook and pencil in hand, taking down every word that is said. As a matter of fact, I never saw a live newspaper reporter resort to such tactics, and I have no doubt that the stage reporter is just as absurd in a newspaper man's eyes as the stage detective is in mine.

"When I catch a crook dead to rights, somehow, my sympathies go out to him. If such a man shows any disposition to meet the officers half way and make the task of the law easier, I always do what I can to have clemency shown him when he comes up for sentence. Many criminals have received long terms in prison through my efforts, but even these, I think, realize that I made even that burden lighter for them and they look upon me as a true friend."

And that, strange as it may seem, is true. Many crooks have testified that while Burns is a relentless foe he is a good friend, and they have profited by his friendship. But he will not forgive a man for lying to him or deceiving him. At such times all the joviality and kindliness in his eyes fades away and his face takes on that unrelenting look that bodes no good for those who have betrayed him.

At present his whole energy and effort seem to be directed toward tracing the inception of the dynamiting cases to the fountain source, to the "men higher up." He is still camping on their trail and declares that he will yet prove all he has alleged against them, quite as effectively as in the days gone by he proved to the Secretary of the Interior that he knew whereof he spoke. That he still bears the memory of that old case in mind is shown by his closing words:—

"In the Oregon case I had to go out and get the goods. In the dynamiting cases I already have the goods, and I can show them whenever I am ready. The confession and the sentence of the McNamaras is, in my mind, just the real start of these cases. The evidence is practically complete now, and we are going through with them to the end."

The Secession Convention of 1860 Recalled by Its Sole Survivor.

IN an unpretentious law office in Walhalla, S. C., Colonel Robert Anderson Thompson, sole survivor of the 168 men who signed the secession ordinance in Charleston fifty-one years ago, daily attends to his still growing practice.

Colonel Thompson is eighty-five years old, but one would not think it to look at him. He has the appearance of a soldier, scarcely ripe for retirement. Had the outcome of the great war in which he fought been different his name might have been blazoned in the memory of his countrymen gloriously as if he had signed the Declaration of Independence. But Colonel Thompson is glad that the outcome was not different, and his eyes fill with tears when he tells how glad he is. Yet he did his duty as he saw it, has never regretted it and remembers with love the great men of the Confederacy who fought by his side and cast their lot with his.

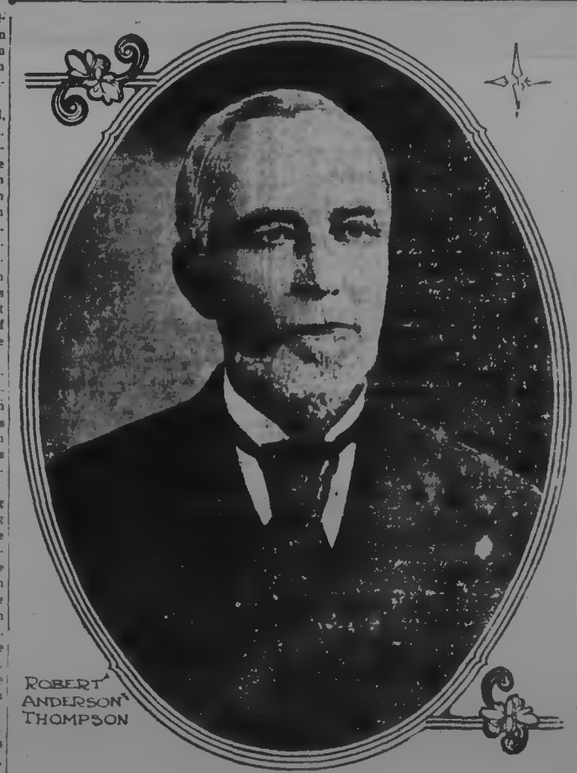
Walhalla lies snuggled among mountains, and Colonel Thompson has assimilated somewhat of their ruggedness. In his idle moments, which are few, he swings his desk chair so he can gaze at them through the window, and he is always looking at them when he talks in a reminiscent strain.

"The great convention," he said not long ago, "of which I had the honor of being a member, met at the call of the State Legislature in the Baptist Church in Columbia, December 17, 1860. There were no restrictions barring any citizen from acting as a delegate. There were more white headed men in that convention than in any gathering I have ever witnessed. Seriousness pervaded the very air. There was no disturbance, no violence, no haste. Every man knew what was certain to take place. Secession had practically been agreed upon before the convention met.

"Every profession was represented. There were ministers, lawyers, members of Legislature, members of Congress, judges and chancellors. I was a commissioner in equity for Pickens district at the time and made my home in Walhalla.

"When the convention was called there was a rumor about Columbia that smallpox was rampant, and it was decided to hold the convention in Charleston. We met there on the second day in St. Andrew's Hall. During the first day of the convention in Columbia we organized by electing General D. F. Jamison, of Barnwell, president, and we elected B. F. Arthur, of Columbia, clerk.

"Upon his election General Jamison made a ringing speech urging secession. On Thursday, December 20, 1860, the great ordinance was read in the convention. No speeches were made pro or con. There was no cheering and no debate. Articles were revised and amended, but none objected to the proposed action. At seven o'clock in the evening the convention met in Institute Hall. The Legislature was present, as was Governor Pickens and his staff. Hundreds crowded into the hall, and the streets for blocks were jammed with those who could not gain admission.



ROBERT ANDERSON THOMPSON

"Silence brooded over it all," [illegible] which meant more than fireworks or [illegible] shouting or processions. I felt as I must scream because of the strain.

"Amid an awful silence Governor Pickens rose and merely called the names of the different parishes and districts as presented in alphabetical order. As each district was named its delegates quietly stepped to a table in the [illegible] the hall and affixed his signature to the ordinance which had been engrossed on parchment.

"When all had done so silently, General Jamison rose and without preamble said:—

"'The Ordinance of Secession has been signed and I proclaim the State of South Carolina an independent [illegible]'

"Applause, shouting and shooting shook the hall. Bands [illegible] Houses were illuminated and [illegible] Outside, fireworks and processions [illegible] Scores of bonfires [illegible] The [illegible] was a wonderful sight. [illegible] stop had been [illegible] meeting [illegible] Hall [illegible] by a [illegible] great portion of the [illegible] Colonel Thompson's name appears directly in the middle of the group of signatures appended to the original parchment of the ordinance.

"It's just the luck of the middleman to be the last to plunk," he says about it cheerfully.

The Colonel was born near Pendleton, S. C., on Twelve Mile River. He worked hard on his father's farm during his boyhood, and a peculiar circumstance is responsible for his abandoning the tilling of the soil. He was ploughing new ground when the ploughshare caught in the roots of a heavy stump. The mule was unable to draw the plough through the tough roots and the boy could not drag it back. His is not the nature to skirt around trouble. He smashes through, and so he did with the plough. After sufficient urging the mule tugged so hard that the roots snapped, the plough was jerked through the air and the share hit the ploughman so hard a rap that he keeled over on the ground. If he had been older it is probable that he would have continued his farm life, taking the mishap philosophically, but instead he went home and told his mother that he was done with farming life.

"Then and there," he says, "my parents put together for me a few small belongings and I went off to Pendleton to become a printer's devil on the Pendleton Messenger."

Until 1858 he (Thompson) worked in different capacities on various newspapers and he was then appointed commissioner in equity.

Robert Anderson Thompson backed up his action by signing the Secession Ordinance by volunteering for the Confederate army and later in the reconstruction period. Entering the war as a commissioned officer he rose to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel for bravery in the field. Of this it is very difficult to persuade Colonel Thompson to talk. In fact he has very little to say of the many personal incidents which reflect considerable credit on his name.

For some years he has eaten two meals a day, contending that more is unnecessary for one of his age. The distance of a mile and a half from his home to the little office in Walhalla he walks almost every day, and there are younger men who do not care to keep pace with him.

"Way back in Revolutionary times Pickens was famous," he says. "We had General Cleveland, General Anderson and Horseshoe Robinson. There have been two governors of South Carolina named Pickens, both natives of Pickens district.

"There are very few of us veteran Confederates left now; fewer than of the Grand Army, and we are no longer Confederates. We are Americans, and I can honestly say that we have striven to live and to achieve for our country. The old quarrel has been forgotten and we love the new South as well as the old.

Let Us Laugh and Be Merry.

"WANTING the spirit, the letter is dull indeed," remarks an officer in Uncle Sam's army who is a bit of a philosopher as well.

"An English drill sergeant whose severity had made him unpopular with his company was putting a squad of recruits through the funeral exercise. Opening the ranks so as to admit the passage of a cortège between them, the instructor, by way of practical explanation, walked slowly down the lane formed by the two ranks, saying as he did so:—

"'Now I am the corpse. Pay attention!'

"Having reached the end of the lane he turned round, regarded the recruits with a scrutinising eye and then remarked:—

"'Yor 'ands is right and your 'eads is right, but you 'aven't got that look of regret you ought to 'ave.'"

SENATOR JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS tells of a negro lad in a Southern town who was not the least zealous of Uncle Sam's servants. One day when the mail bag for that town was thrown from the train the pouch was caught up by this diminutive courier, who started off, as was his wont, on a brisk trot to the post office.

As he was rounding a corner of the station he encountered a larger boy, with the result that the little courier was upset. When the latter got up and readjusted himself he turned upon the other, exclaiming:—

"'Look heah! Yo' wants to be keerful 'bout dis-hihle! When yo' jars me yo' jars de gov'ment of de United States. I carries de mail!'"

"I HAVE a new wrinkle in the matter of fishing yarns," said a New York man who has just returned from his annual trip to the Western lakes. "Don't smile. I'm ready to support this with affidavits. Heard that before, you say? Well, this is truth crying in the wilderness.

"I was after bass on Black Lake, Mich., with a [illegible] casting outfit—light rod and reel and pork minnow on a weedless spoon hook. Standing in my rowboat, just at the edge of shoal water, I was working the reeds, dropping into the thick of them at every cast, when I fetched up with a whale of a strike. I snapped back quickly, trying to rush the fish out into clear water, but he had the start on me, and before I could bring full weight to bear he had taken a twist among the reeds and my line parted.

"Well, you know how it is when you lose a strike. It's always the biggest fish that ever smelled bait, and you're ready to stand on your head with rage. Without any clear purpose I poled with an oar and worked right into the weeds toward the spot where the fish had lain. Futile, of course. But so I did.

"I was right over the spot, saying naughty words and poking along with the oar, when there came a silver green flash from the depths, the surface broke in a shower of spray and a magnificent bass shot into the air. He curved in about a three foot arc and—landed in the boat with me!

"It was the same bass, still hooked on my minnow. The trailing length of line had caught among the weeds. I had considerable difficulty afterward in loosening it. He had sulked until stirred up by my oar. Then, starting at full speed, he had been checked and he whirled up through the air like a hummer on a string, and the force of his leap had carried him back to me.

"I await with calmness the equal of that story, among true stories, of course.

"Weight? Well, between four and a half and five pounds, and big mouth don't grow much larger."

WHEN a prospective voter in one of Chicago's election districts was asked the date of his naturalization he replied that he had taken out his papers so long before that he could not remember just when he had become an American.

The officer to whom this statement was made was extremely thoughtful for a moment. Then he added:—

"Can you remember who was the republican candidate for President that year? Was it Lincoln or was it Grant?"

"Sure, I don't remember who was running for President," was the response, "but it was the same year that Stuffy McGinnis was appointed Dog Drowner."

RETIRING for the night, a tiny maiden climbed into her mother's lap and kissed her on either cheek. Her manner being rather more effusive than usual, it was suspected that a confession would be forthcoming. That was the fact, not long delayed.

"Mamma," said the child, "I've been naughty. I'm afraid the angels have marked my name in the Big Book as a bad girl."

"I hope not, dear," the mother replied. "What have you been doing?"

"It's something I haven't done, mamma," the little girl explained. "I have gone to bed for two weeks without saying my prayers."

"Why, dearie," chided the mother, gently, "that is really serious. What shall we do about it?"

"I've been thinking it over, mamma," the small delinquent said, "and made up my mind to say 'Our Father' and 'Now I Lay Me' every night until I catch up with my prayers."

EVERY evening for three weeks twin brothers had been practising for an amateur band concert. One twin, Joseph, played a cornet, and the other, Joel, operated on the violin. Meeting a young woman, Joseph asked her if she would attend the musical feast.

"Yes," she said, "and I think it will be very nice indeed. I've heard you and your brother practising. That symphony of yours last night on the cornet was exquisite."

Unfortunately the keen edge of this compliment was dulled, because Joseph recalled that he had not played a cornet on the previous night. He had practised on a trombone, but bravely refrained from making an explanation.

"And there was another piece that caught my fancy," the young lady continued. "It seemed like a Wagnerian extract. Do you also play a saxophone?"

"No, miss," was the amateur's admission.

"I wonder what was the other instrument I heard last evening?"

"I can't say positively, miss, but if it was about nine o'clock I think brother Joel was either putting a new string on his violin or tuning the old geese."

Mother Charged With Murder.

Bad Axe, Mich., Dec. 18.—Mrs. Carrie B. Sparling, wife of the late John Wesley Sparling, and mother of Cyril, Albert and Peter Sparling, all of whom are dead, was arrested early last night charged with the death of her son. Mrs. Sparling was taken to jail. The warrant was issued Saturday and Mrs. Sparling was expecting arrest.

"I am resigned to go to jail contentedly and prayerfully," she said in an interview some time before the sheriff arrived. She told of "prayer visions," in which she said she saw Dr. R. A. MacGregor of Ubly robed in white and indicating his innocence, being driven over a precipice by a multitude.

Saturday Dr. MacGregor was held to the Circuit Court, charged with the murder of Cyril Sparling. Miss Marguerite Gibbs, the nurse who also attended the youth, was bound over on a charge of accessory after the fact.

Mrs. Sparling's arrest resulted partly from the testimony of Sheriff McAuley at the MacGregor examination Saturday.

It is reported that the bodies of father and third son are to be exhumed soon.

Reyes Pulls Off Battle.

Mexico City, Dec. 18.—A special despatch to The Herald from Monterey says that a high official at that place has received word from the vicinity of Galeana in the State of Nueve Leon that Gen. Reyes has arrived there and is engaged in recruiting. The some official learns also that a skirmish between federal troops and Reyistas occurred Saturday at Sandoval, near Matamoros, in the State of Tamaulitas. No details of the fighting have been received.

Laredo, Tex., Dec. 18.—Private advices received here Saturday night say that Gen. Geronimo Trevino, in command of the federal army in Mexico, is closing on the Town of Galeana, where Gen. Bernardo Reyes is declared to have established headquarters preparatory to launching a rebellion against the Government of Mexico.

Gen. Trevino has ordered his troops to move hurriedly on Galeana and has informed his officers that Gen. Reyes was accompanied by only five or six men on his trip from the border.

Pinchot Warns Republicans.

Boston, Dec. 18.—That the development of recent months have made impossible the renomination of Mr. Taft and that the country is turning rapidly to LaFollette as the next Republican Presidential nominee, were among the declarations made by Gifford Pinchot, former chief of the U. S. Forest Service, before a gathering of progressive Republicans in Tremont Temple Saturday night.

"Unless the Republican party shall meet the demand of the times by throwing itself squarely into the progressive movements, its time of usefulness is past," said the speaker. "Modern conditions demand modern treatment. The Republican party needs to be cleansed of its open sores."

The gathering was so large that an overflow meeting was necessary.

Girl Babies Taller.

Boston, Dec. 18.—Girl babies are being born taller and with much more vitality than used to be the case, according to an authority in this city. Miss Charlotte W. Dunn, assistant superintendent of a hospital here patronized by the stork to the extent of 3,000 babies a year, says:

"We have noticed that girl babies are getting taller and that they are appearing in this world lately with more vitality than formerly. The boy babies continue on the average in weight and height."

Sank at Her Pier.

Halifax, N.S., Dec. 18.—Early yesterday the coasting steamer Avon, belonging to the Peninsular Steamship Co., sank at her pier. The cook, who was asleep bleow, had time only to spring to the wharf, wearing nothing but his nightclothes. The theory is that the seacock had been turned on, how no one knows, thus allowing the steamer to fill.

Sold Crooked Gambling Outfits.

Chicago, Dec. 18.—Three years in the federal penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth, Kas., was the sentence given Saturday by Judge Landis in the U. S. District Court, to Eugene Stockton who was convicted by a jury of having used the federal mails in disposing of unfair dice, marked cards and crooked gambling devices which he manufactured.

Death List Now 84.

Briceville, Tenn., Dec. 18.—Twenty-one more bodies were found yesterday in the Cross Mountain mine, in which an explosion occurred a week ago yesterday morning. This brings the death list to 84 and President Stevenson of the Knoxville Iron Co., owner of the mine, stated last night that he believed this accounted for every man entombed. Five were rescued. The company has claimed from the first that but 85 men were in the workings when the explosion occurred, but the miners say there were more.

Fifty-nine women were made widows and 147 children left fatherless as a result of the disaster. In addition, there are ten or twelve other dependents. It is probable all bodies will be removed by to-day. Only one of 84 men killed carried life insurance. The relief fund has passed the $20,000 mark.

To Stop Tripoli War Films.

Washington, Dec. 18—Italy, through her ambassador here, Saturday appealed to the State Department to stop the exhibition in the United States of motion pictures alleging to portray the massacre of Arabs and Turks in Tripoli by Italian soldiers. The States Department informed the ambassador that it would do what it could towards stopping the exhibtion of the objectional pictures.

Last of the Tribunes.

Dieppe's Oysters.

Near Dieppe oysters lie in regular rows like the tiles of houses and are always ready to be taken from the beds and sent to market.

N. J. Divorce Was N. G.

Montreal, Dec. 18.—A divorce said to have been obtained in the District Court of New Jersey, failed to meet with recognition at the hands of Judge Charbonneau yesterday when Dame Caroline Francis Smith brought an action against her husband, Henry Charles Cornish, to force him to support herself and her children.

The couple were married in West Ham, Eng., in 1886. Two years ago Cornish left his wife and went to the United States. Here he obtained a divorce and then came to Montreal and is said to be earning $3,000 a year. His wife traced him and, Saturday, despite his plea that the American divorce freed him from all obligations and liabilities, that the judge ordered him to pay his wife $50 a month for twelve months and costs.

Canadians In Georgia Railroad.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 18.—The Georgai Railroad Commission yesterday approved the $47,000,000 stock and bond issue sof the Georgia Railway & Power Co., a consolidation of numerous North Georgia water power electric concerns, financed largely by New York, Boston and Canadian interests.

The company asked permission to capitalize at $27,000,000, and issue $30,000,000 in bonds. The farmer was cut to $17,000,000, while the latter was approved.

Whether this compromise will be accepted will be decided by the company officials in New York this week.

Reick Buys The Sun.

New York, Dec. 18.—The Sun yesterday announced that the controlling interest in The Sun Printing & Publishing Association has been purchased from the estate of Wm. M. Laffan by Wm. C. Reick, who will direct the property in future as president and publisher.

It was added that no further announcement would be made at this time. Mr. Reick, the new proprietor, was for several years general manager of The Times, and also president of The Philadelphia Public Ledger Co. He is 47 years old.

New Uniform Rule.

Ottawa, Dec. 18.—The Minister of Militia is putting into effect a new rule with regard to the selection of uniforms for the militia. Under the old system the cloth for the uniforms was purchased without any stipulation as to color standards, the result being that different regimnets wore varied hues of red or of green, and this has caused comment on review days. Hereafter, the cloth will be manufactured in Canada specially for the militia under the supervision of a textile expert.

Express Case Postponed.

Hamilton, Dec. 18.—The preliminary hearing of Chilman and Acheson, accused of the theft of $8,000 from the Canadian Express Co. last September, which had been set for to-day, has again been postponed, this time until Wednesday of this week, at the request of counsel for the accused, George Lynch-Staunton, who has to go to Ottawa to-day and cannot be present here. Crown Attorney Washington said on Saturday that the hearing in the cases against Acheson and Chilman would certainly be proceeded with on Wednesday.

A WORTHY MOVEMENT

The King's Daughters are arranging to make their annual distribution of Christmas cheer to the poor people of Peterborough. For some time the work has been under way, and is now systematized so that the gifts will be distributed where they will be most appreciated. The King's Daughters, of course, is an organization that is entirely undenominational, and its operations are in the interests of the city, as a whole. There are many homes in Peterborough which will be made brighter by a visit from some of the King's Daughters and the assistance of the general public is requested to further this most praiseworthy movement. Arrangements have been made by which St. John's Sunday School house will be open on Wednesday afternoon of this week to receive donations. Citizens are asked to send in groceries, clothing, money, etc., all of which will be thankfully received.

Holy Ghost Leader Gets Ten Years

NOMINATIONS TO BE HELD ON FRIDAY OF THIS WEEK

List of Places at Which Candidates for the Council May be Nominated---Appeals Respecting the Voters' List Were Heard by Judge Huycke This Morning.

The Aldermanic nomination places for the Municipal elections, to be held on Friday next, have been decided upon as follows:

South Ward—L. Spry's, 210 Stewart street.

North Ward—Mrs. Lee's shop, Simcoe street.

East Ward—Former Village Hall.

The nominations will take place between 12 and 1 noon on Friday.

The Mayoralty, Water Commissioners and Board of Education nominations will take place between 10 and 11 on Friday morning.

His Honour, Judge Huycke, presided this morning at the Court to hear appeals respecting the voters lists. Four appealed to be put on the list and were allowed. Some corrections were also made in the list.

Assessment of City.

At 11.30, His Honour Judge Huycke heard an appeal of the Court of Revison respecting the assessment of the city. There was only one appeal made. Mr. D. O'Connel appeared on behalf of the St. Alphonsus' Lyceum, claiming that they were wrongly and over assessed on their Simcoe street property. Mr. O'Connell was heard and the Court adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

GOOD MEN SHOULD BE NOMINATED ON FRIDAY

Citizens Should See That Men Are Put in the Field Who Are Capable of Negotiating Business Propositions on Behalf of the City--Municipal Slate is Very Light.

The municipal slate this year seems to be very light. At a time when the city needs its best men to come to the front and assume responsibility, things are being let drift. The Board of Trade might facilitate matters by getting some representatives into the field that would be of use to the city, but it does not seem to be able to bestir itself. The nominations for mayor and aldermen will take place on Friday.

Very important business will have to be done during the next year, and it is to be hoped that some of our best citizens and business men will feel the responsibility and allow their names to go before the ratepayers. There are many good citizens who could give the city good service if they would only put their shoulders to the wheel for a year or two. One-half of those elected will be the representatives for two years, and the citizens should see that men capable of negotiating business propositions on behalf of the city, are nominated.

WAR GAME TO BE PLAYED AT ARMOURIES THIS WINTER

Orders have been issued by the officer commanding the 3rd division, to hold what is called a "war game" in Peterborough, in the month of January next, under the control of the G. S. O. of the 3rd division, Major Hordern, and is expected to prove a most interesting and instructive feature in the miltary training of the officers of the local garrison. The nature of the scheme is not yet known, but it is expected that two bodies of troops of all all armies of the service, will be at certain points and will be moved and manoeuvred under the command of the officers taking part, and under conditions as near as possible as might be met in actual warfare. The officers will be divided into two parties, each having command of one body of troops, who will be in separate rooms. The umpire in the third room will note and criticize the moves of the opposing forces. The game will occupy two evenings of three or four hours each, and will require twelve or fifteen officers to take part.

NEW NAVIGATION COMPANY IS TO BE ORGANIZED

(Lindsay Post)

A representative of the Post had a conversation with a gentleman from Peterborough regarding the new navigation company, that is being formed to take the place of the Peterborough-Lake Simcoe, which has gone into liquidation. The Post has it on good authority, that a strong company is being organized for the purpose of operating a first-class line of passenger and freight boats on the canal. The Post's informant was not at liberty to yet make public the names of the gentlemen behind the scheme, but it is understood that they are thoroughly reliable persons, who have given the matter considerable study during the past two months.

"There will be plenty of capital behind the new company," said the Post's informant, "and a much better service will be put on the Lindsay river. A larger boat than the Manita will be on the Lindsay-Sturgeon Point run."

Asked as to whether any new boats would be built, it was intimated that the gentlemen behind the new Company realized that a new and fast boat must be placed on Lake Simcoe. They purpose, therefore, to build a boat that will make from 18 to 20 miles per hour, and having all modern equipment, including dining-room, etc.

It is expected that an official announcement, regarding the composition of the new Company and its policy will be made early in January.

Give The Health Association A "Boost" By Buying Some Stamps

"To do all in our power to win health, and to keep it, is as much one's duty as to be honest." Thus runs one of the mottoes on the pretty calendars for sale in aid of the Peterborough Health Association. To help others to win health—that is the object of this organization, and the duty falls on every healthy citizen of this growing city to lend his assistance. Money is required before the Health Association can do much in combatting tuberculosis in Peterborough. Then in making your Christmas purchases this week, don't forget the pretty calendars, and when sending out your parcels be sure and have them well stamped with the Association stamps. The stamps are only a cent apiece, so anyone can do something, if it is only to buy one of these. Every one who buys a single stamp or a package of 10 cents or 25 cents worth may feel that he is making it possible to do something for the needy consumptive. It is a fight worth while when it is considered that within a decade a decrease of nearly 40 per cent has taken place in this province alone in the death rate from tuberculosis. Buy the stamps at the drug stores, at the banks, or from the children. Be sure and get them. Remember the object.

TO APPOINT COMMISSION

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, DEC. 18.—That the proposed enlargement of the Welland canal will cost from thirty-five to fifty million dollars is the revised estimate given out by the Department of Works to-day. It is probable the question of enlargement will be determined by a commission to be appointed by the government after Christmas.

PEACE IN SIGHT

Effort Being Made to Restore Harmony in China—Definite Results Insisted On

BRITAIN'S ULTIMATUM

Special to The Examiner.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, DEC. 18.—In an upper room in an obscure building in this city to-day the Peace conference is proceeding with the hope of the settlement of China's internal troubles, and reaching a decision as to whether China is to become a Republic or remain a limited Monarchy. All the delegates of the government and revolutionary parties are now here and are tackling the great question with friendly and hopeful anticipation. None but Manchus and Chinese are in the Secret Police Chamber, but the building is being guarded by British Police, and it is understood that Britain has insisted that Conference shall be productive of definite results.

Praise For Conservatory Orchestra

Editor Post Card Column.

Dear Sir,—I was fortunate enough to be present at the Twilight Musicale given under the auspices of the Women's Art Association, last Saturday afternoon. The Conservatory Music Hall was fairly well filled, but it was surprising to me that more people did not take advantage of such an opportunity for hearing good music rendered by those who are making it a special study. The solo work was excellent. The musical numbers by the Conservatory Orchestra showed careful training, being executed with splendid effect. Such an orchestra is an organization of which the citizens of Peterborough may well be proud.

Yours truly,

A MUSIC LOVER.

A Violent Diphtheria Outbreak

Special Wire to the Examiner.

LONDON, ONT., DEC. 18.—The village of Springfield, near here, is in a state of terror owing to a violent outbreak of diphtheria. The County Board of Health has ordered all schools and churches closed and visiting between families to cease till the quarantine is raised. Miss Ethel Hayes, post mistress, is among those who have died of the dread disease.

Exhibition Postponed

BERLIN, GERMANY, DEC. 18. — Owing to the distinct feeling of antagonism to everything British, the promoters of the Anglo-German International Exhibition, have announced the postponement of the same until 1913. This may mean the cancellation altogether.

NEWSPAPERS MUST PAY

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, DEC. 18.— There was an echo of the Dominion elections to-day when the Post Office Department sent bills to various newspapers for the payment of postage on papers sent out to other than subscribers. They range from twenty-five thousand dollars against the Toronto Globe to five dollars. Many papers in Ontario are affected.

APPROPRIATION FOR SOUTH END SEWER WAS NOT SUFFICIENT

$29,917.72 Has Been Expended up to Dec. 15th---Unexpended Appropriations in Other Departments Will be Used---Board of Works Has a Busy Session.

The Board of Works met on Saturday night and transacted considerable business. There were present, Ald. Metheral, chairman, Mayor Morrow, Als. Graham, Brown, Anderson and Duncan.

The chairman reported that John Doig, who had been awarded the contract for snow ploughing in District No. 2, was not doing the work satisfactorily and he was informed, had not a horse fit for the work. Two men, John McFarlane and James McWilliams, were willing to do the work at the terms of Doig's tender.

The Street Commissioner said J. Francis would do it at the same price. He also stated that Doig's sureties had not signed the bond and that they had to engage E. Flaherty to do snow ploughing in that district.

It was moved by the Mayor, seconded by Ald. Duncan, that the work be taken over from John Doig, and that the chairman be instructed to make a contract with James McWilliams to do the work, if satisfactory arrangements can be made with him, and that the city treasurer be authorized to pay for the work done in the district so far, on the certificate of the City Engineer.

Mr. Anderson was present and complained of a building the Radial Railway had erected over their derailing device on Lock street. The matter was referred to the chairman.

A communication from the City Treasurer stated that the expenditure on the south end pumping station, etc. amounted up to Dec. 15th, to $29,917.72, and that the money provided would not complete the work.

On motion of Ald. Anderson, seconded by Ald. Graham, the City Treasurer will be instructed to pay accounts in connection with the sewer work and to use any unexpended appropriations on other accounts, to meet them until the end of the year.

The City Engineer will be asked to report on what the cost would be to extend the drain on Romaine street about 600 feet west of Park street.

A report was read from the City Engineer on the cost of the culverts constructed on Concession street.

On motion of Ald. Graham, seconded by Ald. Duncan, the report was received and the City Treasurer will be instructed to charge the G.T.R. with their part of the work.

Mr. Foy's Remarks Are Resented

Examiner Special:

Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General in the Provincial Government, came in for some warm criticism at the hands of the Independent Labour party. This was because of statements he is alleged to have made after the results of the Provincial election were announced, and concerning the fight put up by Mr. W. Stephenson, the candidate opposing Mr. W. K. McNaught.

After some animated discussion the following resolution, moved by Mr. C. F. Hall and seconded by Mr. F. Martin, was unanimously adopted: "Resolved, that this meeting does most emphatically condemn the language used by the Hon. J. J. Foy after the declaration of the poll, in which he referred in the most contemptuous manner to the lack of oratory of Mr. McNaught's opponent, Mr. W. Stephenson, and further, we are of opinion that the bad taste displayed by Mr. Foy on that occasion does not reflect any credit to him as a Cabinet Minister and a gentleman."

SUMMER COLLECTIONS

The secretary of the Children's Aid Society on Saturday received a cheque for $25 from Mr. Sutherland of Toronto, the secretary-treasurer of the Stoney Lake Cottagers' and Campers' Association, a sum resulting from collections at Sunday services in the Juniper Island pavilion last summer. The society, needless to say, appreciates this substantial assistance.

WATER COMMISSIONERS TRANSACT BUSINESS

A meeting of the Water Commissioners was held this mornng at 11.30, with Mr. T. F. Matthews in the chair, and Mr. W. H. Hill and Mr. W. H. Moore present.

The minutes of the last meeting were dispensed with, after which a letter was received from W. J. Abraham, asking for a reduction in tax. He thought the water rate was too high on his premises. No action was taken.

A communication was received from Mr. E .G. Patterson, Supt. of the C.G.E., with reference to a meter for new supply. It was decided to inform him that all customers must either furnish a meter or pay rental for one.

A request to have an account reduced from Mr. J. Pollard, was referred to the collector, with power to act.

A communication was received from the Goodyear Rubber Co., asking that another cheque be sent to them in place of one that was lost. The cheque will be sent after the necessary precautions to protect the commissioners.

A letter from Mr. W. Kennedy, jr. with reference to venturi meter, was received.

A letter from the Wm. Hamilton Co. with reference to their account, was received. The company considered that the account of $188.41 of the Bishop Construction Co., should not have been charged to them.

Mr .W. H. Moore was authorized to draft a letter notifying the Auburn Power Co. to lower the water and also to consult the City Solicitor in the matter.

"THE COW AND THE MOON"

A brand new musical extravaganza "The Cow and the Moon" is announced for presentation on Friday and Saturday next, with Saturday matinee, at the Grand Opera House. It is Chas. A. Sellon's latest hit, and it is said to be making a bigger hit than any of his former successes, which always proved so amusing when they have been shown in past seasons.

Among the many scenes and effects Mr Sellon presents two new starters the interior of a Pullman Palace Sleeping car, an exact duplicate of one of the latest models, with the entire company in transit across the continent to the land of the moon. Another thriller is the approaching locomotive, commencing with a tiny speck of light in the distance, and gradually approaching, little by little, until the huge hulk of a giant engine appears and stops at the footlights, the grinding of wheels and the brakes, hissing of steam and the clanging of bell is said to be most realistic.

Many other novelties in surprising scenic effects furnish unusual surroundings to the prettily-gowned girls, who interpret the clever music by Carlton Lee Colby. A company of forty people are promised. Seats on sale at Box Office, Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock.

CANOES DAMAGED

Small Fire at the Peterborough Canoe Works on Saturday Was Extinguished by Chemicals

LOSS WILL BE SMALL

Fire broke out in the paint shop of the Peterborough Canoe Company's plant on Saturday evening, and by the time the firemen arrived the blaze was beginning to assume alarming proportions. The firemen, however, were able to subdue the flames with the use of chemicals, alone, but not before considerable damage had been done to a number of freshly-varnished canoes, which were stored in the building. The damage to the canoes was caused, principally, by the smoke and heat.

The fire was caused by spontaneous combustion arising from the deposition of some oily waste behind a steam radiator.

The damage will be in the neighbourhood of $100.

FOUND STONE WHICH MAY BE VALUABLE

A story was current in the city on Saturday evening to the effect that Mrs. John A. Allan had found a pearl valued at $400 in the Spenceley Bros.' Fish Market. This was only partly true as the stone was not a pearl, and as yet has not been identified as any particular species of stone, although a number of prominent jewellers have examined it. It is supposed to be an agate of a rare quality and species, but as to its value, no information has yet been received. It is an exceptionally pretty stone and may be a valuable one.

A RUNAWAY

A furious runaway occurred on Water street this morning, when a cartage horse, attached to a dray, made a wild break for liberty. While careening down Water street, the horse swerved, causing the dray to come in contact with a telegraph pole, and badly damaging the wagon. This only served to make the animal run faster. It tore across the market square and defied the efforts of several pedestrians to stop it. During its mad pursuit across the market square it narrowly escaped colliding with a buggy driven by a farmer. It was finally rounded up on George street little the worse for its escapade.

WEDDING BELLS

FISHER—KELLY.

A pretty and interesting event took place on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 12, at "The Maples," Cavan, the home of Mr. T. A. and Miss Kelly, when their youngest sister, Miss Ethel, was united in marriage with Mr. T. E. Fisher, Collingwood. Rev. Mr. Johnston of Millbrook, performed the ceremony. The bride was given in marriage by her brother. She wore a beautiful gown of tan broadcloth, veiled with gold-embroidered chiffon and coral applique trimming, and also wore a topaz necklet, the gift of the groom, and carried an armful of American Beauty roses.

The table in the tea room was tastefully decorated with pink and white carnations and smilax. After the wedding dejeuner, Mr. and Mrs. Fisher left by C. P. R. for a trip to Toronto, Guelph, and other points.

Upon their return they will reside in Collingwood, Ont.

The young couple were unattended and were the recipients of many beautiful and costly presents.

RAILWAY NOTES

Yesterday was the first close day on the G. T. R. subdivisions, and hereafter for a period of three months only one freight train will be allowed to run on Sunday over subdivision lines. This action follows on order issued by the Dominion Alliance. The "Moonlight" made her regular trip last night, and was several hours late, having been delayed at Port Hope. The delay was caused by the shunting engine crashing into the rear end of the train, and wrecking the caboose.

THE COLLAR OF JUDGMENT

Once on a time in Erin olden
A judge was given a collar golden;
The "collar of judgment" he must wear,
A most embarrassing collar truly,
For whenever he gave his judgment duly,
If ever he happened to be unfair,
The collar closed on his neck so bare,
And simply strangled him then and there.

And sure the modern law of recall
Couldn't beat that collar at all, at all;
For when the judge only loses his job,
But the collar collared his life, begob.

REVENUE ROLLS IN.

The spell of the Laurier Government seems still ot operate—where it cannot be affected by the machinations of the Conservative-Nationalist Borden Government. The revenue resulting form the good times that came to Canada with the Laurier Government, still rolls in. During the eight months of the current fiscal year the aggregate revenue of Canada was $87,886,948, an increase of over $12,000,000 over the corresponding period of last year. When the Liberals came into office the condition of the treasury was quite the contrary—not enough revenue to meet current expenses, and a huge deficit to boot. A country could not have been very badly governed that increased its revenue three times over in fifteen years. The Borden Government isn't bothered with the question of revenue—it is left free to give its undivided attention to finding jobs for its friends to fatten on the revenue.

SORROWS OF A CABINET MINISTEH.

Hon F. D. Monk, the leading Nationalist member of the Borden coalition government, doesn't find office a bed of roses. At a recent dinner he said: "I thought a Cabinet minister's life merely meant smoking good cigars and handing out soft jobs. Now, I find there are many problems to face and much work to be done." Mr. Monk has done his best to shelve some of the work. He has conveyed to Mr Borden, the dictum of Mr. Bourassa, that this foolish imperialism must be laid aside. Mr. Monk was glad the naval question, under the same influence, had been laid to one side. He complained, in his speech, that the new ministers were besieged with office-seekers, and that their work was hampered by the importunely of those looking for plums. Mr. Monk should get Mr. Bourassa to allow Mr. Borden to reform the civil service and place it in the hands of a commission apart from partizan influence. The ministers would then be comparatively free to do their duty without the handicap of cutting off official heads, and of the problem of fitting twenty clamouring heads to one pair of shoulders. The Borden Government has adopted, in its most vicious form, the spoils systems of the United States, and it has laid up for itself so much trouble that it cannot perform its official duties. It has disturbed the popular idea of representative institutions. It is showing that a million or more people went to the trouble to vote on Sept. 21st. merely to give offices to an army of political heelers.

A SHOCK FROM OTTAWA.

Keen disappointment is expressed in Great Britain over the present Canadian Government's revocation of the naval policy of its predecessor. According to the Manchester Guardian, a serious injustice and loss has been inflicted upon several great British shipbuilding firms. To quote

"The programme comprised four cruisers of the Bristol type, and six destroyers of the river class, and as it was stipulated that the vessels should be built in the Dominion, and as far as possible of Canadian material, several of the firms that had tendered had gone the length of laying down the necessary plant. For instance, Messrs. Denny Bros., of Dumbarton, have acquired an interest in an establishment at Esquimault, British Columbia; the Fairfield Company, Govan, and Messrs. John Brown & Co., Clydebank, are jointly concerned with a yard at Sydney, Cape Breton; and Messrs. Vickers, Limited, Barrow, have planned their scene of operations at Montreal. A good deal of the expenditure associated with these enterprises will not, of course, be entirely unproductive, for it is the intention of the firms in question to develop the shipbuilding industry in Canadian territory, but naturally they have been put to considerable expense in preparing estimates that will not now, apparently, serve any useful purpose."

The Guardian adds that the Canadian change of plans has been "a shock to British Conservatives," and that it is "doubtless a concession to his Nationalist allies" by Mr. Borden In this the Guardian makes something better than a shrewd guess. And to think it was Mr. Borden who a little more than a year ago gave his blessing to the Canadian navy project as an assurance of the revival of Canada's ocean shipbuilding industry!—London Advertiser.

LOST THEIR VOTES.

The Borden government has its work cut out for it. It got a mandate to break trade relations with the United States; it was told by an overwhelming popular vote, that it was traitorous and disloyal to trade with our neighbours to the south; and now the hydra must be crushed, and it's going to be a bigger contract than was expected. In spite of traiff barriers, Canada's trade is increasing with the United States in a manner most disgusting—to the trade restrictionists. In a moment of weakness, according to the same influences, the Liberal government provided for the admission of British goods into Canada at a customs rate one-third less than from the United States. Yet we find that our annual imports from the United yStates are three hundred millions to one hundred million from Britain. The people showed their loyalty by electing the new government on the grounds of hostility to dealing with our neighbours, and yet they still disloyally, persist in selling things to, and buying things from, the United States. This is no surprise, for the United States has a big natural store house of many hings we want to buy in the most convenient market, and they provide a steady demand for many things we have to sell and want to sell in the most convenient market. The people had a chance to do their trade on more profitable terms — exchanging commodities "on the ground floor," instead of derricking them over a high tariff wall. But they preferred to sacrifice the opportunity. As time goes on the people will see more plainly, and feel more keenly that they were deluded into voting against their own interests, not only in trade matters, but in other things. The people have got all they voted for in the matter of trade restriction and have got a mighty deal they didn't vote for. They voted for a solid British Canada, they voted for an end to "French domination," and they find themselves at the beginning of a malign, michievous and disloyal French dominance, that is the real thing, not a fancy. The electors must have had bees in their bonnets, when in the face of plain warning, they voted for a swarm of B's — Borden, Burnham, Bourassa, Blondin—under the delusion that they were voting for that other big B. Britain, only to find that they were, in reality, voting for the predominance of everything hostile to Britain. Bourassa, Blondin and Nationalism have not changed, but the other B's, like a tree-toad, have taken on the colour of their new environment, and that colour is the tri-colour. Thousands of Liberals "lost their votes" by sustaining the defeat of their cause. Thousands of Conservative, by gaining their cause, have lost their votes ten times more disastrously than their Liberal opponents. They have not got what they voted for, and seem to have got everything, almost, and in the most poisonous form, they voted against.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Premier Borden seems to think independence in politics a crime. After the elections he professed to be truly grateful for the support misgnided Liberals gave him in gaining power. Now he rewards Liberal support by hitting a Liberal head wherever it appears in an office that belongs to a member of the dominant party.

Since there must be a Tariff Commission, the question to be honest about is, says the Montreal Herald, whether it is designed to get at the truth or whether it is designed to give a particular class of people what they want. If it is to hold the balance evenly between them and consumers, its membership should be named with that end in view and given instructions accordingly. If the design is merely to see how the idea of tariff protection can be applied so as to produce the greatest good for the greatest number of manufacturers, then there is something to be said for the plan adopted in England, where those who want the protection appoint and maintain their own Tariff Commission.

USING THE GUILLOTINE.

(Ottawa Free Press.)

Over one hundred and twenty employees of the Public Works department yesterday received notice that after to-day their services would be no longer required.

What a series of tragedies this means for many families in Ottawa just on the eve of the Christmas season!

If those men had been employed by private business firms, they would have received some sort of notice. Even if it had only been a week's notice, it would have given them time to look around. But because the men affected happened to have discharged their duties as electors of the country and cast their ballots on September 21 last, they are sacrificed to the "hungry horde" of whom Dr. Chabot and Mr. Fripp are already feeling quite sick.

In 1896, Hon. G. E. Foster, then as now the lieutenant of the leader of the Conservative party, made the declaration that any public employee against whom a charge of partizanship was laid would be given a chance of investigation. In that attitude he was supported by the then leader of the Conservative party, Sir Charles Tupper, and by no less a person than Mr. R. L. Borden, in his first speech in the House of Commons.

In how many cases of the one hundred and twenty odd men who got their dismissals yesterday, was there an investigation? Were there one hundred? Were there fifty? Were there twenty? Was there one?

Our information is that in not a single case was there any investigation; that the edict went forth from the Castle building "five o'clocks" that these men had to go; and go they will.

But what becomes of the pledges of public men as regards private citizens, which are involved in this case.

There must be some final board of appeal. It may not exist under the present government, but it will certainly find a place somewhere in public opinion when the facts are made known, as they must be made known.

A SUGGESTION RE NEW BRIDGE

To the Editor of The Examiner,—

Dear Sir,—It was with a certain degree of appreciation that I read the letter signed "A Ratepayer," contained in Saturday night's issue of The Examiner relative to the necessity of a bridge for the south, near the C. P. R. track. While his would, no doubt, be a great convenience, it seems to be the concensus of opinion in the south of East City that the suggestion of Aldermen Duncan and Graham, as to a bridge from Sherbrooke street to Maria street, would be more satisfactory. It seems a pity that the city aldermen should confine their efforts to the Auburn bridge when as yet the residents of the south end have no bridge at all Such a bridge would be a great convenience to those passing to and from East City.

Fithfully yours,

Politics And Business Management Prove An Incompatible Mixture

(Manitoba Free Press.)

The increased telephone rates, which are the occasion of one of the most remarkable manifestations of public indignation in the history of Manitoba, are the inevitable result of the methods of the Provincial Government in regard to the telephone system, ever since the taking over, at a valuation which was $1,000,000 too high, of the Bell Telephone Company's system. The excessive purchase price which Premier Borden and his colleagues saddled upon the Province has been from the first an obstacle to the successful working of the Government-owned telephone system, upon which has hung more heavily the dead weight of machine politics.

When, in April last, very substantial increases were made in the night rates of long distance telephones, the Free Press quoted the emphatic declaration made in December, 1906, by Premier Roblin and by Mr. Colin H. Campbell, that the Bell Telephone rates then in operation were excessive and would be cut down to "less than half." In commenting on the long distance rates then introduced, which are decidedly higher than the Bell Telephone rates were, the Free Press said, on April 13 last: "Such are the promises, and now "we are having the performance. The "Government, so far as the long distance telephone is concerned, has "made the burden heavier year by "year, and no doubt the end of the "increases is not in sight. It is only "a question of time—and not distant "time at that—when rates corresponding to the increases which are now to "be made in the long distance service "will be applied to the local ex"changes."

The increases then plainly foreseen are now announced, and the expressions of indignation which they have aroused are entirely just and well deserved. They are not condemnations of the principle of public ownership of public utilities ;they are condemnations of the injury done to that principle by politicians who are its enemies, and who have been masquerading as its friends. The Telephone Commission is under the direct control of the Manitoba Government, and this control has been constantly exercised to the political advantage of the Government and to the detriment of the service.

In consequence of the excessive price which the Province was made to pay by the Roblin Government for buying out the Bell Telephone system in Manitoba, and in consequence, too, of the defective management due to political interference, the telephone system has not paid its way even at the high rates which have been enforced, in violation of the specific pre-election pledges that the Bell Telephone rates were to be more than cut in half. It is true that for the years 1908 and 1909 alleged surpluses amounting to $273,219 were proclaimed by the Government, and this amount of telephone money was taken out of the telephone system and used by the Government for its current expenditures.

As the Free Press showed clearly at the time, those alleged surpluses faded away upon analysis of the figures. The accounts made no provision for a contingent fund, nor for the sinking fund to retire the bonds, and the allowance for maintenance was absurdly inadequate. It is clear that the deflection of that aggregate of $273,219 of telephone money into the current revenues of the Roblin Government was an absolutely unwarranted proceeding. That transferring of telephone money into current revenues made the Government telephone system an instrument of direct taxation; nearly one-fifth of the money paid by telephone users went, not to pay for the telephones, but for expenditures by the Roblin Government which had nothing to do with telephones. This is a direct contradiction to the repeated pledges of Premier Roblin and his colleagues that telephone users should get their telephones at cost.

In this connection a sample of the clarion appeals that were made to the electors of Winnipeg and of the Province at large by the Provincial Government's newspaper may well be repeated here:

"Citizens of Winnipeg, you have an opportunity that may not come to you again—an opportunity to assert your independence of a corporation which exists only to pay high dividends and pile up enormous surpluses out of YOUR HARD-EARNED MONEY to swell the coffers of American millionaires. Let your ballot indicate that you are in favour of owning and operating your own telephone service."

When next the Roblin Government goes before the electorate for judgment on its record, what will the ballots indicate?

TWILIGHT MUSICALE

Considerable interest is being taken in the work of the W.A.A., in the direction of Twilight Musicales, as was evidenced in the large attendance at the recital held at 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon last.

Some specially selected music was rendered by capable artistes, while the termination of the recital was rendered appropriate by the inclusion of a Christmas fantasia entitled "Yuletide."

The programme, the appreciation of which was apparent by the applause with which each item, was as follows:

Scenes from Faust ..... Gounod
Conservatory Orchestra.
Tenor Solo, "The Gift" .. Behrend
Mr. Wright.
Prayer from Stradella ..... Flotow
Conservatory Orchestra.
Violin Solo, Seventh Concerto ..... De Berriott
Andante, Allegro
Mr. Wm. Wilson.
Selection from Trovotore .... Virdi
Conservatory Orchestra.
Baritone Solo, "Far Away" ..Lindsay
Mr. Asa Huycke
Christmas Fantasia, "Yuetide" ..... Kappay

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

THE other day, I heard a great scholar say that he did not think he should have been half the student and scholar that he is, if it had not been for a dictionary, which a dear old friend gave him, when he was a little boy, and which he had kept by him and consulted all his childhood.

The words of this scholar started a train of thought in regard to the innumerable little influences like this one which shape our lives. We talk a great deal about "self-made men," but who is self-made, or anywhere near self-made in this world of myriad influences — influences as complex and intertwined as the wires and bars of some great mechanism, and as inevitable as the workings of that machine.

It seems to me it would be interesting for all of us to pause occasionally and review some of these influences.

The man I spoke of, gave emphatic credit to the gift of the dictionary, but there were doubtless innumerable other influences as important that helped make him what he is. There was some great book which he read at just the right moment, some fine personality that touched him with its fire, some one gripping sermon, some opportunity to do just the right sort of work which a watchful friend pointed out—all these influences are countless others, multiplied by his own inherent force of brain and character, made the product of his present greatness.

Because he is so great a man, I cannot think of humble things in connection with him, but in our more modest lives, there are innumerable humbler influences that help make us whatever we are. For example, in my own life, much credit belongs to the donor of a working desk for whatever system, or method, a personality which naturally lacked these merits, has developed The systematic looking pigeonholes, drawers and files, have placed a premium on system and method, and demanded them of me so emphatically that I have really been forced to try to meet these demands.

The man who introduced you to the man who gave you a chance to show what you could do, the person who criticized and made you ashamed of some bad or inefficient habit, the person who interested you in some line of work in which you afterwards found your niche, the one who gave you or called your attention to some book which had a deep effect upon you, the big personalty that furnished you with an ideal to struggle towards—don'tforget to reckon all these and all the rest among your debts of influence.

And having reckoned the debt, what then?

Well, in the first place, I hope you will scan this mental account and lay it down more humble, grateful, and more eager to pay a little of it by your services to and influence upon others.

And in the second place, do not forget that you can pay another small portion—as the scholar did—by acknowledgment — acknowledgment and thanks to your creditors, if they are within reach, acknowledgment and praise to the world at large if they are not.

INSPIRING ADDRESS AT PARK STREET CHURCH LAST EVENING

Rev. Mr. Riddiford Deals With a Live Topic in an Able Manner---Sermon Was One of a Special Series---Large Congregation Turned Out.

In the Park street Baptist church last night, the pastor, Rev. W. C. Riddiford continued his series of special sermons, his subject being, "A question for dead beats and debtors." There was a large congregation present. Following is a synopsis of the most excellent sermon:

Paul, in Romans, 12:17, says: "Provide things honest, in the sight of all men." Paul meant to say, "Do business out in the open and above board. Don't sell watered stock, or wheat not yet grown. Provide things honestly in the sight of all men." That is sound advice.

Then in Romans, 13:8, Paul says: "Owe no man anything. Do a cash business, as far as you can. Don't wilfully and unnecessary become the slave of debt.

Some one put this question in the box at the door, "Should the house of God be in debt; if so, how far?" In brief I would answer that question in a common sense way, and say that no church should wilfully and without just cause, go in debt. As to how far a church should go in debt will, it seems to me, depend upon the financial backing of the church. Personally, I think if there was less style in church buildings, and more conformity to the comforts of church goers, we would accomplish more with the money we put into church buildings. More regard taken to ventilation and less clamoring after perfect Gothication, the common run of people, would be better suited.

To put a heavy mortagage upon Gods' house, without a just cause, is a crime. To move out of a comfortable, well-equipped house of God, and build an expensive one, just to boast that you have the best church building in the city, is a motive both base and foreign to the ideals of the church of Christ. The church of Christ does not consist of a fine Gothic stone structure, with a fine pipe organ, a gowned choir and a salaried preacher, whose chief object is to please men, instead of glorifying God, and bringing the gospel to the tired toilers of this sinful earth. No, we are running mad in an endeavour to outdo other churches. It is this kind of spirit that inflicts unnecessary debts upon the churches, and stops the progress of the gospel.

Let us have the best churches our money can build, but let us not waste Gods' money in needless expenditure, such as gowns and pictures and all the rest, and when the occasion demands, let us go in debt, but not before.

This habit of going in debt, of owing the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, is a costly habit. It costs money and joy. No man can do his best work who is continually reminded that he owes money to his neighbours. And no church member can be happy in the church, when he has to be constantly reminded, that he is behind in his financial obligation. Some people seem to think that joining a church means a cancelling of all their debts. If there is one person above another, who should honestly try and pay their debts, it is a Christian man or woman.

Gipsy Smith tells of a certain man, who professed conversion, and united with the church. A short time afterwards, his grocer met him and said, "Well, John, now that you are a Christian, I suppose you will try and pay your back debts." "Oh, glory hallelujah," replied John, "the dear Lord has forgiven all my sins, and your bill was one of them."

Zaccheus had the right idea of conversion "If I have taken anything unjustly from any man, I will restore him four-fold, that is the principle, restitution and redemption go together."

The consciousness of such obligaton interferes with one's friendship and social relations, and causes untold misery. Debt is the cause of more trouble than any other one cause. It is said more people commit suicide on account of debt than for any other reason. My advice to young married people who are starting out in life is, don't go into debt at the beginning of your married life. If you can't afford two chairs, buy one. You both sat on one before you were married, why not afterwards. Do that or use a trimmed up box.

Debt is a hard master, a tyrant who is merciless, a Shylock skulking around with balances for the flesh and with a hand for the ducats. There is no getting rid of him, and the longer he is put off the more greedy and eager he becomes. It is a fact, that the majority of people are in debt, and the more prosperous the times, the greater the financial obligations. Fashion, lust, greed, create debt. One beautiful hat in the community, means other beautiful hats. Now, I have no objections to beautiful hats, but frankly I do detest these world-wide in circumference concerns, with fixed bayonets, that some folks wear now. The historian of the twentieth century will write of it: "It was a crooked and stiff-necked generation, and it will be the ladies' fault, for wearing such hats or decorated barrels. Now, have pity upon the man behind the hat, for it's the man behind the hat that does the work and pays for the hat; unless you are an independent old maid, and perhaps that is not your fault.

There is too much needless imitation to-day in dress, in education, etc. Society is all right in its place, but its place is within its own circle. This trying to keep-up business is ruinous to the home, the state and the church. Canada doesn't need dreadnoughts. She can spend her money in better channels. At least I think so. I suppose I have a right to think, as nobody owns my thinker. But we must leave that to the peoples' government. They can tax most everything else. The rich are copied by the poor, and running through all shades of society is the passion for the fine linen and sumptuous repast. The result is that many people spend more than they earn, and live beyond their means.

True, living is pretty high just now, but what are we living for? Let us hope, not to be millionaires. It must be a trying experience, this being a millionaire, this coming down to the sunset of life with $300,000,000 dollars and a guilty conscience to get rid of. But its perils are so far removed from most of us that we need not worry along that line, as John D. Rockefeller and others do. The fellows who are compelled to hustle for their ham and eggs and pay for them, are usually more happy and more contented than the fellows who have more than they know what to do with. Work is an untold blessing.

Yes, this is the gospel of labour,
Ring it ,ye bells of the kirk,
That the Lord of love,
Came down from above
To live with the men who work.
This is the rose He planted:
Here in this thorn-cursed soil,
Heaven is blest, with perfect rest,
But the blessing of earth is toil.

A good many people are like a certain tramp, who was asked by the police magistrate why he didn't work: "Please yer honour, me father was a man of action, and I'm the re-action; it ain't my fault at all at all."

Now, I am not arguing for a contemptible economy. I believe workingmen should have as many luxuries as they can afford, and the greatest luxuries that can come to the honest sons of toil, who are the backbone of the empire are: An eight hour work-day; a free Sunday and fair wages for a fair day's work.

Now, debt is a good thing sometimes, an absolute necessity. It is the economic salvation of some men and churches, since it imposes an obligation and gives responsibility. Nations, cities, states go in debt for their own good.

There are three kinds of debt. First, there is the debt based on expediency; second that of necessity, and third that which is unecessary. The third kind is the kind I am arguing against. The passion for spending money foolishly and lavishly is wicked. Let a man have what he can afford. Strictly speaking, perhaps, it is none of our business how much people spend beyond their means; but, economically, it does concern us, since we are bound up in social laws that no man can live beyond his means without affecting all other men.

In starting out in life, it is well for us to know the value of a dollar, and to know how to make and spend it. One of the perils of debt is the difficulty of getting out. It is a pit into which it is easy to fall but very hard to get out. Many are the friends who give you a push into the hole, but few are the ones who are willing to help you out. Do you know, that multitudes spend their lives with their families in this hell-hole. One way to get out of debt is to stop making new debts, and 'do it now.' It is hard I know, but the sacrifice will pay. Swallow your pride. Put your foot on the first round of the ladder of financial freedom, and climb till you stand a free man, emancipated from the awful thralldom of unnecessary debt. Take your wife into your confidence, if you have one. If not ,get one.

Many a man would be better off, financially, if he handed the purse over to his wife, for whatever we may say jestingly about the extravagance of women, I believe they are, with, of course, some exceptions, more economical than men. A woman is always looking for an article worth a dollar for ninety-nine cents. She is always economical when she has to buy and pay for her own bull dresses and hats. Quit drinking, men; your wife has as much right to spend money on dress as you have on the devil's slop. Quit betting, it is just the devil's way of wasting God's time and money.

Provide things honest in the sight of all men. Be honest. Pay your just debts .Settle up as soon as possible. Owe no man anything. Don't be a dead-beat any longer. Go away from God's house with a determination to get out of debt. Don't rob God of the life He gave His Son's precious blood to save. You are not your own; ye are but the price. Therefore, glorify God in your body and spirit, which are His. Provide things honest in the sight of men. Owe no man anything. Honesty is not only the best policy; it is the right thing, and when you leave this world, some Burns, perchance, will write over your grave:

"An honest man here lies at rest,
As e'er God with his image blest;
The friend of man, the friend of truth,
The friend of age, and guide of youth;
Few hearts like him, with virtue warmed,
Few hearts with knowledge so informed;
If there's another world, he lives in bliss,
If there is none, he made the best of this.—Amen.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC

Enjoyable Selections by the Charlotte St. Methodist Church Choir

Owing to the fact that a number of the members will be out of the city next Sunday, special Christmas music was given by the choir of the Charlotte Street Methodist Church yesterday, the services being greatly enjoyed by the congregation. The choir handled the chorals and anthems splendidly, while the quartette thems splendidly, while the quartette ably; Miss Pringle sang the solo, "Night of Nights" at the evening service most sweetly. Following is a list of the music:

Morning.

Carol—"Gloria in Excelsis Deo" ...
Anthem, "Sing O Heavens"—Gaul.
Quartette, "Sweet Christmas Bells"—Towner—Messrs. Lee, Fleming, Downey and Skitch.

Evening.

Carols — "Silvery Stars," Simper; "On the Birthday of the Lord"—Dykes; "Softly the Night is Sleeping"—Simper.
Anthem, "O Holy Night" — Buck.

SPECIAL SERMON TO YOUNG MEN

Rev. Mr. Cragg Gives an Eloquent and Helpful Address to a Large Congregation Last Evening.

SPECIAL MUSIC

The service at the Mark Street Methodist church last evening was of special interest, due, principally, to the splendid sermon to young men, which the Rev. C. E. Cragg, B. D., the pastor, eloquently delivered.

It was evident, by the very large attendance, that words of special spiritual benefit were anticipated, and this assumption proved to be correct. What rendered the service additionally attractive was the splendid vocal music provided by the Harmony Quartette, while a special male choir of 20 voices led in the singing of the hymns.

The preacher chose for his subject "Is a young man safe" and in the course of his sermon he said:

"Absalom was a physically perfect young man, yet, when he reached the age of maturity he conspired against his father, in order to gain the throne. Thus, he fell, although brought up in the fear of the Lord by a pious parent. Is it not possible then for other young men to fall? One might say: 'When I become aged I will serve God, but while I am young I am going to have a good time! Young man, God wants you now, when the bloom of youth is on your cheek; when you are full of the vitality of life.

There is a great need of having a lofty purpose in life. Aim high! How strange it is that some men have no purpose in life. No writer would write a book without first outlining his story. I say the first thing is to have a purpose in life. Then there is a great need of looking after your body. A good physique is a great thing in life. But another thing and a thing of infinitely greater importance is the elevation of our minds. It is the man that can work with both his body and his brain that will prosper.

Every young man should have in him the love of home. You know everything has a home. Corn will not grow in England; oranges and peaches will not grow in the West; you cannot make a lion stay in the Arctic Zone. Everything has a place where it can bring its life to a development. Don't forget the home of your mother! How apt we are just to forget the loved ones at home. Another thing, get a home of your own. Large means are not necessary for the success of a home, but the right kind of life is required. You men know that while you are at work you long for the time when you will be able to return to your home and sit by the fire. So it is with life and death. The lives of all must end, and we should strive to obtain that home which awaits us above. I want you young men to give yourselves to God to prevent after regrets. One of the saddest things in life is for an old man to sit and ponder over the sins of his early days.

When you have a bilious attack give Chamberlain's Tablets a trial. They are excellent. For sale by all dealers.

UNDERTAKERS WORRIED OVER THE NEW ACT

(Toronto Star)

Considerable apprehension is felt among the local and Provincial undertakers regarding the third, fifth, and eighth clauses of "The Embalmers' Act," recently enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Ontario, and which is to go into force in January.

The clauses in question read:

3. The Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council may appoint a Board of Examiners consisting of five persons practically conversant with the business of embalming who shall, subject to regulation,

(a) Prescribe the subjects in which candidates for certificates of qualification as embalmers shall be granted.

(b) Conduct examinations of candidates or provide for and supervise the examination of candidates for such certificates and report thereon to the Minister.

(c) Issue licenses and certificates of qualification to applicants therefor who have passed such examinations or are otherwise entitled thereto.

5. The Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council may appoint one of the members of the board or some other persons to be the secretary of the board.

8. Every person engaged in or carrying on the business of embalming in Ontario at the time of the passing of this Act and who applies to the board for a certificate of qualification before the first day of July 1, 1911, shall, upon furnishing such evidence of sobriety, good character and experience as the board may require, and upon payment of the prescribed fee, be entitled to receive a certificate of qualification from the board.

"The five members that constitute the board referred to," stated The Star's informant, "have not as yet been appointed. Indeed, in all probability they will not be until after the forthcoming election and in the meantime we're on pins and needles for the personnel of the board will determine whether it is to be beneficial or detrimental to the profession.

"Our chief complaint is against clauses '3' and '5', which make the board an appointed one. We believe that it should be an elective body responsible to the undertakers as is the Ontario Medical Council. To have the standard of our profession raised is furthering our interests, but we feel that we ought to have some say in the matter, and not be governed arbitrarily by a board, the officers of which may have procured appointment not wholly by virtue of their merit. We believe that we are in a better position to select the men fitted to discharge the duties of the office than any man or body of men not identified with our profession.

"In the 8th clause the danger and the cause of some little consternation among the older members of the profession lies in the interpretation that will be given the third requirement, 'experience as the board may require'. If the board requires but an assurance of a practical knowledge of embalming, then, well and good, but if a comprehensive technical knowledge is required it will weed out a considerable number of the old-established embalmers who are too far advanced in years to readily acquire a technical knowledge of the subject. We think it is only fair to the older men, who have been practising successfully for some time that they be allowed, on demonstrating their ability, to continue in practice without passing a technical examination. This privilege or right was granted the druggists, when they were up against a similar proposition some years ago.

"As far as the young men are concerned I think it would be an excellent thing for the profession if a comprehensive knowledge of the technical as well as the practical end of embalming is required. This is for permitting them to practice."

CONTINUATION CLASS AT ENNISMORE

Editor Post Card Column.

Dear Sir,—For the benefit of the Times correspondent, who signs himself "Protestant," and for the information of the public, I submit the following report of the Ennismore Continuation Class since 1907, the first year any pupils from this school wrote on the departmental examinations. Since that time the following students were successful in passing the Normal entrance: Clara Young, Frank Moloney, Clara Galvin, Lena Moloney, Greta Clarke, Michael Perdue, Beatrice Crough, Kathleen Moloney, Clare Moloney, Vernie Galvin, Lila Hickey, William Moloney, Joseph English and Maggie Perdue. Two of the above, Frank Moloney and Joseph English passed with honours. The following, in addition, passed the prescribed examination for entrance to the Model school: Michael Perdue, Cyrenus Flaherty, Gertrude Carew, Margaret Perdue, Mary Costello, Beatrice Crough, Mary English, Kathleen Moloney, Maria Perdue, Michael J. Fitzpatrick, Mark Crough, Emmett Crough. This makes fourteen, who passed for Normal entrance, and twelve for Model entrance. How different from "Protestant's" statement in the Times. But anything to catch votes on the eve of an election. The more ignorance a man possesses the greater is his presumption. Truly fools rush in where angels fear to tread.

DID WHAT SHE HOPED

It is a real pleasure to find that something you have bought is just as good as you hoped it would be, and Mrs. Charles Proper of West Scranton, Pa., writes a letter to tell others her experience. She says:

"I was all run down and very weak, and had been so for three years. I am sure that Vinol has helped me very much, for four bottles of it have brought back my strength, which is just what I was told it would do."

When we recommend Vinol for all weak and run-down people and those who have stubborn coughs, lack of appetite, sleeplessness and nervous conditions, we do so because we are absolutely convinced that it is just what they need. Then if Vinol does not satisfy them perfectly we give back the money. You ought to try Vinol if you wish to be strong and well for you take no risk at all. DEATH OF OTTAWA CITY COLLECTOR

The death of Mr. G. W. Seguin, the Ottawa City Collector, on Wednesday last, is a distinct loss to the Capital. He was one of the most valued and most popular officials at City Hall, and his decease leaves a vacancy which it will be hard to fill. He succumbed to a severe attack of inflammation of the lungs, which developed into pneumonia. He was only ill for a few days.

Mr. Seguin was born in St. Andre Avellin, P. Q., 46 years ago, and came to Ottawa when quite young. He received his education at the local university, where he was distinguished for those qualities of mind and heart which endeared him to his professors and his fellow-students. For ten years past he was City Collector of Ottawa, and he brought to the office not only a more than ordinary ability as an accountant, but especially an integrity of character that was beyond suspicion and a capacity of dealing with the public that won universal esteem.

Mr. Seguin was also President of the great French-Canadian Mutual Benefit Association, L'Union St. Joseph, and it was largely due to his ability and tact that this Society has had such marked success in recent years. He wa a wise and prudent director, whose ideals were lofty and whose counsel far-seeing and judicious.

But his greatest praise is that he was a broad-minded citizen and a sincere and practical Catholic. Everything was subordinated in him to his high conception of duty. He was a quiet man, no seeker after vain notoriety, or the glamour of office, but one who sought before all else the satisfaction of a life well spent in the welfare and uplifting of his fellow-man. Besides his wife, he leaves three sons, Rev. Lionel Seguin, a student at the Canadian College in Rome; George Frederick, dentist of Manchester, U.S., and Avite, of Ottawa. He is also survived by two daughters, Alice and Aline, at home.—Catholic Register, Dec. 14.

Note.—Deceased was book-keeper for Cory and Laverdure, contractors for the Hydraulic Lift Lock, and was well known here, where his death will be deeply regretted.

MISS PITTS IS SUPERINTENDENT

HASTINGS ITEMS OF INTEREST

Examiner Special.

HASTINGS, DEC. 18.—The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was dispensed in the Presbyterian Church on Sunday morning, Rev. D. A. Thomson officiating. Preparatory services were held the previous Friday, when the sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. McDonald of Warkworth.

Election day passed off very quietly in the village, the electors being satisfied to poll their vote and return to their homes.

The extremely mild weather of the past week has put a stop to skating and lovers of this sport are daily hoping for the return of the frosty weather.

A committee meeting was held on Thursday evening to discuss plans for helping the Local Option campaign, now on foot, in town.

The Auxiliary of the W. M. S. of the Methodist Church held their regular monthly meeting on Thursday last, in the church parlour, when the programme took the form of a Christmas service.

Mr. McCallum of Tweed, has been a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Doxsee.

Mr. S. Wildman and little daughter of Norwood, were in town on Tuesday.

Mrs. Wm. Tate returned during the past week from Campbellford, feeling much improved in health.

We are pleased to be able to state that Mr. J. Wills is recovering from his recent illness.

The pulpit of the Methodist Church was occupied Sunday morning by Mr. Moore of Campbellford.

Miss Gladys Stevenson has been visiting her grand-parents Mr. and Mrs. J. Beavis.

Mr. J. McCarthy of Peterborough, was a recent visitor under the parental roof.

Mr. and Mrs. H. McKay of Otonabee, spent Wednesday with friends in this vicinity.

A number from this section attended the public auction sale on Wednesday, at the farm of Mr. White on the Norwood road.

Mrs. (Dr.) Clemens of Warkworth, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. A. Bailey.

Mr. Hunter of Manitoba, is spending a holiday with friends in town.

Mr. J. Carter was in Peterborough one day during the past week.

Our local merchants have their shops gaily decorated for the holiday season, and much pains have been taken to make them attractive.

Mr. V. Elphirst of Toronto, has been visiting at his home here.

The public auction sale on Saturday at the home of Mrs. Bingham, was fairly well attended.

The Methodist Sunday School is preparing for their annual Christmas concert, to be held on Christmas night in the town hall.

Warsaw Young Men's Club Appreciates the Work of Mr. J. J. Thompson.

A PRESENTATION

An interesting event took place at Warsaw on Saturday night, when the closing session for the season of the gymnasium classes of the Young Men's Club took place. The evening was featured with the presentation to Mr. J. J. Thompson, physical director of the local Y.M.C.A., who has been directing the work of the classes of an eighteen pound turkey. Mr. Thompson's efforts on behalf of the Club have been appreciated and he has become very popular with the members. Saturday night's presentation was made by Mr. John Selkirk, while the following address was read by Mr. Allan Payne:

War-saw, Ont., Dec. 16th.

Mr. J. J. Thompson,—

We the members of the Young Men's Club of Warsaw, wish to convey to you a feeling of appreciation for your work done among us during the last few months. This work, we believe, will greatly benefit not only the physical but the spiritual strength of the body and mind. We sincerely hope that the work which you have commenced among us, may grow and in time bring fruit, which may be a credit to our instructor.

We ask you to accept this turkey, not for its intrinsic value, but as a slight token of our appreciation. We extend to you a Merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

Signed on behalf of the Young Men's Club of Warsaw,

Rev. A. C. Huffman, Hon. Pres.
Allan U. Payne, President.
R. R. Payne, Vice-President.
W. M. Darling, Register.
Archie Hawthorne, Secretary.
Jno. S. Selkirk, Treasurer.

A hearty vote of thanks was also passed to Messrs. Jack Sharpe and F. E. Ellis of the Peterborough Y.M.C.A., who have been assisting Mr. Thompson in his work.

During the evening the financial statement, as presented, showed a small balance on the right side, in both the Senior and Junior Boys' Clubs. The season has been most successful and the Clubs in on a sound footing, both as regards finances and membership. During the winter the club will turn its attention to hockey and skating.

We wish to call your attention to the fact that most infectious diseases such as whooping cough, diphtheria, and scarlet fever are contracted when the child has a cold. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy will quickly cure a cold and greatly lessen the danger of contracting those diseases. This remedy is famous for its cures of colds. It contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given to a child with implicit confidence. Sold by all dealers.

RELATIVES LOCATED

An uncle of the late J. E. R. Harris who passed away in Ottawa on Saturday, has been located in this city, in the person of Mr. J. W. Edwards, butcher, George street.

Deceased, according to information received by Mr. Edwards, had been in the hospital about one week prior to his demise. Heart failure is thought to have been the immediate cause of his death. Miss Edwards, daughter of Mr. Edwards, left for Ottawa on Saturday evening, and was present at the funeral, which took place in that city this afternoon.

These are the only relatives that the deceased was known to have in Canada, and their whereabouts was learned through the medium of the article which appeared in Saturday's issue of the Examiner.

SKIN SOFT AS A CHILD'S

"I was a great sufferer from eczema and salt rheum for years," writes Mr John W. Naas, Lunenburg, N.S. "Five years ago three boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment cured me and the old trouble never returned. My skin is soft as a child's now, and I shall always say a good word for this Ointment."

THE MALE OF THE SPECIES

What are man's chief faults? A foreign journal, not one of the militant suffragette sort, but one that appeals directly to the true womanly woman, submits the following comprehensive list of masculine failings, and will give a 75-dollar, a 50-dollar and a 25-dollar hat to the senders of the three lists containing the ten faults receiving the most votes: Cruelty, greed, arrogance, avarice, discontent, stupidity, anger, covetousness, curiosity, suspicion, disloyalty, intidiness, despotism, cunning, self-indulgence, hardness, impudence, egotism, untruthfulness, irreverence, injustice, carelessness, intemperance, intolerance, irascibility, irony, jealousy, cowardice, want of consideration, loquacity, awkwardness, violent temper, ill-nature, denseness, gossiping, niggardliness, envy, eccentricity, ourseness, fickleness, gullibility, self-conceit, deceit, frivolity, gormandizing, vainglory, hypocrisy, immorality, impatience, impoliteness, tactlessness, selfishness, indifference, sloth, dilatoriness, cynicism, negligence, heedlessness, obstinacy, unfairness, pedantry, extravagance, silliness, bluntness, scepticism, shyness, vanity, irresponsibility, insolence, dishonesty, hypochondria, unpunctuality.

What has become of the boasted chivalry of the other sex that, stimulated by a bribe, an uncertain bribe at that, the ladies should consent to drag the frailties of the men into the light and tabulate them for future reference? And if it is necessary or desirable to decide which of these damnable failings are most frequently to be found in the males of the species surely it would have been but just to bracket with them a list of good qualities to show that the sad bad analysis is not completely one-sided.

It was bad enough for the unwomanly women to entreat us spitefully. But when the other sort, under pretence of philosophical exactness, became spiteful what comfort is left to the former lords of creation, who can strut no longer before even their dames with the slightest consciousness that they arouse real respect.

It is small help our wounded self-esteem can get through reading a little Schopenhauer, or having some anti tells us in simple language how little she thinks of her own sex.—New York Evening Sun.

SET A PRECEDENT

Mr. Winston Churchill ,the new First Lord of the Admiralty, the other day set a precedent to future Ministers of the British Navy, by taking a lengthy trip in a submarine, says the Daily Chronicle (London). The occasion was his first inspection of Portsmouth Dockyard, and he is the only First Lord who has ever travelled under water.

Though not carried out under ideal weather conditions, the trip was one which will give the First Lord an admirable idea of the working of these vessels Rough weather had prevailed during the Sunday and during the early morning, and when Mr. Churchill left the Admiralty yacht Enchantress, aboard which he had spent the night, and crossed Portsmouth Harbour in a pinnace to the submarine depot at Gosport, a stiff wind was still blowing, though otherwise the weather was beautifully fine.

Mr. Churchill was received at the submarine depot by Captain R. J. B. Keyes, Inspecting Captain of Submarines, who escorted him on board the vessel selected for his trip. The submarine chosen to convey the First Lord was D2, one of the very latest in commission, which has a displacement of nearly 700 tons. The vessel has a bridge running round the exterior of the coning tower, and upon this Mr. Churchill took his stand with the commanding officer, attired in sea boots and nautical oilskins, which were practically impervious to any sort of weather that might be encountered.

The submarine cast off, and, steaming on the surface at ten knots speed, made for Spithead. From the shore the First Lord could be seen on the bridge, with two officers of the craft. There was a choppy sea running, but Mr. Churchill remained on the bridge. As the vessel approached the open waters of Spithead some stiffish waves were encountered, but the boat cut through them, and, though a good deal of water swirled round the coning tower, the occupants of the bridge took all in good part. On emerging from the harbour mouth, it was thought best to keep in sheltered water, and a turn was made towards Stokes Bay.

The crew of H.M.S. Hazard, the mother ship of the submarines, stood at attention at D2 passed, and Mr. Churchill was formally saluted and returned the salute. Behind D2 steamed C23, a boat not quite so modern, and when Stokes Bay was reached C23 demonstrated her diving capabilities, and manœuvred by the use of the periscope round the First Lord.

Then Mr. Churchill and all on deck descended into the hull of D2, and the hatchway being fastened down, Mr. Churchill watched the crew of about 16 officers and men make preparations for diving. The operation was carried out, and the First Lord saw the ship moving under water under electrical power at 10 knots In the course of the trip he was shown how the vessel is handled when attacking an enemy, and how the torpedoes are operated from three tubes for almost simultaneous discharge. The vessel carries the new 21-inch weapons. After a torpedo had been fired the submarine rose to the surface, and Mr. Churchill ascended to the coning tower.

The vessels of D class have wireless telegraphy installed, and Mr. Churchill noted with evident appreciation the sending and receiving of messages from the depot, now some four or five miles distant. Explanations were given of the means taken tions were given of the means taken to bring the crew to the surface by life-saving helmets and dresses in case of emergency. Mr. Churchill put a number of questions concerning minor points of detail, and expressed his high appreciation of what he had seen and heard.

Portsmouth was reached in time for Mr. Churchill to greet his colleagues at the Board of Admiralty, who joined him in an inspection of the port.—Globe.

NO SUMMER PICNIC

"Whenever I hear a travelling man howling about his lonesome evenings and what a dog's life it is and no way for a man to live I always wonder what kind of a summer picnic he thinks it is for his wife," writes Edna Ferber in the American Magazine. "She's really a widow seven months in the year, without any of a widow's privileges.

"Did you ever stop to think what she's doing evenings? No, you didn't. Well, I'll tell you. She's sitting home night after night probably embroidering monograms on your shirt sleeves by way of diversion.

"And on Saturday night, which is the night when every married woman out by her husband, she can listen to the woman in the flat upstairs getting ready to go to the theatre.

"The fact that there's a ceiling between 'em doesn't prevent her from knowing just where they're going and why he has worked himself into a rage over his white lawn tie and whether they're taking a taxi or the car, and who they're going to meet afterward at supper.

"After they're gone she can go to bed or she can sit up pretending to read, but really wondering if that squeaky sound coming from the direction of the kitchen is a loose screw in the storm door or if it's some one trying to break into the flat. And she'd rather sit there scared green than go back through that long hall to find out.

"And when Tillie comes home with her young man at 11 o'clock, though she promised not to stay out later than 10, she rushes back to the kitchen and falls on her neck, she's so happy to see her. Oh, it's a gay life. You talk about the heroism of the early Pilgrim mothers! I'd like to know what they had on the average travelling man's wife.

"The travelling man's wife waits on his comfort when he gets home. He says he wants a little rest and peace, and he's darned if he's going to run around evenings. Not much, he isn't! But he doesn't object to her making a special effort to cook all those little things that he's been longing for on the road. There'll be a seat in heaven for every travelling man's wife — though at that I'll bet most of 'em find themselves stuck behind a post."

HER SUNDAY JAG

When he tossed her $50 at the breakfast table one Sunday morning and asked how long it would hold her, she simply shrugged her shoulders, and smiled and continued her Sabbath morn debauch with the third, sixth, and fourteenth sections of a Sunday newspaper.

"Swagger fall coats of the snappy new style, with coronation collar, round-neck model, high waist-line, deep revers, kimono sleeves, wide wales, mulberry-brown buttons, and fascinating shadowings. Exceedingly dressy, with soft, shimmering meteor effect. Charming creations, lustrous messalines, gold-beaded tunics, poplin de Chine, and canard-vleour hoods. Filet of Venise insertion, with catawba flouncings to match. Alice-blue lumeaux and heliotrope shadow edging. Dashing reversible plaids, with macrame kid mousquetaires and prunelia facings."

With these intoxicating words she was gradually yet surely taking on a jag that would soon dissipate the $50 and keep poor hubby in a pickle.

ROYAL PHYSICIANS

The young Queen of Belgium is said to be the only oculist of royal blood in the world. Her father, the late Duke Charles Theodore of Bavaria, had to his credit at the time of his death the successful removal of more than 6,000 cataracts. The Queen of Belgium was his assistant, and is now said to be competent to take up his practice. Ex-Queen Amelie holds a doctor's diploma, secured by hard study and passing the regular examinations. Her object in studying medicine was to make herself capable of a more careful supervision of the hospitals and homes which she founded and endowed in Lisbon. The Queen of Bulgaria also has a medical degree, and because of it was able to assume active command of one of the most useful ambulance trains that left St. Petersburg for the front at the time of the war in Manchuria.

Y. M. C. A. BASKETBALL TEAM WON FROM T. C. S. FIVE

The local Y. M. C. A. basketball team journeyed to Port Hope on Saturday afternoon, where they met the Trinity College School team in the school gymnasium, before a large crowd. This is the first year that the school team has taken up basketball as part of their curriculum, and it can be safely said that if they continue to improve as rapidly as they have in the past few weeks they will take a lot of beating on any floor. They play a fast game, and shoot remarkably well for a new team, to say nothing of their checking ability. The Peterborough boys played their usual steady game, and shot very well considering the strange baskets. Every man played the game from the drop of the hat to the toot of the whistle, and there was not an idle moment in the entire game. The half-time score stood 19 to 14, in favour of the Port Hope boys, and the final score read 39 to 33, in favour of the Peterboroughs, who only won out by their superior shooting ability. The teams lined up as follows:

Y.M.C.A.—H. Hill and E. Hanwell, forwards; H. Wallis, centre; A. Hall and A. Fitzgerald, defence.

Trinity College School—Simonds Broadfield and Perry, forwards; Bartlett, centre; Dennison and Mathers, defence.

Referee, J. J. Thompson, Peterborough.

Umpire, Mr. Sterling, Physical Director, Trinity College School.

The return game will be played on the local floor some time after the Christmas holidays.

Heffernan Is Captain

Toronto Globe: On Saturday Jim Kennedy was elected manager of the Ottawa College hockey team, which will play in the Intercollegiate Union. Frank Heffernan, the brilliant halfback of the football team, who comes from Peterborough, being named as captain.

Stage Is Too Much For Cobb

CHICAGO, DEC. 15—Ty Cobb will quit the stage in a few weeks for fear the glare of the footlights will injure his batting eye.

Ty is is the star of a revision of the "College Widow," which was changed from a football to a baseball play for him. He has been drawing big houses.

"I have given the show management notice that I will play my last week in Detroit," said Cobb in Pittsburg. "I'll have to rest the remainder of the winter to be in shape to play ball next season. I thought the stage job would be easy, but one-night stands and late to bed have me on the run. I am more fatigued right now than I ever was at the end of the baseball season.

"My eyes are beginning to feel the strain of the bright lights. I am just about convinced that no player should go on the stage. Vaudeville may not be as big a strain as acting in a play. If I ever go before the footlights again it will be in vaudeville and it will take a big salary to get me on the stage at all."

LUCKIEST BOXER

The luckiest boxer in the business is the opinion held of "one round" Hogan by Kid Flynn, manager of Kid Alberts, Andy Parker and other good ones. He says that when the Californian met "Knock-out" Brown, the latter allowed him to weigh in at 138 pounds at three and as a result he was 145 or more at ring side.

Right in the first round he butted Brown on his good eye and closed it tight. Brown could hardly see him with his defective optic and missed punches by a foot.

Brown took an awful beating for five or six rounds, but came along so strongly that he had Hogan running away and in the last round had him all but out when the bell rang.

Brown is the strongest and pluckiest light-weight in the busines, according to Flynn. He can take a lacing that would stop an ordinary man in short order and come back for more.

"I would like to see him meet Wolgast in a long fight. It would be a great battle."

UMPS O'DAY A MANAGER

NEW YORK, DEC. 13.—Henry O'Day, for thirteen years an umpire in the National League, and the man who alone gave a decision in 1908 which cost the Giants the pennant, has been made the manager of the Cincinnati National League team, and another baseball question has, therefore, been answered.

The announcement by Garry Herrmann, the owner of the club, that O'Day would be the manager, came as a big surprise yesterday morning.

"I was surprised myself," declared O'Day. "I had no idea of getting the job four days ago, and I did not sign the contract until this morning. I'm pleased to death to get away from the umpiring business. As I get old I want to have some real friends. But I'm afraid for a time I'm going to have trouble teaching my players not to abuse me, because they are so used to it. I guess they'll get accustomed to me as a manager soon, tho."

"How'll you treat the umpires, Hank?"

"I'll treat them all right if they do the right thing by me," he replied.

"I see you're getting the perspective of a manager already," said John Heydler, the secretary of the National League. "Wait till someone calls a bad one on you."

"I want to ask you," said O'Day to Mr. Lynch, the league president, "to express my best wishes to all the umpires in the National League."

"Trying to get in right already, Hank?" asked Fred Clarke, who happened to be passing.

"Won't it be fine?" said O'Day with a boyish smile "I can be friendly with everyone now. Even McGraw and I may get along."

O'Day was the pitcher and Connie Mack the catcher on the old Washington team in 1886. O'Day later became a pitcher on the Giants.

"Are you going to wear a uniform, Hank?" the new manager was asked.

"Sure," he replied. "And I'll trade some players, too."

OTTAWAS SIGN ONLY THREE MEN

Ottawa, Dec. 13.—The Ottawa Club will be quite willing to have the Toronto teams play their home games on the Montreal Arena, as has been suggested.

D'Arcy McGee, president of the club, says that they would like to see the two Toronto teams in, and feel that without them the league would be very much weakened, so much so that it might prove to be a financial failure. He thinks that they could draw large enough gates at the Arena to pay their expenses, and, if they decide upon this course, the Ottawa Club will support them to remain in the N.H.A., as it would also save money for Ottawa on travelling expenses.

As yet the Ottawas have not signed up their players, and there are rumors of some of the men jumping to the West, although Frank Patrick claimed that he would not take any of the champion team. "Dubbie" Kerr is mentioned as having received an offer, and there is a good chance that he will accept. He has held back from affixing his signature to an Ottawa contract, and this looks as if he is thinking seriously about the Western offer.

Percy Leseur, Jack Darragh and "Skeene" Ronan are the only men who have been signed up as yet.

BASEBALL TALK

New York, Dec. 12.—Everybody knows how baseball players, professional and otherwise, engage in fanning bees of the past and present, recall the great feats of the diamond and praise the doings of other days.

But did anyone ever mix in a bunch of pugilistic fanners and hear any more enthusiastic buzzing than the glove wielders can turn loose? The answer is: "No." For the old-time fighters are just as talkative a tribe as ever could be got together.

Recently a bunch of fighters, past, present and future, got together in a prominent gymnasium, and after fights without number of years ago had been masticated to the queen's taste, one of the bunch propounded a question of natural interest.

"What becomes of the fighters when their days of activity in the ring are at an end?"

The question set everybody thinking, and in order to answer it was necessary to "take cases" on some of the fighters who in the last few years have left the ring for all time.

It was discovered that a great many of the pugilists had become policemen. In Chicago the home of many of the best fighters who ever stepped between the ropes there are many of the former glove wielders who now swing a club instead of the maulies.

Remember Martin Duffy, who was one of the topnotch lightweights of his time, which was only a few years ago? Duffy can be found any night in Chicago travelling a beat. He isn't a lightweight any more, but has joined the heavyweight class. Duffy certainly was a star of cleverness, something like Packey McFarland.

Jack Moffat, the middleweight, who possessed class, but failed to become a champion, partly because he dislocated a shoulder in a fight, is a policeman and treads a beat over Chicago streets. Moffat met the brilliant Tommy Ryan more than once in the ring, and Tommy always gave Moffat credit for being a fighter of the first water. The bad arm finally stopped Moffat's ring career, and he donned the suit of blue as a means of livelihood.

Charley Carr, the old Toronto first-baseman, who will succeed Danny Shaw, as manager of the Kansas City team next season, believes he has handed John McGraw a great player in Burns, an outfielder, who played for Carr at Utica last season. This is what he says of Burns:

"McGraw of the New York Nationals, bought the star player of my team. His name is Burns, a 19 year-old boy. He plays the outfield McGraw paid Utica $4,000 for the release of Burns. The lad was formerly a catcher. He bats right-handed and is a right-field hitter. He'll make good in the big ring. Burns has the best pair of hands of any young ball player I've ever seen. Then he can throw to beat the band and run the bases like a fiend. I look for Burns to give Jack Murray an argument for the right-field in New York next year.

"I managed the Indianapolis American Association team for five years before going to Utica. I won one pennant with the Hoosiers and finished in the first division three seasons. Rube Marquard and Donie Bush are two of my 'finds.' I picked up Marquard in Cleveland. He signed with Indianapolis for $125 a month. After playing with us for one year, we sold him to New York Nationals for $11,000 cash. Going some?

"Mr. Watkins made this sale against my advice. I advised him to send Marquard to the Boston Americans. John J. Taylor offered Speaker, Chadbourne, Ralph Glaze and $5,000 in cash for Marquard. Speaker was then playing with the Little Rock Club. One year later Speaker developed into one of the star outfielders of the game. If we had made the trade the Indianapolis Club could have peddled Speaker one year later for $15,000.

"I can't understand how the big leagues passed up Bill Bradley of Cleveland," continued Carr. "I saw him playing third base for the Toronto Eastern League Club this year and, believe me, he's the best looking third-baseman in minor league ball. A number of clubs tried to draft him this fall, but fortunately for Toronto, Bradley escaped the draft-net. He's the best looking ball player that ever was allowed to drop out of the big ring. Bill is a wise boy, takes excellent care of himself and will be playing good ball when a number of big league third-sackers I could name, will be out of the business."

Two major league clubs, whose names Kelley will not reveal, have been after the Toronto Management for Tim Jordan. Washington, Pittsburg and Detroit could use him handily and only yesterday the Chicago Cubs landed a guardian of the first corner when they secured "Chick" Gandil from Montreal, in exchange for Pitcher Slapnicka, one other player and a sum of money said to be about $5,000 or $6,000. "They can have Jordan if they want him badly enough to pay what we ask for him" said Kelley. When asked to name his price the Leafs' manager smilingly declined. "I would sell Jordan or any other player or players on my team if I thought that the team would be benefited by any changes that might be made. Success is what is demanded nowadays in baseball as in everything else. Bidding clubs will have to come through a lot stronger to get Jordan away from Toronto," concluded Kelley.

Already Rochester looks like the team to beat next season, despite the fact that the champions will be without Moeller, Spencer, Foster, Mitchell, McConnell, Batch, Dessan and others.

To fill their places Ganzel has secured Catcher Blair from New York, who was the star of the Eastern League in 1910, "Wid" Conroy, one of the hardest hitting third basemen in the business, Riepfer, a pitcher who was good enough to warrant New York paying $4,000 for him last fall, Bumpus Jones, a first class pitcher, and Otis Johnson, of New York, a slugger par excellence, and "Dolly" Gray, a left hand twirler from Washington, who won the last five games he pitched for the Senators.

He has gathered in several other players of class and with the bunch enumerated as a nucleus, President Chapin has made a grand start toward grabbing another ganfalon.

TIME AND MONEY

"I went to the city once to work," writes an Englishman in sarcastic vein. "I went expecting to be strangled with the rapidity of the movement here. I had the idea—given to me by business men—that when one lived in the city existence was a sort of frantic struggle to keep on an everlasting joywheel. I used to frequent offices during the time when the business men had the American habit of pinning mottoes on his walls—very much the same kind of idea used to prompt lovers when they exchanged sentiments printed on lozenges.

"The caller found something like a man glaring at him from behind a rolltop desk. Plastered in that oaken horror one found such admirable phrases as—Do it now. This is my busy day, Cough it up and quit. The extraordinary being tried to interview his visitors with one eye on the clock and the other eye on Do it now. It was most disconcerting. One felt every throb of time was a minted sovereign. London might not be paved with gold, but here was a very real atmosphere where every sounding tick of a watch measured off a vanishing 10-pound note.

"Busy!—it was the busiest atmosphere I ever struck. It was so busy you had not time to settle down and think. Life in the city was a brainstorm and you came out of it pumped and pallid, to fall into the bosom of your family at night a nervous ruin. The business man home from the city needed, most of all, subdued affection, milk puddings, cocoa, absolute quiet, and bromide.

"It is the dreariest piece of humbug ever perpetrated. It is all a colossal show arranged for timid countrymen, like the lord mayor's coach and the gilded trappings of his stout driver. In time I came to see the city with the cold eye and to judge it with a mind freed from brainstorms. I then formed the opinion I hold now, that the majority of busy business men do less in a day than any other type of worker. They bustle into the office at 10, dictate a few letters and emerge, pale and determined, at 11 for the coffee interval. The more portly type go in for fish as a brain food and take it in the form of oysters. It is remarkable how closely oysters are identified with the higher finance. The coffee hour extends to 12, and the busy business man rushes back to his office. He spends the time for the next hour reading the paper or telephoning to his wife about the guests he has asked to the evening whist drive.

"Then comes the real business of the day—lunch. It is conducted on the principle that the more one eats the clearer becomes one's head. Lunch is a solemn function, ends in a hazy cloud of tobacco smoke, and may last three hours. It usually ends with the phrase, 'Well, I'll see you again tomorrow and we'll go into it carefully.' There is just time now to fly back to the office, tumultuously sign six letters, and catch the 5.25 train. Or one may make a feverish effort for the 5.5 p.m., in which case even the sacred letters are neglected. In place of the signature the clerk imprints the words of a rubber stamp. Mr. Blank dictated this letter personally, but owing to an important appointment he had to leave before it was completed for his signature.' Swift—very but convincing—never. Anyone but a business man would consider the idea an elaborate joke."

THE AFRICAN ELEPHANT

The elephant in enormous numbers still roams over large parts of Africa. For generations to come he may be commercially important for the ivory he supplies and for the food he affords to many tribes that relish his flesh. We do not know yet whether it will ever be possible to make him thoroughly useful as a draught animal and luggage carrier. The earnest efforts of the last ten years to tame and make him a good domestic animal have not been largely rewarded. From all we know of his history he seems doomed to extermination unless he can be made useful, like the Indian elephant, the horse and the ox, for domestic purposes.

The African elephant has a right to his name, for there is no proof that the Asian variety ever lived in Africa. It has been conjectured that the Indian elephant might have crossed the Isthmus of Suez and populated the mountain region of North Africa where elephants within historic times have been very numerous. The Greek and Roman historians wrote of elephants there, and a little before the Christian era as many as a hundred of them were often exhibited at one time in the Roman circus. There is proof, however, that these animals were of the African variety. The elephant head stamped on many medals and coins invariably had the large ears and the cranial peculiarities which so plainly differentiate the African from the Asian species. Many petroglyphs and pictures on the rock walls of the Atlas Mountains strikingly depicted the characteristics of the African animal. The wild herders of the Atlas Mountains drew their elephant as they saw him, and it was as striking a picture of the African variety of to-day as the rock drawings of the Bushmen which so faithfully outline the animals of the Kalahari Desert.

The elephant no longer exists in North Africa because he has been exterminated by man. Two factors control the distribution of elephants in Africa and the size of their herds. One is the abundance or the scarcity of the plants on which they live; the other is the presence or the absence of man. The whites want the elephant for his ivory, and the blacks for his flesh. The elephant seeks new stamping grounds if either the whites or the blacks become uncomfortably numerous.

The result is that from great regions where he was once very numerous he has now entirely disappeared. He has been hunted for his ivory: the basin of the Nile till he has wholly disappeared from large parts of it. He has vanished from nearly the whole of German East Africa. He is still found in considerable numbers in British East Africa, and approaches the coast near the mouth of the Tana River, for this region is sparsely peopled and hunters seldom visit it. A century ago he was often seen near the mouth of the Congo, but there are few parts of the African coasts which he now approaches within scores of miles. The areas around Victoria Nyanza are among the most favored haunts of the elephant, but to-day there are fewer herds and they are smaller. He once ranged over the whole of South Africa wherever plant food could be found, but he has now disappeared from this great region almost to the Zambesi River, and the only reason is the advancement of white enterprises and the multiplication of his human enemies. He still lives in great numbers in the vast forest regions of West Africa, in the eastern part of the Belgian and French Congos and in other great inland territories with meagre population; but railroads and white stations are pushing into some of his greatest strongholds, and he will be exterminated or driven out. Judging from present progress in Africa, it will not be very long before he will be unable to find unappropriated areas to which he can still retreat.

All the blacks now know the value of ivory. They can buy with it the good things the white man has to sell and enjoy besides the usual quantity of meat. This new incentive to destroy the animal is giving keener zest to the chase. The colonial governments have established a number of reservations within which the elephant can feed and breed in safety, but they are also building railroads and planting stations in some of these reserves, and the elephant will not remain in the neighborhood of such intrusions. Meanwhile the efforts to tame him and make him the helper of man are being continued, and there is some encouragement to persevere.

Strange as it may seem, this heavy and unwieldly animal is a good mountain climber. He has been found in undisturbed possession of feeding grounds at heights of 3,200 feet in Abyssinia, and according to Gregory, above the tree line, at about 14,000 feet, on Kilimanjaro; and a number of other African mountaineers have reported him at heights of 10,000 feet or more. If the African elephant is doomed to dwindle and to disappear, we may imagine that the last of his race will be found high up among the mountains, where many of them browse to-day at altitudes seldom visited by hunters.—New York Sun.

EXPLAINING HORSE-POWER

In connection with steamship propulsion the average man is apt to speak very glibly of so many hundred or thousand horsepower. But it is extremely doubtful if one person in a hundred really has a due appreciation of what the phrase actually means. On this point some very interesting remarks were made by John Heck, the Glasgow engineer surveyor.

He said that, calculating the strength of twelve men to be equal to one horsepower, it would require 840,000 men to produce as much energy as the 70,000 horsepower developed by the turbine machinery of the express Cunarder Lusitania. Then if the men were to work on the eight-hour day system those figures would give a total of 2,520,000, that being the number of men whose strength would be necessary to drive the vessel across the Atlantic ocean. So it would take all the men in Scotland to supply the energy produced all the day round by the wonderful turbine machinery of this great ship.—Railway and Locomotive engineer.

IN PRAISE OF MODESTY

"A group of tourists," he said, "visited in Bonn Beethoven's house. One of the tourists, a girl of twenty or so, sat down at Beethoven's piano and played the 'Moonlight Sonata' none too well. Beethoven's own work, in his own room, on his own piano!

"When the girl had finished she rose and said to the old caretaker:

"'I suppose lots of famous musicians have been here and played on this instrument?'

"'Well, miss,' the caretaker answered gravely, 'Paderewski was here last year and his friends urged him to play, but he shook his head and said:

"'"No, I am not worthy."'"—Washington Star.

SIX MEN DROWNED

Rescuers Did Not Know Whence Their Cries Came

WOMEN KNELT IN PRAYER

Como, Que., Dec. 19.—While women knelt on the banks and prayed wildly and men frantically tried to locate the direction from which the despairing cries for help were coming, six men were drowned in Lake of Two Mountains, opposite Oka., on Saturday night.

The accident happened in the evening about eight o'clock. The victims were: Hormisdas Laberge, postmaster of Oka; John Burns, butter manufacturer, and four Indians — Ignace Simon, Pierre Iguace, Joseph Laforce and a son of Jean Tivasha.

It was toward eight o'clock and all at once through the blinding snow and howling wind wild, despairing cries for help were heard.

Half of the population of Como immediately collected on the river bank. To their horror, however, they were unable to tell from which direction the sounds came. The voices were tossed about by the wind.

A dozen boats were ready to start, but no one knew which may to go.

The wife of the postmaster was telephoned to and told of her husband's danger, and a search party at once collected on the opposite bank at Oka. Nothing could be done, however, and it was not until 10 o'clock that search parties found the boat floating bottom upwards, with two dead bodies lying across the bottom.

Laberge and Burns had crossed the lake in a boat to Lake Como to get the mail, which arrives at 4.40 o'clock in the afternoon. When the train had departed and they were able to start back, the four Indians asked to be taken over in the boat.

'Ware Gypsies.

Belleville, Dec. 19.—Yesterday a number of townsmen were victimized by a band of gypsies, who on Saturday evening arrived here from the east.

The party consisted of two men, six women and six children. Yesterday morning the women started out to tell fortunes. Their modus operandi was to have their victims produce bills, which the women would have placed in their hands, and after saying a few unintelligible words, would make a few motion and apparently return the money. In at least three cases the women succeeded in keeping some of the bills. A number who were victimized, reported to the police, who had the band arrested.

In the afternoon three victims appeared against them, but the magistrate allowed them to go upon making restitution and compelling them to leave town. It is said that many victims failed to report to the police. In some cases as high as $15 was taken from one person.

HOT ON THE TRAIL

Valuable Evidence Being Elicited at Indianapolis

TRACKING THE "OTHERS"

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 19.—Hotel registers showing the movements of those suspected of complicity in the dynamiting conspiracy other than the McNamaras and Ortie McManigal were taken before the federal grand jury yesterday.

Thomas J. Refingon of Youngstown, Ohio, the first hotelman to be examined, brought with him his hotel register and some account books said to show by whom certain hotel bills had been paid. A bridge being erected by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at Youngstown was damaged by an explosion on the night of Oct. 30, 1907. Non-union ironworkers had been employed on the contract. This explosion was followed by numerous others in Northern Ohio, all alleged to be depredations of the "dynamiting crew."

McManigal's and the McNamaras' movements are well-known, and the hotel records are being brought from places in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, from the east and as far west as Salt Lake City, Utah, with a view of tracing others whose names have not yet been mentioned, but upon whom it is said, the Government is keeping close watch.

Other persons examined yesterday are believed to know circumstances connected with the stores of explosives which the dynamiters kept. The stores were at Tiffin, Ohio, where in April, 1911, 540 pounds of dynamite were taken from a barn in the rear of McManigal's father's home at Indianapolis, where more than 100 pounds of explosives were found in the basement of the building occupied by the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, and in a barn outside the city; at Rochester, Penna., where nitro-glycerine was found, and at Muncie, Ind.

Detective W. J. Burns, who, through evidence left at these places, traced McManigal's connection with the McNamaras, probably will be a witness later.

District Attorney C. W. Miller said the Government was progressing rapidly with the investigation. He said more than the preliminaries had been gone through, and it was probable all the evidence would be in within a month.

Probing Bribery Charge.

Los Angeles, Dec. 19.—Bert. H. Franklin, formerly an investigator, employed by the defence in the McNamara dynamiting cases, was brought before Justice Young yesterday for preliminary hearing on the second bribery charge against him—that of having bribed Mrs. Robert F. Bain to influence her husband, a juror, in the trial of James B. McNamara.

One witness, Mrs. Maud Farley, a neighbor, testified that Mrs. Bain came to her home one day and used the telephone; that Mrs. Bain used the name Franklin several times.

The case then went over until today.

Two Wrecks In U. S.

Odessa, Minn., Dec. 19.—Twelve persons were killed in a wreck on the Chicago Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad here yesterday, and ten or more were seriously injured when the second section of train No. 18, the Columbian, from Seattle, crashed into the first section, which had been stopped on a signal.

The dead were Mrs. R. C. Myers, Newcastle, Ind.; Mrs. C. W. Barber, Ferry, Mont.; — McCone, sleeping car conductor; Mrs. J. J. Richards, Mobridge, S.D., wife of Supt. Richards of Trans-Missouri Slope Division, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad; daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Richards; Dr. R. F. Whetsone, Minneapolis; six unidentified dead.

Among the injured are Miss Eliza Clement, Boston, Mass., seriously, and Miss Leona Kennedy, Newcastle, Ind., bruised.

Leavenworth, Kas., Dec. 19.—According to reports received here seven persons were killed and a number injured in a head-on collision between two trolley cars on the Kansas City Leavenworth electric line near Wolcott, Kas., fifteen miles south of here, yesterday. Physicians and nurses were hurried to the scene from this city.

A. W. Carpenter, proprietor and manager of the Charing Cross Bank, London, Eng., which failed in October, 1910, has been sentenced to a term of two years' imprisonment.

At the annual meeting of the Union Bank of Canada in Quebec yesterday, the proposal for the removal of the head office of the bank to Winnipeg was approved of by the shareholders.

Queen's University faculty will ask the Senate to restrict the number of social functions at the university, as it is felt that there are too many during the year and that it interferes with study.

Public dispensaries, where drinks will be sold without profit, the state to furnish pure alcohol for medicinal or scientific purposes, was advocated at a meeting of all the Protestant ministers of Toledo, yesterday.

Tried to Hit Member.

Constantinople, Dec. 19.—The Parliamentary situation is becoming critical. The members of both parties are at high tension over the proposed modification of Article 35 of the constitution, and this led to a personal encounter yesterday between a Unionist deputy and a member of the Opposition on the floor of the House. The former attempted to strike the Opposition deputy with a chair, but was prevented from doing so by the intervention of several members. A tumultuous scene ensued, and the president was compelled to suspend the sitting.

The Unionist majority then held a meeting and decided to provoke a dissolution of the chamber at all costs.

Refuses Ultimatum.

Teheran, Persia, Dec. 19.—The National Council has refused to accept the Cabinet's proposals regarding a solution of the Russian difficulty, and the Russian troops are preparing to advance on the capital. It is believed that the advance will begin on Thursday.

The people are apathetic and only the women continue an active boycott. The official attitude suggests passive resistance, but the provincial sentiment is strongly opposed to the Russians. The ex-Shah, Mohammed Ali Mirza, is at Gumesh Tepe.

Prison Didn't Reform Him.

Berlin, Ont., Dec. 19.—Robert Lindsay, who was liberated from Central Prison last Wednesday, was found trying to gain an entrance into stores on King street at four o'clock yesterday morning and was placed under arrest. He pleaded guilty to a charge of vagrancy and was sent back to Central Prison for another term of six months. He claims Collingwood as his home.

New York's Gas Strike Deferred.

New York, Dec. 19.—A committee of clergymen representing all denominations persuaded the Consolidated Gas Co. employes yesterday not to plunge the city in darkness at Christmas, but to wait until after the holidays at least before taking action on a proposed strike.

Chinese Cabinet Not Formed.

Shanghai, Dec. 19.—The Nanking convention, which is to take under consideration the establishment of a republic, has not yet met in regular session. As a consequence the reports that a President has been elected and Ministers named, are without foundation.

Chatham's Building Permits.

Chatham, Dec. 19.—Seventy-seven building permits aggregating an expenditure of over $140,000 have been issued this yeaer by Fire Chief Richard Pritchard. Several large permits, including one for the addition to the Ursuline Academy, are yet to be filed this year, and it is expected that the total cost of building operations will amount to over $150,000. The last year has been the best from a building standpoint in the history of the city.

AVOIDING A CLASH

Taft Lets Congress Deal With the Russian Treaty

WILL SUGGEST NEW PACT

Washington, Dec. 19.—President Taft turned over to the Senate yesterday the task of completing the abrogation of the treaty of 1832 with Russia, because of alleged discrimination against American citizens of Jewish faith. Ignoring the House of Representatives, the President sent a message to the Senate announcing that on Friday last he had caused notice to be forwarded to St. Petersburg that the U. S. desired the treaty to end Jan. 1, 1913. This notification was officially handed to the representatives of the Russian Government yesterday.

Mr. Taft asked the Senate to ratify and give effect to his action. The foreign affairs committee of the Senate voted unanimously to report a resolution of ratification couched in diplomatic language, and Senator Lodge offered it later in the Senate. There was every reason to believe that the resolution would be rushed through, inasmuch as the Senate committee, as an act of courtesy to the House, had decided that the lower branch of Congress should be asked to concur in the Senate's action.

Senator Heyburn of Idaho took the floor, and after protesting vigorously against hasty action, asserted his right under the rules and by formal action, threw further consideration of the matter over until to-day.

Although it was evident that politics would enter into the fight to-day, the prediction was made freely that all obstacles would be overcome.

In his message to the Senate, President Taft transmitted a copy of the letter to the Russian Foreign Office. In it was expressed the view of the U. S. that the old treaty no longer met the political principles or commercial needs of the two nations and should be terminated.

The American Government, with marked courtesy suggested further that it would be most agreeable to this country if a new treaty, along more modern lines, could be negotiated to replace the ancient and outlived document.

Despite this overture to the Russian Government, State Department officials last night practically admitted that there was little hope for negotiating a new treaty that would avoid the very things that were leading to the denunciation of the old one.

Popular In Russia.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 19.—American Ambassador Guild, acting under instructions from President Taft, yesterday notified the Russian Foreign Minister, M. Sasanoff, that the treaty of 1832 between the U. S. and Russia would be abrogated, in accordance with provisions made by article 12, on Jan. 1, 1913.

It is pointed out in official circles that Russia has no cause to be dissatisfied with this turn of affairs, President Taft's action, in view of the previously contemplated procedure, being likely to increase his popularity here. The notification, it is said, was given with full right and tactful mention of motives underlying the abrogation of the treaty, which leaves full latitude for conducting new negotiations, with the controversial factor eliminated.

Austria Backs U. S.

Vienna, Austria, Dec. 19.—The Russo-American controversy is arousing great interest there and the newspapers are publishing long despatches from Washington on the subject. The general view held in Austria is that Russia will be worsted in a commercial fight, especially in view of the power of American capital.

The Neue Freie Presse commenting on the possibilities, says that a conflict would occasion no surprise, as the contract in culture and political development between the U. S. and Russi is bound to influence the relations between the two countries. Two Galician deputies of the Austrian Parliament have sent cablegrams to the Senate at Washington, expressing gratitude at the efforts of the U. S. to obtain justice for the Jews.

Major Leonard's Generosity.

Brantford, Dec. 19.—Announcement has been made here that Major R. W. Leonard, chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, has offered to donate funds to Grace Church in this city sufficient to erect a tower with a chime of bells. It is understood the entire structure will cost $6,000. The tower will be a memorial to Major Leonard's father and mother, who were well-known workers in Grace Church for many years.

In connection with the improvements the sum of $23,000 has been subscribed in addition for a handsome parish hall. The gift of Major Leonard is entirely unconditional, and it is understood has been accepted by the church authorities.

Rev. H. F. D. Woodcock, M.A., has resigned as curate of Grace Church and will accept a call to Oakville Anglican Church.

Wabash Receivers Appointed.

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 19.—On the application of the Westinghouse Air-brake Co., Judge Elmer B. Adams in the U. S. Circuit Court yesterday afternoon, appointed Fred. J. Delano, Edward B. Pryor and W. T. Bixby receivers of the Wabash Railway Co. The receivers' bond was fixed at $300,000 each, to be given in ten days. Wells E. Blodgett, who has been general counsel for the road, was appointed counsel for the receivers.

F. J. Delano is president of the road now, and Mr. Pryor, until recently, was a director.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED
—BY—
J. W. BROWETT
Optometrist
Q. Why is it that glasses are worn so much more now than years ago?
A. Years ago the science of optics or correcting errors of sight was not understood as it is to-day; only old persons or those near-sighted wore Glasses. Now we correct with lenses all errors of sight.
Q. Why is it that cheap glasses do not give satisfaction?
A. Cheap glasses are so faulty in construction and are of such poor quality that they distort the vision and cause pain in the eyes. The optical glass used by us is brilliant, clear and perfect, insuring comfort and ease to the wearer.
Q. Can my headaches be relieved with glasses?
A. A personal visit will be necessary. Let us talk it over.

Nine Dollars For Six Weeks Work.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 19.—Otto Greiger and Otto Huffman, Germans, told Magistrate Fraser yesterday that they had been brought to Canada from the States by a contractor, for whom they worked six weeks, receiving $9 pay each. The balance had been kept for transportation. The men were dismissed. They were charged with trespassing, but were released.

Wm. J. Hamilton, Falls passenger agent of the Lehigh Valley, will assume his new duties as successor of the late Robt. Lewis, Canadian passenger agent in Toronto, the first of the year.

Youthful Thugs Committed.

Cornwall, Dec. 19.—Fred White, Arthur and James Tyo, aged 18, 16 and 15 years respectively, were yesterday committed for trial on the charge of doing bodily harm to George Gallinger, aged 49, of Cornwall Township, with the intent to commit murder.

Mr. Gallinger, whose eye was knocked out by a club in the melee, gave evidence and in a measure identified the trio as his assailants.

Fourth Son to Crown Princess.

The Crown Princess was Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. Her marriage with Crown Prince Frederick Wilhelm took place June 6, 1905. The family of the royal couple now consists of four sons.

ONE OR THE OTHER

(Short Story.)

The doorway from the woodshed to the kitchen became suddenly darkened. I looked up from the peas I was shelling, to behold my young wife, Madge, holding her right hand behind her and her head downcast. The apparition affected me like a frosty wind. "Hello, sweetheart, what's the trouble?" I cried in wonderment.

Slowly and without response she descended the creaky steps into the full of the daylight, so that I perceived the glint of tears on her cheeks and her lips quivering. It was no ordinary happening that would make her thus cast down. With a swoop of my arm I drew her to my knees. Then it was, her sweet face nestling to my cheek, that she showed the mirror of the toilet set I had given her. It was webbed with cracks like a filigree of a spider's web.

"And is that all?" I asked, with a laugh. "Why, I'll be going to the village in the morning and get a new glass put in. Don't fret."

"It's not so much of the glass that I'm thinking, Bob, as of what's to follow, and the dear one began to sob like a child. "It's sure death in the family that they say will happen within a year."

"They say," as an authority, exasperates me. I answered that such old granny stuff was not in my mind to my liking; that it was silliness to have superstitions making us their slaves. But she did not mind me at all, replying, with great stubbornness, "your father was killed within a year of his breaking the great pier glass; your Uncle James was dead within a twelvemonth after cracking his mirror with a hair brush. And Aunt Ritchie has told me——"

"But you know, Bob, she's sometimes right. This may be one of the times, and," speaking in a hushed voice, "I feel—I'm sure one of us will be dead before the year's gone." A smothering kiss and a big sob as she broke away from me was her manner of parting. As the days went by she brooded over the abominable presage that was as a die driven hard down upon her once sunny nature, and say and do what I might in the first few weeks following, nothing availed to change the run of her inclinations. But the evil did not stop there; it wedged apart my plans for the future, and the present was lived as if under a real sentence of death.

Thus it was at the beginning; I came in time to be unconsciously influenced by the obstinacy of her belief and less inclined to resist it. The sadness of her face, its pinched expression of imminent grief, her lassitude of action, were such constant reminders of her fear at last I doubted whether it was wise to keep up my resistance.

About midway in the year I found that, unwittingly and imperceptibly, the omen and its influences had become intertwisted with most of my plans. The farm, heavily mortgaged, had come to me from my father. Poor crops and a sparse income had put me behind in my dues, the interest pacing ahead without a break, so that my affairs were grievously bothersome. I was never meant to be a farmer, it being my ambition and pleasure to invent things, most of which, I am not ashamed to confess, got no farther away than my own premises. At this time my hobby was a windmill, into the perfection of which I had seeded many hours and dollars. When completed it was disheartening to find that no one wanted it at my own or any lesser figure.

Thus it came about that I began to consider only the dark side of life—thinking especially of what existence would be to me without Madge, or her helplessness if I was taken, making my calculations just as if it was a settled thing that one of us would be dead within the year. I believe both of us would have been in the insane asylum (we were on the road to one) had not Pinkham, the agent for the sale of my patent, interfered. "Another dun, I suppose," said my wife, as she tossed the letter in my lap "Not that, thank heaven," I cried, my heart light with the joyful news the missive brought. "It's word from Pinkham bidding me come to the city at once, as he has sold our windmill, and has a surprise besides. There's good luck ahead. The farm's to be saved." In my gladness I tried the swing of a dance with her.

"Robert, Robert, you shouldn't do that," she gravely protested, gently putting away my arms. "You may be disappointed again. Besides," she spoke hesitatingly, my hands in hers, her lips quivering, "you seem to have forgotten the fate that is to befall one of us. The year is not ended until to-morrow." Truly, it had been out of my mind for the moment; but Madge, poor girl, had not forgotten. But I steeled my heart against her appealing caresses.

"If I start to-night," I said, "I can be back by to-morrow night. This may be the supreme chance of my life. I will not let a moss-backed superstition bar me from it. If I did, within forty-eight hours you might be chiding me for yielding."

"Wait till the time is past," she appealed. "You may be hurt in the city, taken to a hospital, die, be buried in the potter's field (you know such things do happen), and I none the wiser for days. Or I may die while you are gone. Dear Bob, I want you to stay near me to the end; for something is going to happen."

Cruel and selfish it may seem, and it snagged my heart to cross the grain of her humour; but our interests demanded that I should be firm in my purpose of going. "Aunt Ritchie, though I dislike her croaking speeches, can keep you company," I said. "Otherwise, she is a good soul and knows your ways. I prophesy that inside of twenty-four hours we'll be laughing over our childish scare and have something handsome to show for the trip."

Once on the journey I became inflated with a hopefulness that lifed me as with wings. Pinkham had indeed a surprise for me—my patent had been sold for three times the price I had put upon it. I was going to be rich as fortunes go in the country. The farm was saved; from my shoulders was lifted the burden of debt which had galled me for years Strangely enough, considering how the idea had grown upon during the year, not a thought of the forecasted fate came into my mind from the time I left the farm.

It had been our arrangeent, always looking to economy, of course not imagining what good luck was ahead of us, that I should return home by the River Belle steamer, which would reach our landing at 9 o'clock in the evening; but when I found that I had no longer to pinch my dimes, and that the time taken for making out the papers of the patent and buying presents (for in that respect I was bound not to go back empty-handed-kept me employed past the hour of the boat's departure, I went back as I had come, on the steam cars, making uncalculated delay of a couple of hours.

The station was on the far side of the town, remote from its residence territory and the river, and a full mile from the farm. There was no team in waiting for me, an omission that instantly caused me to worry. I took the road on foot at a lively pace, and it was close to midnight when our house came into view.

Instantly my heart began to beat an alarm; for not a light was showing in it for me. There rose a lump in my throat, and the beats of my heart were like the tatoo of a woodpecker on the housetop. I was sure something had gone wrong. Then the accursed superstition stirred my thoughts, like the whir of an owl in the woods. It was midnight. The year had gone by, and I was alive: but Madge—where was she? What had happened to her? Something, surely, or she would not be absent at this time. Wild with apprehensions, I ran toward the house, imagining anything, everything.

The doors were not locked. The oil had burned out of the lamps, and the smell of it was heavy and choking. Candlelight revealed a table set for supper, on it the remnants of a partly eaten meal, and one chair overturned. The kitchen stove was cold, but there was warmth in the kettle. I called again and again, but no answer came. At the entrance to each room I waited a moment, trembling, dreading to look in. Though the cover of the cistern was in place I dragged its water with a rake. I lowered a lantern down the well, and thanked the Lord there was shown no trace of death or crime. It perplexed me that the horses should be in their stalls and the buggy in its shed; for how, save by them, could the women have gone away any distance? But gone they were, as if drawn up into the sky.

Only one plan of action came to me. I rode back to the village. I was astounded to find th etown in great astounded to find the town in great a'clock. A large bonfire, round which was a crowd of men and women, and children, was burning near the wharf at the foot of the main street; lights were twinkling everywhere. Hurrying along, more bent on my errand than on doings of the people, a woman speaking from her porch to a neighbour's night-capped head, lifted above a fence between the two lots, brought me to a sudden standstill. I heard this much of the talk:

"And you've just waked up? Goodness me, you can' mean it! Why, everybody else heard of the disaster more'n an hour ago. You don't know now what it is? Bless my soul, how could ye sleep so? Well, the River Belle's blowed up off Ketcham cove, and everybody's lost 'cept the cook and second mate. Most of the folks is down to the river looking for bodies."

The River Belle, I thought. Why, that was the craft on which we had planned I should come home. I was thinking of my good luck in not taking her, when the next words of the speaker made me dizzy. "Bob Jedson," she went on, meaning me by name, "was on her, an's gone with the rest. I only knowed him by sight, poor man." She gave a little short groan.

"You don't mean it," the other exclaimed. "Now ain't it strange. 'Tain't more'n a week ago, that Mrs. Jedson was a-tellin' me how she'd broke a lookin'-glass nigh on to a year ago, and that she was thankful to the Lord no one was dead yet; but she admitted she felt sure su'thin' was a-goin' to happen. An' now she's ketched it. Never knew that lookin'-glass business to fail."

"That's all bosh,' cried the other contemptuously. "I've busted a dozen of them things in my life, and ain't dead yet. But Mrs. Jedson, being newly married, is jest that queer minded. Doc. Strathmore, as soon as he heard what had happened, driv' out to the farm to break the news. They'd jest began supper. When the doc. let out what he'd come for Mrs. Jedson she yelled out she knowed something would happen 'fore midnight, and that her Rob was on that boat, then keeled over in a dead faint. They've got her over to Parson VanWyke's, a-soothing her down till the body's found." Somehow I couldn t leave until I'd heard her through. Blessed be the Lord neither of us was dead. I was off like a flash to end the foolishness of the year. They were weeping and praying as could be seen through the partly opened door. I gave token of my presence with a "Ho-ho, sweetheart," singing it out cheerily after my usual manner of home-coming. Never was sweeter music uttered than Madge's scream of delight as she sprang up to meet me, having her arms round my neck in a jiffy, and her cheek hard against mine, in the old-time way.

"Never, never again will I be so silly, Bobby, dear," she whispered after a minute; her big grey eyes held in a sparkle of tears as she looked up into mine.

"Meaning—" I questioned.

"A belief in absurd superstitions rather than in the ways of the Lord," was her response.

And Parson VanWyke, overhearing, came between us, with his hands upon our shoulders, and solemnly said, "Amen!"

SHE GAINED 35 LBS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy. I had nervous headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells, and was, in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 18 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 35 pounds in weight."

Have To Do A Little Of Everything

Globe.

COCHRANE, DEC. 15.—A young man in broadcloth and of a studious aspect loaded bricks into a bucket. Having completed his task he disappeared with them into the English church on Sixth avenue, and, climbing a ladder, handed them one by one through a hole in the roof to the bricklayer, who was just completing the chimney.

The Globe representative managed to interview him between trips.

"We have to do a little of everything now in the ministry," said the student. "As a matter of fact workmen are so scarce that if we didn't turn to ourselves we would never get things finished." He moved off with his bucketful of bricks. As he returned, a young engineer, in riding breeches and puttees, stopped him.

"How are you off for funds?" he said.

"Oh, we have a little to go on with."

"Well, whenever you want any more you know where to come for it." And the engineer whistled his dog and went on his way.

Mr. Howard explained that, while the church was being built by the diocese, the furniture was bought by the parishioners. He had in six days collected $116—"not so bad for a town that had only a few months ago been burnt out."

There was a whistle from the roof, and Mr. Howard, divinity student, native of Birkenhead, Eng., for the nonce hod-carrier, once more climbed the ladder with his bucket.

That is one aspect of the new Cochrane: There is another. As the northbound train was nearing Cochrane some one "pulled the air," and the train slowed up. The brakeman went through the cars looking for the passenger who had tugged the cord, but no one was found.

"Guess someone threw off a case of booze," suggested a resident, and the suggestion was at once recognised as the only feasible explanation.

To-day there are probably a hundred men, who, while not "blind-piggers," find that a bottle under the counter is an excellent side line. Every day or so trains arrive from the east and west, and a hundred to a hundred and fifty men Loil into the town suffering from a two months' drought. Most of them lose their pay checks in dissipating their thirst. There have been this summer between two and three thousand men making Cochrane their headquarters, and the profits of liquor-selling are so enormous that, despite the risk and the precautions that are taken, it is found everywhere. When the licensed hotel opens here the profits of the illicit dealers will be cut in half, the risk will be doubled, and it is probable that Cochrane will lose most of her "blind-piggers."

Cochrane is growing healthily; not with that hectic hammering night and day that charcterizes the construction of the mining towns, but soberly and as befits a town that has plenty of time before it and an abundant confidence in its future.

After the fire Cochrane received what it had a right to demand from the T. & N. O. Commission, their name behind their bonds and some cash, to proceed with municipal work. It was no more than Cochrane had a right to expect, as the Commission made a good many thousand dollars out of the sale of town lots, and they pay no taxes on their 200 unsold lots, which the energy of the citizens automatically increases in value every day. But relief was given with a good grace and very promptly. The T. & N. O. gave the town the equivalent of $5,000 in lumber and building supplies, and the Ontario Government lent them $38,000 at four per cent for municipal improvements. Now Cochrane has sidewalks that a couple can walk along without compelling another couple to step off in the mud, and the town will soon have fire protection.

Thought for the morrow is shown in many details. No one is permitted, under the penalty of a heavy fine, to pollute the lakes that beautify the townsite, while within reasonable distance of Porcupine within the next two years, unless Bobbe Lake is severed at the eleventh hour, there will not be a lake or stream that is not under suspicion.

There is plenty of work for a handy man. Carpenters and bricklayers — men who know their business — are stolen overnight by one employer from another, so much are they in demand, and anyone who will put brains into his work is sure of good wages. So good, in fact are wages that settlers who have taken up land are tempted to stay longer in the town than they should, according to their duties as clearers of the land and tillers of the soil.

As at Porcupine, so here, lots have advanced very materially in price since the day the cyclone of flame that will ever leave a scar on the memory of everyone who was in northern Ontario swept over and blotted out the town.

BEN HUGHES.

COSTS A LOT OF MONEY

To be lord mayor of London costs a lot of money. He receives $50,500 a year in salary, free of income tax, but is expected to entertain lavishly; in fact whn the corporation in 1873 fixed the amount of his present emolument it recommended that the lord mayor should show hospitality and attention to the other municipalities of the kingdom, the representatives of the city guids and the trading and commercial classes of London. Interest in the heavy pecuniary burden the lord mayor has to bear is revived through a motion pending in the City of London Corporation in regard to the question of the lord mayor's expenses "owing to altered circumstances." Since 1873, when the matter of the lord mayor's salary was last discussed officially, the expenses of the office have increased enormously.

Probably none of the incumbents of the office in recent years has been able to defray the costs of the honour out of his salary, large as it is. It is asserted that one lord mayor spent $150,000 in his year of service out of his own pocket, while the minimum expenditure is said to be about $40-000. Away back in 1774, the year before the system of compensating the lord mayor through certain dues was abolished, John Wilkes received about $21,000 and spent more than $41,000. After Wilkes' term the salary for 60 year was $5,000 with some allowances, and later these included about $16,500 paid by the corporation for the expenses of the Mansion House, the lord mayor's official residence. This system was in force until the present salary was granted. In addition to what he now receives the corporation spends from $30,000 to $40,000 a year on Mansion House expenses. Those who have witnessed the lord mayor's show get an idea of one very heavy burden which the lord mayor had to bear in part. On November 9, when the present lord mayor assumed office, the "show" included a historical pageant with costumes that were worth a small fortune.

A SEVERE COLD

PNEUMONIA.
Doctors Said He Would Not Live.
DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP Cured Him.

Too much stress cannot be laid on the fact that when a person catches cold it must be attended to immediately, or serious results are liable to follow.

There is only one way to prevent pneumonia, and that is, to cure the cold just as soon as it appears.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup will do this quickly and effectively.

Mr. Hugh McLeod, Esterhazy, Sask., writes:—"My little boy took a very severe cold, and it developed into pneumonia. The doctor said he would not live. I got some of your Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and he began to improve. Now, he is a strong healthy child, and shows no sign of it coming back."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

DAILY RECORDS OF PERJURY

When three of New York's best known and most able judges begin to lament the fact that our courts are establishing daily records of perjury it is time to take notice. The deplorable fact, according to their statements, is that false swearing is becoming a habit and is increasing. The general run of people who have to do with the courts seem to have forgotten that an oath is a serious thing and in order to get the law to work as they wish it they swear to an untruth without a tremor. This condition of affairs unfortunately is not limited to the police court alone but prevails also in higher tribunals. The old idea of an oath and its sacredness seems to have been lost and a great many testify as their emotions direct.

Speaking on the subject of perjury Magistrate House, of New York, recently said:

"There is probably more perjury in the police courts of this city, especially in the Essex Market Court, than in any other court on the face of the earth. A great many cases are brought to enforce the collection of debt, and perjury is incidental to that. I was talking to some attorneys the other day, and they offered an explanation for the increase in perjury which seems reasonable. It is a partial explanation, at least. Within the last two years or so the Legislature has increased the amount for which a judge of the municipal court may issue a process for the commitment of a man in certain cases, as where fraud is alleged. These are commercial cases of goods bought on memorandum, or false representation. The redress of body execution not being obtainable in the municipal court, the magistrate's court is used for a criminal charge against the debtor, and perjury is committed to substantiate the case."

COLLECTING DEBTS BY PERJURY.

There is a certain class that seem to imagine that the police court was invented for their special convenience. Some small merchants who have delinquent debtors use the court as a means of scaring their victims into an immediate payment. They trump up some charge against them and then, going before a magistrate, swear to their false statements and thus obtain a warrant. When they get their victim into court with a lawyer behind them they strive to frighten him into a payment of his debt. The charge in these cases generally is larceny. This practice is making a farce out of the courts.

Passing to the higher courts the same habit of false swearing is prevalent. Judge Warren W. Foster in giving his opinion upon this condition or abuse said:

"Perjury, like forgery, is an insidiously dangerous crime, easy to commit, difficult to detect, hard to secure a conviction for, offering a great reward for its successful execution. To commit perjury one must wilfully and knowingly testify to that he knows to be untrue in a material matter in an action at law. Every observer sees that which he observes from a different point of view. Very often when perjury is suspected there is only the natural difference of opinion or observation brought before the courts and frequently punished. There is not as much of it in the upper courts as below. One reason may be that the proceedings in the higher courts are conducted with greater solemnity, and the consequences of the crime seem more severe. We use the Bible in court, or the uplifted hand, if the witness prefers to affirm. The time may come when inventions like the pulse machine, or sphygmograph, may be used to ascertain the truthfulness of witnesses. All such devices and methods, like the word test, will be employed when public opinion recognizes their validity."

FOREIGNERS GUILTY OF PERJURY.

Much of the perjury committed today is due in great part to new arrivals in this country who have a poor idea of our laws and to whom the formula of our oath is entirely foreign and hence impressionless. There are others who never associate the oath they take in the court room with the religion that is taught them on Sunday. They have a vague idea that breaking a State law has no moral responsibility outside of legal punishment if caught. In an interview regarding this crime a New York magistrate spoke very clearly on this point. He said:

"People seem to leave their religion at the door of the court room. Very likely they have less religion and belief in the Bible than they used to have. Anyhow, the religious point of view does not appear to be a preventive of false swearing. The fear of punishment under the criminal law is a more powerful motive. In the magistrates' courts Bibles have not been used for the administration of oaths in a considerable number of years. I don't think it would help to use the Bible. A liar will lie under most any circumstances.

OUR SYSTEM WRONG.

"Our whole system of criminal procedure is absolutely wrong. The cross-examination of a defendant by magistrate or district attorney should be allowed. This would obviate the practice of the 'third degree' at police headquarters. Now the 'third degree' is almost a necessity in some cases. We cannot now compel the defendant to take the witness stand, and cannot even answer for the jury the question, 'Why didn't this defendant take the stand?' It would be possible to make this great improvement without a constitutional change. The defendant generally has a hearing before a magistrate. I would have a law that unless he took the stand at this hearing and allowed the magistrate to interrogate him he would not be allowed to take the stand at the trial, and the district attorney would be privileged to comment to the jury on his refusal to be interrogated when he had a chance."

Suffered Greatly With Her Heart.

Became So Weak At Times Could Hardly Walk.

Many people may be unaware of having anything wrong with their heart till some excitement, overwork, or confinement in an overheated or overcrowded room, or public building makes them feel faint and dizzy.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, flagging energy or physical breakdown, you should not wait until you case becomes desperate before you avail yourself of a perfect cure by using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. D. McGilvery, Bathurst, N.B., writes:—"Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I suffered greatly with my heart and became so weak at times I could hardly walk. A friend of mine advised me to try your Pills, which I did, and soon found great relief. They are the best medicine I have ever taken for heart trouble."

WHAT CAN THE CONSUMPTIVE DO TO BE SAFE?

The consumptive starts out with an infection located in one part of one lung. If he is not to harm himself he must not infect other parts of his body. He starts out as the only case in his home and his office. If he is not to harm his fellow man he must not infect his surroundings. How can he earn security for his fellows?

In order to prevent infection of other parts of the infected lung and of the other lung, it is necessary that sputum should be cleared out of the lungs just as soon as it comes in coughing reach. But coughing which does not produce sputum jerks the lungs and thus harms them and forces bacilli into new areas in them. Therefore, there should be enough coughing to empty the lungs, but no more than is needed for this purpose.

The throat must not become infected. The cough must keep the vocal cords clean, but it must not be hard enough to hurt them. The mouth must be kept scrupulously clean, so must the teeth, the tongue, the tonsils. Sputum must not be swallowed, because tubercular ulcers in the intestines very nearly end all possibility of cure.

Pneumonia and common colds must be avoided by keeping in the open air and avoiding people who have colds.

The man must not infect his family or his work fellows. First of all, he must not cough or sneeze without holding a handkerchief in front of his face, so that no mist may be thrown into the air. He must not spit either the sputum or ordinary spit on the floor, the wall, the bed or anywhere except into a napkin or some receptacle, which in turn must have proper care. He must not kiss those susceptible to the disease. He must have his own eating and drinking utensils. He must not handle the food of others. He must be careful that he does not stay long in badly ventilated places where sunlight does not reach.

It is difficult to infect a well-ventilated, sunlit room. He must not work at a dusty trade.

Following these few simple rules, he is a good neighbour and a good fellow workman. As an associate he is safe and he should be allowed an opportunity to work and to enjoy himself. On the other hand, a reckless consumptive should have fewer rights than any other man. He is an enemy to his fellow man. Perhaps more of charity and humanity would decrease the number of community enemies. How often a consumptive gets careless and reckless, bitter and vindictive, because he believes that consumption is a sin of society and that he is being made to suffer unjustly. He grows resentful and strikes right and left, or, maybe tired and worn, he ceases to care for men because he thinks that no man cares for him.

WHAT COMING OF THE PERFECT TWO-CYCLE

When, if ever, is the perfect two-cycle motor to come? A good many automobile manufacturers would give a pretty penny for a decisive answer to that question because if the perfect two-cycle motor ever does arrive, every internal combustion engine in existence to-day, which depends upon the use of valves or sliding sleeves, will at that moment become a back number.

The ideal two-cycle motor will be the simplest power maker the world has ever seen. Its working parts will consist simply of a piston, a crank shaft and the connecting rod between the two. To this may be added merely an intake system which shall admit the fresh gas. This intake must not be actuated by a poppet valve or anything resembling it.

But first and foremost, the ideal two-cycle motor must not suffer from any lack of fresh gas, and it must scavenge practically all of its burnt gas.

Up to the present no two-cycle motor has been able to do perfectly the two things that have just been mentioned. Neither have they been able to "idle" without a load, and at the same time hit with all cylinders.

The ideal two-cylinder will scavenge completely, which not even the best of four-cycle motors do now. The result will be a perfect explosive mixture, which, as it will be purer than is the case to-day with any other motor, will produce greater power than any corresponding cylinder dimensions can now show.

If in addition to the foregoing, the ideal two-cycle motor has a much longer piston stroke than is now possible, a marvellous revolution in the motor world will have been accomplished.

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

CURED HAM

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. W. C. Hutchinson

There is no other product of the farm to which the owner points with greater pride than his abundance of well-cured ham, one of the daily essentials for the table; and if it be well cured, then well cooked, we certainly have one of the most appetising dishes that can be placed before us. Should we decide to market our own "home-made," "sugar cured" hams, there would be a very great demand for them. Each year we are compelled to refuse a number of would-be purchasers. To all interested in the "sugar cured" method, we give the following recipe:

To 1,000 pounds of meat—40 pounds common salt. 10 pounds Orleans sugar, four pounds black pepper, three pounds salt petre, half pound cayenne pepper. Mix thoroughly, then rub half of the mixture on the meat, let lay two weeks, then rub on the remainder, after which let lay four weeks, then hang and smoke. As soon as the animal heat is out of the meat, we apply the first half, carefully covering the skin and flesh side alike, and also well over the hock ends.

ABOUT THE COST

The expense over salted meat is very small, and I think about equal to other methods of curing, and the amount of labor for first application is also very little more than salting, and for second application it requires the labor of one man about one hour, and for smaller quantities of meat, time and labor in proportion.

Do not think the quantity of the preparation too small, for although it may look so to one, yet it is an abundance. Each ham is placed separately upon a platform, there to await the second application, when it is again replaced for the four weeks. Then we hang and smoke for four days from a wood fire. By this time the meat is firm and dry, and it is wrapped in newspapers, then placed in sacks made of denim, or other strong material, and hung in a cool, dark place. We have used this recipe for 15 years, have never had a ham to spoil, and have never eaten better.

The production of fertilizing compounds from atmospheric nitrogen is already extensive, so many persons being attracted to it that new processes are fast appearing. In one of these that seems especially simple, the electric spark is ingeniously drawn out more economically than by energizing magnets, as in the Birkeland and Eyde method. The apparatus consists of a hollow truncated cone, with a set of fanner blades revolving at the lower end, and having in the plane of these blades a number of slanting metal electrode strips which at one end nearly touch the tips of the revolving blades. A high tension current passing through the blades and the electrode strips bridges the intervening air-gap with a spark. As each blade passes from the near to the far end of the opposite strip the air-gap is widened out, and the spark is correspondingly lengthened. In this thin sheet of intensely hot flame, the nitrogen and oxygen unite. The revolving blades both form this zone of high temperature and draw in and project air through the flame, and the consumption of energy is small. The air passed through contains 1½ to 2 per cent. of nitrogen oxides, which are collected in lime water in the usual way.

ESTATES of the Wealthy Are Stocked with Rare and Gorgeous Fowl from a Connecticut Farm, Where Plumed Beauties Bark Like Dogs, Eat Ice Cream or Play Baseball.

Rare Cranes in Park

THEY say a Brooklyn woman found a snake in her apartments a short time ago. Brooklyn is a large burg and seemed proud of the phenomenon. Here is the tale of a small town in Connecticut that can produce a bird that barks like a dog, eats ice cream, bounces a rubber ball and holds up traffic. But the town of Darien is not bragging over it, for the simple reason that it can produce several thousand other birds as strange and rare.

We honked, but the fowl didn't move. It was nestled comfortably in the dust of the midhighway, and had such an air of private privilege that we told the chauffeur to go ahead and let the hen take its chances.

"Taint a hen," he announced, and bumped the car into a ditch to avoid the fowl. We told him to stop while we got out to see, and the "hen," annoyed at our intrusion of its privacy, stood up and barked at us.

No, we were not on a joy ride.

The bird's body was larger, though slenderer, than a large hen's, and its rising disclosed very long legs, neck and beak. And when it lifted that beak heavenward and barked again, which it did promptly when one of us knocked with his stick on a tree, the sound was like a cross between a kicked dog (yaller) and a very rusty pump handle. The latter effect was necessitated by the fact that the "hen" lowered its length of beak sharply at the end of every bark, and raised it high again for the next.

We all looked at each other solemnly to attest the fact that we had really observed the phenomenon and then continued on our way.

We didn't go far, for a confectioner's was near, and we needed something cooling. When we had each been supplied [illegible] to mix another.

"We ordered four," we said, but he only grinned, stepped around the counter and set the glass on the floor.

Then the "hen" that had barked at us stepped up, inserted the tip of her beak in the glass and consumed its contents with gusto.

"Does the town belong to it, or it to the town?" we asked, "and what may it be?"

"As near as I can remember," said the clerk, "it is a cinnamon bun and it lives at the bird farm."

We arose as one person.

"Where is the bird farm?" we asked.

If you wanted to procure a Sarcidiornis carruculata, a Dendro-cygna arborea, a South American guan, a Siberian crane, a wydah or a Himalayan pheasant you'd think it necessary to send to the umpety-umpth parallels of latitude and longitude, wouldn't you? And if, when you got there, you were referred to Darien, Conn., you'd think the earth had stopped suddenly and slipped all the countries around onto the wrong spots.

The fact is that Mr. G. D. Tilley's seventy acre farm is, as far as its live stock is concerned, a condensed map of the globe, for fowl are there from more countries than you ever heard tell of. Like most other things, it "just happened," Mr. Tilley began, and then went on, and before long museums and "zoos" found out that when they wanted some especially rare bird it was better to send to Mr. Tilley than around the world.

Another reason why Mr. Tilley "went on" is that American owners of large estates are taking up the beautiful European custom of ornamenting their places with rare land and water fowl, and Mr. Tilley is using their booty as a means of gratifying his own.

Freaks of the Farm.

Mr. Tilley took us around and introduced us to the many varieties, but I might as well try to recite the dictionary as their names. Pheasants and cranes are easy to remember, though, and I am prepared to take oath:—

That when I approached the pen of the crowned pigeons of India one of their number lifted high on its head a crown that had previously been lying on its back and, with wings and side plumage spread with all the effect of a grand dame's ruffles, took dance steps from side to side as it approached me until if it had not been for the wire netting separating us I would have advanced with hand on heart, curtsied and joined in the minuet.

That the Manchurian pheasant has perfect white mustaches of the Emperor William variety.

That the Sarus cranes of India and the Paradise cranes amuse each other by posturing, leaping and throwing things about till it is easy to see where in the line of evolution Mordkin and Pavlowa got theirs.

That the golden crowned night herons wear very long pale green stockings, and that the guan, from South America, does nothing but sit and shake his head from side to side, shocked, may be, by the display.

That the "cinnamon bun," in addition to its other stunts, takes a hard boiled egg in its beak and hurls it to the ground again and again till all the shell is chipped off and the remainder left for it to eat.

Thus the "cinnamon bun" learned to play ball with itself, explains Mr. Tilley, who tells how the Seriema (I prefer the clerk's "cinnamon bun") came across a hard rubber ball left on the lawn by a youthful visitor, mistook it for an egg and hashed it to the ground.

Bounce! went the ball, and after it this West African bird, developing then and there what would be decided skill as a ball player were it not for the fact that the poor "cinnamon bun" has a game leg, arrived at in the process of capture in its West African haunts. This defect deprives it of commercial value, and, alluding to its habit of taking on the middle of the road and letting traffic navigate ditches, Mr. Tilley said that the creature would have been killed long ago had it been of value. He illustrates his philosophy on this point by the following tale:—

Crowned Cranes from Africa

Pink Pelicans

Flamingoes Just Arrived from Africa

Manchurian or Eared Pheasant

Chinese Mandarin Ducks and American Wood Ducks

Hungarian Partridges

One wealthy man sent him an order for a pink headed duck, for no better reason than that the bird is one of the rarest in existence. It took Mr. Tilley's agents two years to find one, and it cost him $100 to insure it at Lloyds just for its transportation to this country. This aside from its price and the cost of getting it here. When it arrived at Darien Mr. Tilley wired to his customer.

"Don't ship bird until Wednesday afternoon," the customer telegraphed in reply.

And on Wednesday morning the pink duck breathed its last.

"But, of course, you can sell it stuffed as a specimen," was suggested.

"Of course," said Mr. Tilley. "It costs $5 to have a bird like that stuffed and I can sell it for $8 to a museum. Then, as you say, I'd get the $3 offset to my two years' search and the couple of hundred in expenses."

But that is only one of the reasons why Mr. Tilley thinks the bird game the biggest of the gambles.

"See those Siberian cranes?" he asked, pointing to the gaunt, aesthetically tinted creatures whose color you can bet on and never quite tell who won. "I have a customer who takes some of my finest importations for her country place. I invested in those very expensive birds solely because I was certain that she would think them the finest yet. The next time she visited the place we went out to the park where I had them running. I had said nothing to her about them, so as not to spoil the surprise. Well, the surprise came, and was all mine. She said:—

"'For heaven's sake, look at those! Now, who do you suppose would have those things around?'

"A Western man came to me once and bought two teal duck—one of the smallest varieties—'to stock his lake.' I imagined from the purchase that the lake was the usual cement thimbleful in a thirty foot front yard, till I received a hot letter saying that since he had released the birds he had not seen them. I inquired and found that his lake covered one hundred and fifty acres.

"His sense of proportion was just the opposite of that of another customer. He bought two swans for his lake, and two days later came hurrying back with them. This time the lake was the cement kind, and as the swans went in with one splash the lake went out with another."

Mr Tilley took us around to see the swans, apropos of the tale. We had to pass along the apex of the steep ridge that bordered the lake, and as we went our host regaled us with an account of a Columbia College professor who went there to take photographs, and whom Mr. Tilley rescued just as a huge, irate swan was pushing him down the bank into the lake.

The tale made us glad to get onto the level, for there were swans by dozens and dozens—swans on the shore, swans in the lake, swans on the island in the middle of the lake, mute swans, whistling, trumpeter, whooping, Polish, black Australian, black neck, white and Coroscoba swans, not to mention rare ducks, geese, snipe, avocets, turnstones, sanderlings, and—and yes and so on. Anyway, there were more than that, and the strangeness of it all in an American town was enough to make one gasp.

I mentioned the beauty of the scene to its owner.

"All depends on the point of view," he said. "Take a cook we had once. She was a negress from one of the most ridiculous slums of Brooklyn. We put her in the kitchen over there that overlooks the whole lake, thinking that she'd mistake it for Beulah land and remain at least forever. In a week the housekeeper reported that she was spending every day in tears and that she wanted to go home. I interviewed her and asked what the trouble was, and she sobbed out:—'It's dem swans, Mistah Tilley, sah. Dey dem saills pas' an' saills pas', an' I kayut stan' it no mo'."

"The swans are one of my showiest features," resumed Mr. Tilley, although not by any means the costliest—except those white fellows with the black necks and red bills with blue knobs at their base."

So, of course, we asked to see something really expensive, and were taken to a woodsy park on the very border of the estate and shown some very tall and stately cranes with crowns on their heads, which were strutting as regally as if they were in European palace grounds instead of Darien, Conn.

"Just what is expensive for a bird?" we asked, trying to figure on the basis of the market price of turkey at Christmas time.

"Twelve hundred apiece for those," said Mr. Tilley, and he said it calmly, too.

Then he took us to the aviaries and let us all stand in bewilderment a while as the mad jabbering in enough different tongues to make a bird Tower of Babel. There were strange enough styles of plumage to make us think that the birds were the creations of French milliners instead of nature.

We picked out two to ask questions about, just because they happened to be in cages apart from the Babel throng. One was small, black and yellow, all beak and no tail, and, to put it mildly, unattractive. The other, smaller still, had feathers as glossy as jewels, of violet, orange, green, turquoise, black and peacock blue, and, to complete all, a white beak with a vivid carmine tip.

One Cheap Bird—$150.

We wanted to know why the ragzy black and yellow thing was honored with a place beside the little animated jewel collection, and were informed that the honor was the other way 'round, for he-rags was an African barbette, probably the only one in this country, and had a voice that put him right up in the grand opera class, while the Gouldian lady finch, in spite of her fine feathers, was worth but a paltry hundred and fifty.

Mr. Tilley had become so used to being surrounded by the rare birds of all countries, gathered together in one small Connecticut town, that it is a hard matter for him to point out their peculiarities, because they have ceased to be peculiar to him. But there is one that still "gets" him every time he looks at it. He drew me aside and pointed to a real creature like a cross between a pelican and a crane.

"See anything queer about it?" he asked.

I considered a while. Most of them were queer, but this one was merely dumpy as to body and nondescript as to plumage. And then I caught on. He was, like the pelican, mostly beak, but his beak was on upside down! Just a slight curve the wrong way. It made him look like one of the "before" pictures in a make-your-face-over institute. He comes from Java, is an adjutant stork and the only member of the bird family with just that peculiarity of beak.

Then we wandered into a sensation. It was a drizzly day and not a gleam of the sun had been visible for hours. But suddenly I was fairly hit in the eyes—dazzled, with the sort of splendor that the sun takes on to impress his worshippers with just as he is about to make his final leap and leave us to a night's darkness. After I blinked hard I looked, and there sitting quietly in the grass was a pheasant from India. Just a meek creature with no peculiarity of form or character, but it fairly shed out light like the sun, in a way that made one think Nature had preceded the Curies after all in the discovery of radio active substances.

That living sunset reminded me it was about time to go, so we shut our eyes as we hurried past the remaining aviaries. But I peeped and as a result came away with a fine plot for romantic tragedy of birdland. Remember the blood dipped beak of the little lying jewel collection? Well, it was into a doves' pen that I peeped, and there sitting alone and triste as Ophelia was a dove of that indescribably soft tint which precedes the dawning, not a feather a shade different to disturb the soulful melancholy of it all. The bird turned as that I saw its breast, and as I saw it, cried out with sudden pity, for right in the middle was a great spot of red. I turned to my host in panic, and as I turned he laughed, so that I looked again and saw that the wound was painted there by that most wonderful of all fakirs, Nature.

Now, I ask you, is it hard to believe in a remote love tragedy between the Gouldian lady finch and the bleeding heart dove of India?—of which the carmine beak of one and breast of the other are the indited record in the most romantic of all books, the book of evolution.

TRAINING THE SOCIAL SECRETARY.

NOT long ago a woman in society went to a college friend who had undertaken the work of fitting men and women to fill certain positions in the business and social world and asked her to train a social secretary. The fashionable young matron complained that she could not find a young woman capable of doing the work. The applicants were either secretaries for office positions or they were women without any practical business knowledge.

So the college woman learned the young matron's needs and trained a girl for the position. It took three months to coach her in all the usual phases of social secretaryship and assistant hostess. Since then dozens of social secretaries have been trained to work for women prominent socially both here and in other cities, and the work of keeping the social machinery of a household running smoothly has become more and more desirable.

As an occupation the post of social secretary has expanded until it might well be called a profession. In the beginning women who took up this work had only to know how to write social notes correctly, keep an engagement book and visiting list without mistakes, to look after household accounts and attend to charity giving in order to be qualified to fill this position.

But the social secretary of to-day must have all sorts of knowledge at her command and be capable, at a moment's notice, of running off the most trying social entertainment without the assistance of the mistress of the house. She must be more than secretary and just a little less than mistress of the house.

"The first and most important qualification for social secretaryship is tact," said Miss Elizabeth Rachel Wylie, M. A., who is a special trainer of young women who work for society hostesses. "Tact the social secretary must have, and if of certain situations which arise at almature has not endowed her with any most any social gathering in the fashionthen we must train her in the handlingable household.

Miss Elizabeth R. Wylie.

"The social secretary must be a college graduate. Society patrons insist on the distinction of a degree whether they have ever been at college or not. And unless the girl has learned stenography and typewriting, which many of them take now, we send her to master this part of her preparation before giving her other branches.

"We are not an employment agency. On the contrary, we do not find situations for persons in any line of work. Our aim is to fit and train men and women to suit the position and to work for certain employers. We make them efficient in any branch of work desired of them and we call ourselves the efficiency centre. We handle, individually, each case that comes to us, and we study the peculiarities of temperament and the requirements of the employer in order to supply some one who will understand what she wants without requiring a great deal of explanation each time.

"There are hundreds of girls who think that all the social secretary need know is how to write a letter. That is a very small part of her work. We teach her the correct phraseology of different kinds of notes used in social and business correspondence. Many of the society woman's letters are business ones, and these must be written with professional skill.

"It would be impossible for the secretary without special training to take down one-third of what the society woman directs her to do as she goes hurriedly over the day's demands. Perhaps while she is having her hair dressed or a gown fitted she gives her orders. She begins by telling the secretary to write to this person for a certain address, to that person a note of condolence, to send flowers to a third, ask a fourth to use her opera tickets for the next night, to make dozens of appointments, to have a paper prepared for her club meeting to-morrow and send out invitations to a series of teas, luncheons and dinners. She rattles on at a rapid rate and expects the secretary to catch it all, for the employer is too busy to repeat her instructions.

"But, after all, this is only a small part of the secretary's work. We show her how to manage social entertainments successfully, to choose and arrange the flowers, to see that the table appointments are perfect, and, in addition to these duties, we train her to know the guests and to know how to entertain them.

"The woman who is immersed in social duties and pleasures has so little time to read and keep abreast of the times that she must depend on her secretary. So the social assistant coaches her in the current topics of the day while the mistress is being dressed. The secretary runs over the newspapers and late magazines, selects what she thinks will make interesting conversation for the afternoon tea table or the dinner that night, and dinners it down or explains it as the case requires. Her object, and that for which she is paid, is to prepare subjects for general conversation, show her employer how to handle an argument and make her generally interesting without the employer having to spend very much time on this part of her education."

But the efficiency centre does more than prepare girls and women for social secretary work. It trains men as secretaries, it trains them for any work required, and it also does work of any kind that physicians, educators, ministers and all professional men and women may want. Another of its specialties is research work, and to facilitate preparation in this branch it has recently opened headquarters in the New York Public Library.

MARRIAGE CEREMONY IN THE EAST

BOMBAY, DEC. 8.—It was our first opportunity of seeing a marriage ceremony in the east, so we readily accepted the invitation given to us by a friend of the bridegroom to witness a Parsee wedding. All Parsee weddings take place after sunset, and this one was fixed for 7 o'clock in the evening. As we alighted from our chair at the building set apart for Parsee festivities and for marriage, but not for worship, a native band of musicians arrived and played a number of musical selections very creditably, both before and after the ceremony. In an open space outside the building there was an assembly of Parsee men who had been invited to the wedding, all dressed in white, which is the full dress costume of a Parsee man.

We were conducted into the building and found the main room filled with hundreds of Parsee ladies and children waiting to witness the ceremony. The ladies all wore saries, a kind of scarf or shawl bordered on each side and measuring usually four to six yards in length and about 40 inches in width. Many of the saries we saw were of considerable value, being of very fine texture and very handsomely embroidered, and we were informed by our Parsee guide that all were of Chinese make. The colours of the saries were of almost every hue, and the effect of these multitudinous bright tints in a well lighted room, together with the jewelry worn by the ladies was such that the western imagination cannot picture and only the most graphic pen could hope to describe.

FLOWERS MAKE GAUZE.

The room itself had been tastefully decorated with hanging festoons of flowers and leaves. In the centre of the room was a platform screened on all sides with what appeared to be a thin gauze, but in reality it was a tracery effect of small flowers, chiefly white, fastened on thread crossed to form a small diamond check, giving, as we have said, the form of a gauze screen. On the platform inside this screen, chairs had been placed for the bride and bridegroom and their immediate relatives, and for the two appointed witnesses to the marriage. We were invited to sit close to this platform, and as soon as we were seated we were garlanded with a wreath of flowers, an oriental sign of welcome.

The bride was at this stage conducted to an open space near the platform, where she stood while her mother and others garlanded her with flowers, after which a number of gifts were presented to her. She was then led by her friends to the main entrance of the building to await the arrival of the bridegroom and the high priest. In the course of a few moments the bridegroom arrived, when he in turn was garlanded, and offerings of various sorts were made to him, among which was a bouquet of flowers which we took to be a symbol, as he held it in his hands without cessation to the close of the marriage ceremony.

CEREMONY INTERESTING.

The bride and bridegroom were then conducted by the high priest and an assistant priest to the platform, and when all except the priests were seated, the high priest took a piece of white cloth, and placed it between the bride and bridegroom as a type of the barrier preventing their marriage until they had declared repeatedly in reply to his questions, oft repeated, that they were wishful to be united in marriage.

When they had repeated their assent sufficiently, the bride and bridegroom were seated side by side, and a long incantation was given by the high priest, in which his assistant joined at intervals, but as this was all in the Parsee language, which few, if any, of the audience understood, it imparted no interest to the ceremony, and most of the persons assembled spent the time conversing with those sitting near them.

A curious incident of the ceremony was that both priests during the recital of the addresses constantly threw grains of rice at the bride and bridegroom, a feature usually left in England to their friends to perform as they leave the church. After the marriage a repast was given in the grounds adjoining the building, to all the invited guests, and we were cordially asked to participate, but as we had to journey by rail and our train was about due, we were obliged to refuse this hospitality.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT DISINTEGRATING

The Washington monument at the national capital, highest of stone structures and designed by its builders to stand as long as the pyramids, is suffering from a disintegration that, while not immediately fatal, will materially shorten its life, says John S. Mosby, jr., in the December "Popular Mechanics" magazine. This great shaft, 555 feet in height, consists of walls 15 feet thick at the base. These walls are made up of an outer facing of marble blocks and a four-foot inner wall made of granite and other hard stone. Between these two walls there is filling of heterogenous stone, held together by a cement. This describes the first 190 feet, which is the part now affected. This part was built continuously from the beginning of the structure. Then for years the construction halted at that height. It is the interior filling between these walls that is now, through the deadly effect of heat and cold and dryness and dampness attacking it alternately, beginning to disintegrate and ooze out between the joints of the outer wall and the crevices made by the action of the elements.

While Rambling—A benevolent old gentleman while rambling through a wood met a man who boasted that he owned the seven best rat catchers in the country, alluding to seven dogs which, as usual he had with him. "My good fellow," said the benevolent one, "why do you waste your time bothering with these ridiculous dogs? Wouldn't there be far more profit in keeping the same number of pigs?" Looking pityingly at the questioner the doggy man retorted—"What do you take me for? A fine fule I should look rattin' with pigs."

Killed By Large Stone Slab

NEW YORK, DEC. 13.—While William Sweesey, of Holtsville, L. I., a strike breaking cleaner, was shovelling refuse into a cart in front of 239 Third street yesterday afternoon, a heavy slab of stone dropped from a tenement roof and struck him on the neck. He was killed instantly.

Policeman Manning, of the Fifth street station, on guard duty with the carts, was standing close to Sweesey when the stone fell. He blew his whistle for help and being joined by several other policemen climbed to the roofs of the tenement from which the stone must have come. No one was in sight and a quick search of the tenements left the police no wiser.

Meanwhile many persons had gathered about the fallen street cleaner and it took the reserves, headed by Captain McDermott, of the Fifth street station, to keep order. No attempt was made to attack the street cleaners and drivers as yet unmurdered.

When the detectives assigned to that precinct got to work they decided that a good many persons in the neighbourhood must have seen the stone thrown and began to ask pointed questions. Learning that a striking street cleaner lived at 240 East Third street, they went there to ask about Joseph Wince. They found Wince in bed, clad in his underclothes and apparently asleep. He was taken to the police station, where he said at first that he hadn't the least idea who threw the stone. Later he told the detectives to question George Hendricks, of 48 Avenue B, another striker.

The detectives met Hendricks as he was coming down from the roof of the building in which he lives. He said that he had been flying pigeons on the roof. He was taken to the police station and there in Hendrick's presence Wince said that Hendricks had been on the roof of the same building on Saturday when some one dropped bottles on the heads of a street cleaning squad.

Wince also said that his wife had told him that she saw Hendricks come from one of the Third street tenements soon after Sweesey was killed. Hendricks said that Wince was a liar and Wince's wife said that she had never told her husband about seeing Hendricks. Both men were locked up, although no definite charge was made against them.

Sweesey had just started away with the last of the four loads of refuse that were to make his day's work when his foreman noticed that the cart was not full and ordered him back. Sweesey was putting his shovel into a pile of refuse when the stone fell.

SHORT SERMONS IN TERSE TERMS

THE QUESTION OF FRUIT

Dr. Axil Emil Gibson in the "Dietetic Hygienic Gazette" discusses the value of fruit as food. There are, he says, two questions to be considered in relation to fruit as an element of diet—the biologic and the physiologic, the racial and the typical, the predispositions arising from native traits and environments, and the intolerance to certain foodstuffs due to their constitutional or chemical peculiarities. Fruit does not combine well with other foodstuffs; such a diet invites gastric and intestinal troubles. Fruit in order to be thoroughly enjoyed and do the most good, must be eaten alone. Even then fruit must be administered with care. As to the choice of fruit, if the degestion be weak, the apple, the pear, grape or orange, corresponding to conditions and seasons of the year, are the safest and most readily tolerated of all fruits. Dr. Gibson thinks that as meat was necessary for the attainment by force of arms of material success, so is fruit essential to the conquests of a subsequent humanity on a moral scale.

Frenchmen Protest.

Montreal, Dec. 19.—That the French in the English-speaking provinces were treated with far less generosity than that accorded the English-speaking minority in the Province of Quebec and that the rights of the French-Canadian citizens of the Province of Quebec and of the Dominion generally were grievously trampled upon both officially and semi-officially, was the dual declaration of Mr. Armand Lavergne, M.P.P., speaking before the Canadian Club of Montreal yesterday afternoon on the position of the French language in Canada.

A strong denunciation of the methods of the Government in requiring all French candidates for the civil service to be able to speak English when little or no knowledge of the French language was required from English-speaking candidates for Government positions was indulged in by Mr. Lavergne, who further charged that French-speaking citizens of the Province of Quebec were even unable to get printed receipts in their own language from the postmasters of districts in the heart of their own provinces.

In conclusion, Mr. Lavergne said that while he was considered an extremist, he would, as long as he could draw a breath, see to it that the English-speaking minority in this province was accorded the greatest generosity that it was possible for the French majority to bestow.

To Study Canals.

Ottawa, Dec. 19.—The first real move towards the realization of the Georgian Bay Canal scheme has been made by the Public Works Department. Arthur St. Laurent, Deputy Minister of Public Works and engineer in charge of the Georgian Bay Ship Canal, leaves Ottawa to-day in company with Mr. Coutlee, the assistant engineer of the Georgian Bay Ship Canal, for Panama, via New Orleans.

The object of the two engineers is to examine the works and obtain information that may be useful when the Georgian Bay Ship Canal is placed under construction.

The two gentlemen will be absent from Ottawa for six weeks, and during that time will consult with all the eminent engineers who made possible the opening of the great Panama route, as the latest machinery and appliances for work of that kind are at the canal. Mr. St. Laurent and his assistant will make a report on them.

Farmers Write Borden.

Ottawa, Dec. 19.—Premier Borden is in receipt of a large number of letters from western farmers, in which attention is called to the fact that Saturday was the first anniversary of the visit to Ottawa of the mammoth delegation of farmers, which made a large number of demands upon the late Government.

All the letters contain the hope that as little time as possible will be lost by the Government in meeting the requests made by the members of the delegation.

Brantford and Paris Dry.

Brantford, Dec. 19.—Announcement has been made that strong efforts will be made in Paris at the municipal elections to elect a temperance council for the submission of local option in January, 1913. It is understood a similar movement will be made in Brantford, so that voting will take place in both municipalities at the same time.

LOOK TO EUROPE.

Canada Must Compete For Trade, Says Sir Wilfrid.

Montreal, Dec. 19.—Members of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association, at their annual banquet last night heard two members of the Dominion Cabinet, together with the leader of the Nationalists, each of whom expressed divergent views and ideas. While Sir Wilfrid Laurier emphasized the necessity of looking after foreign trade and not b[illegible] out out by European nations. Hon. George E. Foster argued that interprovincial trade relations were perhaps more important still; and Henri Bourassa, speaking for the Province of Quebec, made an eloquent and forceful plea for the use of the French language throughout the Dominion.

The toast to the Dominion Parliament was first responded to by Hon. Charles J. Doherty, who was followed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Sir Wilfrid urged that attention must be given to western European nations, to which he said Great Britain and the United States were making a bee line to capture trade.

"Canada should be not only in the front rank of commercial nations, but the every first of the commercial nations of the world. To that end, let me tell you to wake up; the dawn is upon us."

Hon. George E. Foster suggested that attention should be turned to the interprovincial trade of the Dominion.

"Lend as we may the praises of trade between ourselves and nations across the border and across the sea, right here amongst us ought there to be the interchanged of our diversified products. The policy is good which leads to the development of trade between Canada and foreign countries, but that policy is better which leads also to the devolpment of home productions and their interchange between our products," he said.

Pray For U. S. Senate.

London, Eng., Dec. 19.—Influential support is being given among Englishmen of all parties to the celebration of a century of Anglo-American peace. The Morning Post makes the piquant suggestion that the best celebration would be to convert the Rush-Bagot agreement into a treaty securing the removal of all armed forces now upon the Great Lakes, thus ensuring the future peaceful character of these lakes. If, as proposed, a special day be devoted to prayer, The Post says, let us all pray that the Senate of the United States be moved to consent to such a treaty.

Northumberland Fruit Growers.

Brighton, Dec. 19.—At an enthusiastic meeting of the fruit growers here yesterday afternoon, the Northumberland Co-operative Fruit Growers' Association was formed, and the following officers were elected: President, W. J. Farley; vice-president, O. E. Post; secretary-treasurer, E. C. Brown; executive, Robt. Wade, Dr. C. M. Sanford, S. T. Tinson.

R. B. Scripture, who was instrumental in organizing, was appointed manager.

After the "Plumbing Trust."

Los Angeles, Dec. 19.—The Government filed in the federal court here yesterday a suit to dissolve the so-called plumbing trust. The allegations are made in a bill in equity that the Pacific Coast Plumbing Supply Association "and others" have conspired since 1907 to restrain trade and interstate commerce.

Blaze In Kingston.

Kingston, Dec. 19.—Kingston's main business block had a narrow escape from destruction when fire broke out in the apartments of J. H. Melville, over the store of D. A. Weese, photographer. It was checked in the nick of time by Chief Armstrong and his men. The loss of $3,000 is partially covered by insurance.

Woman Obstructed Police.

Berlin, Ont., Dec. 19.—Mrs. O'Connor, who assisted her husband, James O'Connor, to escape from Bailiff Orr, Guelph, while being brought to the county jail here to await trial on a charge of housebreaking, was placed under arrest by the local police and remanded until Thursday. She is charged with obstructing the police in the performance of their duty.

Swore Off Bed.

An old woman's remarkable vow was told at Birmingham not long ago, when she summoned a neighbor for throwing a live cat through her window. She said to the magistrate: "I have never been to bed or undressed since last Christmas twelvemonth, when my pet dog was poisoned. When I was helplessly ill she would scratch the window and doors to attract neighbors," she added. "When she died I swore I would never go to bed again, and have kept my oath over eighteen months."

Villages Sometimes Burned.

In fighting the plague in India whole infected villages are sometimes burned. In the towns evacuation of dwellings and their disinfection by sunlight and air, plus disinfectants are practically all that can be done.

A Strict Grammarian.

"You think a great deal of your husband, don't you?" said the visiting relative.

"You have the wrong preposition," answered Mr. Meekton's wife, with the cold tones of the superior woman. "I think for him."—Washington Star.

PITCHED BATTLE

Two Men Killed and Another Fatally Injured ina Fierce Italian Riot in New York

FIFTEEN ARRESTED

Special to The Examiner.

New York, N. Y., Dec. 19.—In a fierce pitched battle between two factions of Italians armed with revolvers and knives in Jefferson Park about midnight last night, two men were killed, one fatally wounded and several others more or less hurt. Fifteen are under arrest and the police are searching the Italian district for forty others alleged to be implicated. It is said that the Black Handers or Camorrists incited the riot. There are twenty-five thousand Italians in the city for Christmas, and more trouble is feared.

3 Lives Lost In Chicago Blaze

Examiner Special:

Chicago, Ill., Dec. 19.—Three furnace stokers are missing and believed to have lost their lives in a fire which attacked the Board of Trade building about three o'clock this morning, and causing one hundred thousand dollars damages. One thousand guests of the Kaiserhoff and New Victoria Hotels, which adjoin the burning building, were aroused from their beds by bell boys and night clerks, and fled to the streets in their night garments, many of them carrying their clothes with them.

Railway In the Hands Of Receivers

Special to The Examiner.

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 19.—The Wabash Railroad will to-day pass into the hands of receivers as the result of a suit filed against it last night. The change will not affect the operation of the road or the sixteen thousand employees. Internal dissension is believed to have caused the trouble.

GREAT PROGRESS

Report received at the Grand Trunk Pacific headquarters regarding track laying on the new line in Western Canada up to December 2nd, shows the progress made. On the main line the end of track has now reached 1057.5 miles west of Winnipeg. On the Alberta Coal Branch, which is being built from Bickerdike into the Brazeau Coal Fields, the track has reached mile 21.4 south of Bickerdike. On the Tofield-Calgary Branch the steel has been laid 105.3 miles south of Tofield. On the Young—Prince Albert Branch the end of track is at mile 67.3 north of Young. The entire portion of the Branch between Melville and Regina has been completed, a mileage of 98.4. The 32 miles on the Melville - Canora Branch has also been completed. On the Moose Jaw Branch between Regina and Moose Jaw, track has been laid 1.1 miles west of Regina.

On the Mountain Division steel has been laid to the mouth of Tunnel at mile 104 east of Prince Rupert.

A PERTINENT QUESTION RE THE POWER BY-LAW

"Ratepayer" Does Not Want to Buy a Pig in a Poke and Wants More Information Before He is Willing to Vote for the Hydro-Electric Measure on New Year's Day.

To the Editor of The Examiner,—

Dear Sir,—I notice that a Bylaw is to be submitted to the electors on the 1st of the new year in the following words:

"Are you in favour of obtaining from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario a supply of electric power?"

This certainly is a very innocent and harmless looking question, and if it is as harmless as it looks, I think it should be carried unanimously—but is it so harmless?

If this question is answered in the affirmative by the electors, are we not giving power to any succeeding council of our city to enter into a contract with the said commission, regardless of cost, and without any further submission of the question to the ratepayers? I am in favour of the cheapest power we can secure, but I am not in favour of buying a pig in a poke, nor will I vote for this bylaw, nor do I think many others will vote for it, unless we have the most positive assurance that no contract can be entered into by any council until after the details of such contract has been again submitted to the ratepayers. A letter from our City Solicitor would be timely.

If you can enlighten me on the above point you will confer a great favour on many ratepayers, as well as myself.

Thanking you for the space.

RATEPAYER.

Peterborough, Ont., Dec. 19, 1911.

ONLOOKER MAKES SOME POINTED COMPARISONS

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I am a man of quiet habits and of some leisure; I have had opportunity and have paid considerable attention to events preceding, accompanying and following the late election. The strangely assorted "issues" of the late election and the way in which the issues have been turned against those who have supported them, have induced me to try to find out what has been accomplished by the application of similar issues during the past generation or so,—what good has been done for anything but the political party they were associated with.

I have been a resident of Peterborough for nearly the past quarter of a century, and while I have been in that time connected with politics as an humble elector, I have never been a partisan, but have divided my vote, as I thought, in the interests of the country I have voted both for and against Conservative and Liberal and P. P. A. issues, and no man can say I can be called a bigot. I am not a Roman Catholic, and have never been associated with Orangeism. I have, I think, been an impartial looker-on, and, perhaps have seen more of the game than those who played it.

I have seen the community, at election times, split up by religious factions and hostility to the minority, and have often asked myself what these bigoted campaigns have accomplished. This question has come up afresh by late events, which have shown how little has been accomplished in the last round.

What has been accomplished in the endeavour to crush the minority or the organization or body the minority represents? Let us see. While it has been slanghanged, abused, and boycotted by the self-named defenders of an opposing faith, it seems to have flourished.

Within my memory in Peterborough, I find that in the face of the P. P. A., and kindred assaults, St. Peter's Cathedral has been rebuilt, enlarged, and remodelled at great expense. I have seen, as we all have seen, a splendid new palace acquired for the bishop of the proscribed faith; we have seen a new priest's house acquired and enlarged. The convent building has been enlarged to almost twice its former size. A splendid new separate school, one of the best in the city, has been built. I find that a new House of Providence has been erected and a costly, beautiful homestead and building acquired for the purpose of an Orphans' Home. I have noticed that a beautiful suburban residence has been acquired for what they call the Mother's House for the Sisterhood of St. Joseph's and a large addition added. I notice that a splendid new stone church has been built in the south end of the city. I also see that fine, new churches have been built in Galway and Havelock. A fine new church has been erected at Lakefield and recently a new parsonage for the Rev. Father in charge has also been provided. A new home has been provided for the St. Alphonsus Lyceum with reading room, gymnasium, bowling alley and reception hall, which is one of the most complete institutions of its kind in Ontario, together with a splendid entertainment hall. I find that St. Joseph's Hospital has been built and that a new maternity wing is about to be added to it after several years of successful operation of the hospital and favour with the public, and also a residence for the nurses.

And this proscribed part of the community that has done all this, have done it themselves.

The public owes the Nicholl's Hospital to the generosity of Mrs. Nicholls, built and enlarged by her money—it owes the Y. M. C. A., very largely to her. It owes Jackson Park Inverlea and Nicholl's Oval—bought and presented to the public and maintained by the money of the late Mrs. Nicholls. The Protestant Home is being built by public subscription and the extreme "Protestant" wing may have contributed a few dollars, but not enough to constitute themselves the public.

When one contrasts the respective accomplishments of the two religious sections of the community, especially that which confines itself to loud profession and little practice, one may well ask what has been accomplished, what is being accomplished by these periodical violent attacks on the minority. What has been accomplished during the past twenty-five years of turmoil and strife and heart-burnings they have stirred up? All I can see is that these attacks have served to show the difference between the two modes of advancement—one endeavouring to look after the welfare of their people—the other endeavouring to create strife without any good accomplishment.

What has been gained in any other way? During the recent Dominion election campaign these influences identified under the name of some sort of Federation were all active in their religion and loyalty campaign against the minority, and, after the election their first action was to appoint Mr. Harry Phelan, a Roman Catholic, to a lucrative Government office, Collector of Inland Revenue, while a score or so of office-hungry Federationists stood meekly in the background, out in the cold, and wept and choked down their medicine with wry faces. This shows that their whole campaign was one of deception and that the unthinking and movable person was carried away to be made a victim of.

I think I have shown that during the past quarter of a century, at least, the minority have steadily gone on, endeavouring to erect and have for the benefit of their own people the institutions that are necessary for the proper care of those for whom they are responsible, and when we look to the other side of the issue we ask and wonder what has been accomplished, or what has been done to arouse or hinder the feeling that in some quarters is attempted to be created.

There can be no question of doubt about it, that the minority of the city and county have done a very great deal to improve and advance our city, while some have endeavoured to stir up strife, ill-feeling and dissensions in what would be without their interference a peaceful and harmonious community.

Yours truly,

ON-LOOKER.

SERIOUS CHARGE AGAINST FORMER PETERBORO' BOY

ROCHESTER, N.Y., DEC. 19.—Justin Gorman, of 343 Rubidge St., Peterborough, Ont., who came to this city five years ago, may be arrested on a serious charge, if George N. Flowerday of Franklin street, and Prosecutor Marsh Taylor of the District Attorney's office, see fit. When Gorman first arrived in Rochester he became friendly with Flowerday, who at that time, was not married. Flowerday secured Gorman a position and befriended him in other ways. Four years ago Flowerday married. Soon after his marriage he was offered a position in Chicago, which he accepted. He left Rochester and was gone for thirteen weeks. Gorman meanwhile lived at the Flowerday home, where he had a room.

Upon his return Flowerday became suspicious. He had no cause for complaint until November 24th. On the evening of that date he met Gorman with his wife, walking in Franklin street. Flowerday first saw them as they were coming out of an hotel. His anger was too much for him, and running up behind the couple he smashed Gorman over the head with a gold-headed umbrella. Gorman was at the Hasnemann hospital for over a week. During the trial in the police court this morning Gorman was warned not to incriminate himself. Flowerday was discharged by Judge Chadsey, who stated that he was disgusted with the whole affair.

MAYOR'S ADDRESS

His Worship at the Final Meeting of Council Thanks the Members for Their Kindness and Assistance

ALDERMEN SPEAK

At last night's meeting of the City Council Mayor Morrow stated that he wished to thank all the members of the Council for the kindness they had shown him during his term of office, and gave them credit for the business-like manner, in which they had transacted the city's business. He stated that he believed that they did all they could for the benefit of the ratepayers, while the latter are not aware of the time the members of the Council spend in doing their business. He thought that all the citizens, in general, owed the Council considerable for the manner in which they had performed their work during the year, and concluded by wishing them all a merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year.

Ald. Morgan said he had enjoyed his associations with Mayor Morrow for the last two years. He was very sorry that the Mayor's term had closed, but he assured him that in his opinion, he was one of the best Mayors the city ever had. He said that the Mayor had always been frank and free with his opinions, no matter what the question under discussion might be, and when he said that his services had been greatly appreciated, he believed that he was expressing the opinions of the citizens in general.

Ald. Anderson also heartily endorsed what Ald. Morgan had said, and added that the Mayor had always dealt with any good business propositions in a very intelligent manner, and he hoped that the next Mayor would be able to sustain the reputation the retiring one had made.

Dr. Elmore Harris Dead At Delhi, India

Examiner Special:

Toronto, Dec. 19.—Rev. Dr. Elmer Harris, Baptist, one of the chief shareholders of the Massey Harris Company, founder of the Bible training school here and governor of McMaster University, died in Delhi, India, yesterday of smallpox, contracted while attending the Durbar festivities. He was on his honeymoon, having startled his friends here about two months ago by marrying a young lady aged 24 and starting on a trip around the world. Just before sailing from New York he donated $30,000 toward a new church building in memory of his first wife. He came into great prominence about a year ago by his attacks against the professors at McMaster, who were alleged to have unorthodox views. He was about sixty years of age and leaves a widow, one daughter and three sons.

5 Years For Arson

Special to The Examiner:

St. Catharines, Dec. 19.—Protesting with many tears and pathetic gestures that he was innocent, John H. Staunton, an aged and deaf fruit tree agent, was to-day sentenced to five years in the penitentiary for burning down the barn of Walter Leyton last September.

Out Of Danger

TORONTO, DEC. 19.—At the Methodist mission headquarters here a cable has been received saying that all the Methodist missionaries in China are safely on their way to Shanghai, and it is assumed they are now all accounted for and well protected.

A PUBLIC MEETING TO DISCUSS THE MEASURE

Council Decides to Endeavour to Get Hon. Adam Beck Here to Address the Citizens in Regard to the Hydro-Electric Power By-law—Aldermen Met Last Night.

What will likely be the last meeting of the city fathers, for the present year, was held last night in the Council Chambers, when a number of important matters were dealt with, the principal one of which was the hydro-electric power by-law. There were present: Mayor Morrow, chairman; Alds. Duncan, Metheral, Edgar, Brown, Graham, Anderson Kerneghan, Morgan.

Mayor Morrow stated that he called the meeting for the purpose of deciding what action they would take as regards the power by-law.

Ald. Duncan stated that he thought that the City Clerk should get in touch with Hon. Adam Beck, to try and get him to address a meeting here in the interests of the by-law to be voted on at the coming Municipal elections. He stated that the report around the city at present was to the effect that the Council would have to take the power no matter what charge was made by the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, and he thought that they should be enlightened before election day.

Mayor Morrow suggested that a Committee be elected.

Ald. Duncan, Metheral and Anderson all thought that it was a splendid idea to have Hon. Adam Beck, and they were also in favour of forming a Committee to look after the matter.

On motion of Ald. Graham, seconded by Ald. Edgar, a resolution was passed to the effect that a committee be appointed, consisting of the Mayor, Ald. Duncan, and City Clerk Armstrong, to arrange for a public meeting in the interests of promoting a favourable vote on the question of obtaining electric power from the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, and to take such action for the purpose that they deemed advisable.

Ald. Morgan said that he hoped that the citizens would back the city up on this move, for he believed that the citizens knocked the Council, more or less, on everything they went to do, and besides this, he believed the Seymour Power Company was going to hold a public meeting, and he felt sure that they would do all in their power to knock out the movement.

Doig Could Not Do It.

A by-law entitled "A By-law to amend By-law No. 1635," was read and passed. It provided for the transferring of the snow ploughing contract of John Doig to Jas. McWilliams, as Doig was unable to carry out his contract.

Communications, Etc.

A communication was read from Mr. Dobbin, of the Review, suggesting that the Hydro-Electric By-law be published three times in the other daily papers, as he thought it could have a little more than the ordinary publicity, being an important issue.

Ald. Kerneghan moved, seconded by Ald. Graham, that it be published in the other papers as requested. Ald. Duncan suggested having the By-laws printed as circulars and distributed around the houses, but this did not meet with favour.

The matter of selecting a site for the small-pox kitchen was left with the Property Committee with power to act.

Several minor communications were read and received.

The reports of the Board of Works and Finance Committees were read and adopted.

Ald. Anderson moved that the City Treasurer be instructed and authorized to pay all accounts presented before the end of the year, after they had been passed by the Financial Committee; this being the last meeting of the Council, the others agreed, and the motion carried.

CABINET MINISTERS ARE AT LOGGERHEADS

Special to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, DEC. 18.—Commenting on the fact Hon. Mr. Doherty failed to put in an appearance at the banquet in honour of Hon. F. D. Monk last Friday evening, Le Canada says this morning:

"There has been a coolness between Mr. Monk and Mr. Doherty for over a week, and during that time they have not spoken to each other. The rupture between these two colleagues of Mr. Borden is the result of a lively altercation, which took place in the office of their other colleague, Mr. Hazen, at Ottawa recently."

"Mr. Monk was in Hon. Mr. Hazen's office," declares the article, "demanding the heads of the Harbour Commission of Montreal. Mr. Hazen refused to make any change, saying the Board of Trade and the other financial interests of the city want the three commissioners named by the Laurier Government to continue their splendid work.

"Mr. Monk, it is said, persisted and Mr. Hazen finally suggested that Mr. Doherty be asked to give an opinion on the question. 'If you can convince him, we will give you the heads of the commissioners, and replace them by your own men,' said Mr. Hazen. Mr. Doherty was sent for, and he stood firmly by his stand that the commissioners should not be changed."

Le Canada declares there was a heated fight between the French and the Irish representatives of the metropolis in the Borden Cabinet, and that the Minister of Marine had to intervene to prevent them pommelling each other.

"And since that incident," Le Canada concludes "Mr. Doherty and Mr. Monk, who did not love each other very fondly before, have maintained the attitude of a pair of Chinese dogs".

THE WEATHER

Although there was a little sharper feeling in the air last night and this morning, we are still being favoured with beautiful Canadian winter weather—clear, sharp and calm. The thermometer last night was down to 10 degrees above. The barometer to-day is especially high—30.62—indicating that an area of high pressure is slowly passing over us. As the weather in the Northwest is still quite moderate, there is no likelihood of any severe cold for a few days at least.

THE FIRE INSPECTION

Mr. R. E. Wilson, C.E., Inspector For the Fire Underwriters Gives Some Interesting Figures to the Examiner

IS NON-COMMITTAL

As a large number of the citizens are aware, the fire fighting facilities of this city have undergone a rigid inspection at the hands of Mr. R. E. Wilson, C.E., inspector for the Underwriters Association. This inspection includes the testing of the city's water pressure, hydrants, fire fighting apliances and everything connected with the department. Mr. Wilson has concluded his work as far as this city is concerned, and it is understood that the test has been very satisfactory.

As stated before in these columns, Mr. Wilson is very non-committal in the matter of expression of opinion, and when interviewed by the Examiner last night, he refused to divulge any information that might savour of an opinion. This he did by handing out the formula, "I have nothing to say." Although on other matters pertaining to the work, Mr. Wilson conversed quite freely.

It is three years since the Underwriters' inspector visited this city before, and in that time the population has increased four thousand, "and as the population increases," explained Mr. Wilson, "so does the responsibilities of the city increase."

Some towns are wont to think that the Underwriters are antagonistic towards them. "This is not so," declared Mr. Wilson, "We simply make our inspection and then advise through the medium of our report as to the best methods of improving the efficiency of the department of the respective town."

In the last report of the Underwriters' inspection concerning this city, which was made in 1906, more hose stations were recommended.

Mr. Wilson furnished some figures concerning the test made on the day of his arrival in the city, a close perusal of which should prove interesting reading.

Box 23 was pulled at 10.13 3-4 a.m.

Hose wagon and ladder truck arrived at 10.16 3-4 a.m.

Ready for hose at 10.16 3-4 a.m.

80 pound pressure at hydrant at 10.19 a.m.

With two streams playing, pressure was 86 pounds; with four, 76 pounds; with six, 69 pounds; with eight, 64 pounds; with ten, 60 pounds.

Nine of these streams were directed through 250 feet of hose and one stream through 200 feet hose. Nozzles varied from 7-8 to 1 1-4 inches.

Normal pressure was 92 pounds and pump pressure 115 pounds.

Mr. Wilson's district comprises the whole of Ontario, a very formidable task indeed, when one stops to consider the number of towns big and small, contained within the borders of Ontario.

DON'T PULL OUT THE GRAY HAIRS

A Few Applications of a Simple Remedy Will Bring Back the Natural Colour

"Pull out one gray hair and a dozen will take its place," is an old saying which is, to a great extent, true, if no steps are taken to stop the cause. When gray hairs apepar it is a sign that Nature needs assistance. It is Nature's call for help. Gray hair, dull, lifeless hair, or hair that is falling out, is not necessarily a sign of advancing age, for there are thousands of elderly people with perfect heads of hair without a single streak of gray.

When gray hairs come, or when the hair seems to be lifeless or dead, some good, reliable, hair-restoring treatment should be resorted to at once. Specialists say that one of the best preparations to use is the old-fashioned "sage tea" which our grandparents used. The best preparation of this kind is Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, a preparation of domestic sage and sulphur, scientifically compounded with later discovered hair tonics and stimulants, the whole mixture being carefully balanced and tested by experts.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is clean and wholesome and perfectly harmless. It refreshes dry, parched hair, removes dandruff and gradually restores faded or gray hair to its natural colour.

Don't delay another minute. Start using Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur at once and see what a difference a few days' treatment will make in your hair.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists. Special agents, Warne Drug Co.

NATIONAL HUMILIATION.

Under Hon. Mr. Borden, Prime Minister of the premier dominion of the Empire, by grace of the ultra-British and ultra-loyalty cries, Canada's participation in the defense of the Empire is as dead as that particularly defunct article, a door nail. This is disappointing.

Hon. Mr. Borden is somewhat of a naval expert. He has boxed the compass pretty thoroughly on the Canadian naval question. In the first place he voted "unanimously for a Canadian navy; he advocated a Canadian navy in cooperation with the imperial navy, to be built in Canada, "of our own resources, of our material, by our own workmen". Then he tacked, and came out flat-footed, for a gift of twenty-five million dollars, a quarter of the annual revenue of the Dominion, the price of two Dreadnoughts, to the British Government, to be used in giving employment to British workmen—not Canadian workmen—in the employment of British material—not Canadian material—to build warships in which we should have no more share, or interest, than any of the other dominions of the Empire. Mr. Borden stood at that for a long time—for him—but when the elections brought Mr. Bourassa into power and made the anti-naval and anti-British Nationalists, the masters of Mr. Borden, of his cabinet, of the Conservative party, and of the situation, Mr. Borden perpetrated the grand surrender—he sunk the Canadian navy out of sight in the back yard of Le Devoir, Mr. Bourassa's newspaper,, and is forbidden to even chirp the tabu words, "Canadian Navy." The campaign of the Montreal Star, which magnanimously hoping against hope, is philandering in favour of Canada borrowing money from England and giving it back to build warships, will be all in vain. Le Devoir, Mr. Bourassa's paper, the mouth-piece of Nationalist aims, enters a strong protest. It points out that in thirty years we should have paid this 180 million dollars and would have nothing to show for it. The denounced costliness of a real Canadian navy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in cooperation with the Imperial navy, sinks into nothingness in comparison with the costly proposal of the Star, which is the proposal in another form of Mr. Borden, which Mr. Bourassa has ordered shelved.

We Canadians, a few years ago, thought it monstrous that we should be compelled to take our orders from Downing street, from the British Government; but now the most loyal of us, who preach the loudest loyalty in words, and put on the soft pedal when it comes to performance, are content, and it would seem, proud, to take our orders from the arch priest of "French domination" British Born "Federtion" leaguers, flag wavers, what do you think of it? As for us few loyal Canadians, we are humiliated to the dust.

HELP THE WESTERN FARMER.

(Toronto Star.)

Nothing will tend to spread discontent among the people of the West so much as this cutting of melons. They will become dissatisfied with the East. Some of them are dissatisfied because reciprocity did not carry, as they counted on reciprocity helping them to make more money, and the first thing we know, we will hear of an agitation started again in the West against the unfair treatment of the East. Political discontent should not be encouraged in any shape or form, and melon-cutting will encourage it. — Toronto World.

The World is right as to melon-cutting, and right also in its view that nothing should be done to increase the present discontent in the West. We cannot expect a Government elected on an anti-reciprocity campaign to give the West reciprocity; but everything else that is possible should be done to make the West contented and to prevent the growth of sectional ill-feeling. When the Government decided in favour of the lumber combine against the Western farmers, it acted in a narrow, technical spirit. It talked much about the intricacies of Customs rulings, instead of taking a broad, national view of the situation and a sympathetic, human view of the case of the Western farmer, and the imperative need of cheap building material in a cold country, not well supplied with timber.

In order to consider the West rightly, we must all get out of our heads the notion that the West is a sort of dependent colony, which ought to be very grateful to the East for helping to build its railways. It is true we subsidised the Canadian Pacific Railway, but our money subsidy was a trifle compared with the value of the land grant, which came out of the West itself. The other day it was announced in the News that the Canadian Northern Railway had sold 200,000 acres of its land grant at from $15 to $18 an acre. Taking the lowest price, there is $30,000,000, while the money grant to the C.P.R. was only $25,000,000.

Again, the building of railways on the prairie is cheap and easy and the reason we have to aid transcontinental railway companies is to enable them to build through the Rocky Mountains, and along the north shore of Lake Superior and in other difficult places. While these difficult portions benefit the farmer by enabling him to ship his wheat East, they also benefit the manufacturers and merchants of the East who ship their goods to the Western market.

Therefore, we ought to aim to free the Western farmer from injustice, not only at the hands of railways, but at the hands of combines and monopolies, which make it difficult for him to build his house on the wind-swept prairie, and to obtain the necessaries of life. We owe the Western farmer fully as much as he owes us, if not more.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

In the palmy days of pagan Rome they butchered captives "to make a Roman holiday." History repeats itself .To-day Grit captives of the spoilsmen are butchered to make Tory heelers a Christmas box.

The Nationalists in the Borden government seem to class Liberals with the English. They say they have had enough of England and the English, and now they find a Grit office holder equally obnoxious.

An esteemed contemporary intimates that the Liberals must be easily consoled if they are satisfied with the gains made by the Ontario Opposition during the recent election. The Liberals, says the Woodstock Sentinel-Review, are consoled but not satisfied. It is in the nature of Liberalism to be easily consoled but never satisfied. It accepts with gratitude every little indication of progress, while constantly realising that the end of progress is never reached.

How Nationalists Have Imposed Their Do-Nothing Naval Policy

In the knowledge that during the past summer Great Britain and Germany were so near war that a discourteous note or an ill-considered word would have brought it about, the people of Canada ought to consider the question of naval defence. Had hostilities broken out, Canada would have been at war, and Halifax and St. John would have been as liable to bombardment by a German squadron as any of the ports on the European side of the Atlantic. We in Canada are beginning to forget that modern warships can lie out of sight of a city and smash it ' pieces. We are beginning to forget, too, that in war, as in peace, we are an integral part of the British Empire, and that a raiding squadron of an enemy's fleet would almost inevitably attack Canadian ports on both the Atlantic and the Pacific.

It is over half a century since Britain warred with Russia. It is almost a century since she pulled down Napoleon. Twice only in the nineteenth century was there danger of Canada's relations to Great Britain subjecting her to attack from a European power. Twice already in this, in 1900 and again last summer, has there been grave danger of war between the Empire and the greatest military power in the world.

• • •

The Globe trusts that the peril will pass. It believes that there is no reason for hatred of Britain in Germany, or of Germany in Britain. The world is big enough for the expansion of both peoples. In racial origin, in religion, in literary and scientific attainments there are close ties between Great Britain and Germany. War between them would be a crime against civilization. And yet there is the indisputable fact that without their knowledge or consent the people of Great Britain and Germany were four months ago on the very verge of war as a result of a diplomatic snarl over a Moroccan port. Had war broken out Canada would inevitably have been involved in it.

• • •

That brings us to a discussion of Canada's present position in regard to naval defence. It is only by sea that any European power could reach us in Canada. An efficient land defensive force would be of little use in keeping raiders off our coasts. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the late Liberal Government, recognizing Canada's obligation to do something toward her own naval defence, organised a naval service, bought two cruisers for the purpose of training officers and seamen, and called for tenders for four fast armoured cruisers of a type that the British Admiralty is at present building and six fast destroyers. It was not an ambitious programme, but it was a beginning. It was quite understood that Canada's cruisers could not take a place in the line of battle, but they would have been efficient commerce protectors, and able to beat off a raiding cruiser or any flotilla of destroyers that might attempt to cripple the St. Lawrence ports or shipping in time of war.

• • •

The Conservative speakers in Ontario referred contemptuously to this first step toward naval self-defence as Laurier's "tin-pot" navy. On hundreds of platforms they declared that Mr. Borden would do something really adequate toward defence. At the same time in Quebec the Nationalist-Conservatives were denouncing Laurier's naval proposals as a wild plunge into Imperialism, which would result in conscription and the sending of "pressed" French-Canadian sailors to every corner of the "seven seas" to fight for the Empire. The Nationalist position was declared, in brief, to be a recognition of the obligation of the Canadian people to defend the soil of Canada as a part of the Empire, but a refusal to sanction the building of vessels that might be utilized to aid in Imperial wars in other lands. The Nationalists demanded the repeal of the Navy Act, and the holding up of the contracts for cruisers and destroyers till a plebiscite of the people could be taken to determine their attitude toward the naval defence policy.

• • •

Although they were defeated in Quebec, Mr. Borden's huge majority in Ontario enabled him to form a coalition Ministry, Messrs. Monk, Pelletier, and Nantel representing the Conservative-Nationalist antinavy wing. In less than three months the Nationalists have imposed their will in regard to naval defence on the Conservative party. The tenders for cruisers and destroyers have been rejected, and that having been done Mr. Pelletier has announced that there is no need of a plebiscite. The Government's plans for naval defence, Mr. Borden has announced, will be formulated after a conference with the British Admiralty. But while Mr. Borden holds out the vague hope to Ontario that something will be done in the indefinite future the Nationalists go forward from strength to strength. In its comment on Sir Edward Grey's speech, Le Devoir, Mr. Bourassa's organ, goes a good deal farther than it went during the election. Le Devoir evidently wants guarantees of the non-participation of Canada's forces in Imperial wars outside of Canada. No other meaning can be attached to the following statement of the Nationalist attitude toward the Empire:

"The most illustrious of Canadian electors, whether he calls himself Wilfrid Laurier or Robert Laird Borden, has no authority outside the limits of Canadian territory. By the side of the peasant of the Scotch mountains and the Lancashire weaver he plays the role of a subject, and in fact he is but a subject. The supreme authority, that which directs our destiny, resides alone in the United Kingdom; it is alone to the electors, of England, Scotland, and Ireland that it must answer; it is from them alone that it receives it orders. And it cannot be shared, declared Mr. Asquith, the head of the British Cabinet, at the last Imperial Conference.

"To an affirmation such as that of Mr Asquith men of the type of Mr. Canan reply:: 'If such is to be the last word in regard to our relations with the metropolis, I would employ the rest of my life in breaking the bonds which unite this country with the Empire.'

"We do not go so far as that. We do not run to such extreme solutions so rapidly. We say simply to Mr. Asquith: 'Since you are the masters of the Empire, since you do not desire to share your authority with anyone, bear the Royal burden alone. Where our power ends there ends our duty.'"

• • •

This means no participation in defence without a share in determining questions of peace and war. We are your subjects, Mr. Bourassa says to Mr. Asquith, and you must protect us. Now such an attitude applied to the question of naval defence must involve hostility not only to the creation of a Canadian fleet that would cooperate with the Imperial navy in all defensive wars, and in such wars of aggression as the Canadian Parliament might approve of, but involves hostility also to the proposal of the advanced Imperial wing of the Conservative party which wishes to make an annual cash contribution to the Imperial navy. In one breath the Nationalists denounce Imperial federation; in the next they say Canada must do nothing toward Imperial defence until there is such a measure of Imperial federation as will give Canada a voice in questions of peace and war.

• • •

The whole argument is a coil of sophistry. The Quebec Nationalists are anti-British and utterly opposed to any naval measures that will strengthen the defence of the Empire. They have dragooned Mr. Borden into acquiescence in their policy. He cannot for the time do without their support, and so he delays a decision on a question vital to Canada, vital perhaps to the British Empire. That question is: What shall the seven million people of Canada do toward helping Britain to retain her supremacy on the ocean? How long will loyal Ontario remain behind the man who stands silent when confronted with a question so momentous?

FREAKS OF A CYCLONE

Since the excitement caused by the cyclone has somewhat subsided, some of the queer incidents of the storm are coming to light.

Arthur E. Langdon, two miles west of town, records among his other losses twenty-five thoroughbred Rhode Island red chickens. The wind carried away the coop, and neither the chickens nor the coop can be found.

When the John Eddy home was demolished, among the house furnishings swept away was a parlour organ. This instrument was found recently in a field opposite where the house stood, and from all appearances had suffered no damage except what had resulted from standing out in the rain and snow.

The six-year-old daughter of Fred Kelley of Eaton Rapids township was riding home from town with her parents when the storm struck the carriage, tore it loose from the horse and pitched it bottom up against the wire fence by the roadside.

The "twister" picked the child off the ground, gave her a few dizzy whirls and tossed her into the top of an apple tree, where she clung to the branches until rescued by her father, the only injury inflicted being a severe fright.—Eaton Rapids Correspondence Detroit Free Press.

Enjoying Themselves.—McDonald and McTavish had met at McDonald's house for the first time for three years. Of course, they were intent on enjoying themselves, and they did. It was about three o'clock a.m. before they thought of parting. By then they were both "unco fu'!" McTavish was the first to rise. "Weel, Donal', I'll be goin'—hic—guid-nicht." "Ye're no' gaun the noo," said McDonald, "wait an' I'll ca' ye a cab." When the vehicle had arrived McDonald helped his friend to the door, saying: "Guid-nicht, Hamish, an'—hic—su'd ye see twa cabs, tak' the first yin—hic—as the ither yin's no there."

Too Serious For Joking.—Sir Walter Mieville has launched a new golf story. An amateur was once playing golf with a friendly caddie, a middle-aged Scot, who rather fancied himself. But the caddie was on strange links and nervous. On the first tee there were many onlookers, and this did not improve matters, and poor Sandy, in pressing for a mighty drive, missed the globe. When but a few holes had been played he complained that he could not play in his waistcoat. So his opponent said, "Tak' it aff, mon," and this was done. Later on another foozle, and Sandy remarked that he could not play in his coat. The amateur again replied, "Tak' it aff," and the caddie did so. But still Sandy could not find his game. So at last his friend said solemnly, "Sandy, ye'll hae tae tak' aff yer breeks!" But mournfully the answer came, "I'll no' dae it, sir!"

CITY OF PETERBORO' BY-LAW NUMBER 1639

A By-Law to take the vote of the ratepayers of the City of Peterborough, entitled to vote on Money By-laws, on a question to be submitted whether the said ratepayers are in favour of a supply of electric power from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

WHEREAS the Municipal Council of the Corporation of the City of Peterborough, deems it advisable to submit to the ratepayers of the said City of Peterborough entitled to vote on Money By-Laws, a question as to whether the said ratepayers are in favour of a supply of electric power from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

THEREFORE THE COUNCIL OF THE CORPORATION OF THE CITY OF PETERBOROUGH ENACTS AS FOLLOWS:

1. That the following question be submitted to the ratepayers of the Municipal Corporation of the City of Peterborough, entitled to vote on Money By-Laws:—

"Are you in favour of obtaining from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario a supply of electric power?"

2. That the votes of the said ratepayers shall be taken on this question on the first day of January, 1912, being the same day as the annual election for the Municipal Council is being held and the polls will be held at the same hour on the said day, at the same places and by the same Deputy Returning Officers and Poll Clerks as for the said Municipal Election.

3. A true copy of this By-Law shall be published in the Morning Times, a public newspaper, published in the said City of Peterborough on the days hereinafter mentioned, that is to say: On the 9th, 16th and 23rd days of December A. D., 1911, and a copy of this By-Law shall be posted on George Street between Brock and Murray Streets, on Hunter Street between George and Aylmer Streets, and between Water and Queen Streets, and on Charlotte Street between George and Aylmer Streets.

4. On the thirtieth day of December, 1911, at the City Clerks' Office at the corner of Simcoe and Water Streets in the City of Peterborough, at the hour of twelve o'clock noon, the Mayor will in writing signed by him, appoint two persons to attend at the final summing up of the votes by the Clerk of the Corporation, and one person to attend each Polling Place on behalf of the persons interested in and desirous of the answering of the said question in the affirmative and a like number on behalf of the persons interested in and desirous of the answering of the said question in the negative respectively.

5. The second day of January, 1912, at the said Clerk's Office at twelve o'clock noon, is hereby appointed for the summing up by the Clerk of the Corporation of the number of votes given in the affirmative and in the negative respectively.

Made, passed and enacted this seventh day of December A.D., 1911.

W. G. MORROW,
Mayor.
S. R. ARMSTRONG,
Clerk.

NOTICE

Take notice that the above is a true copy of a By-Law passed by the Municipal Council of the City of Peterborough, on the seventh day of December, 1911.

And further take notice that at the hour, day and place therein fixed for taking the votes of the electors the polls will be held.

And further take notice that the name of any leaseholder, who does not at least ten days before the day in the said proposed By-Law appointed for taking the vote thereon, file in my office a Statutory Declaration proving that he or his wife is the holder of a lease, which under the provisions of section 354 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, entitles him to vote for or against the said proposed By-Law, shall not be placed on the Voters' List for such voting.

First publication the ninth day of December, 1911.

REASONS FOR INCREASE IN THE PRICE OF TEA

The ever-increasing consumption of tea throughout the world—particularly of British-grown tea—has created a demand much greater than the supply, which among other causes prevents really good tea being sold at former low prices.

Russia and Australia are buying tremendously of British-grown teas in place of China teas, and the consumption in Great Britain is larger than ever.

The shutting out of over 15 million pounds of coloured China green tea by the United tSates government, the increased use of tea due to higher prices of coffee, the greater acreage given over to the planting of rubber in Ceylon, the shortage in the Japan crop this year, and the labour problem in all tea-growing countries are all factors which account for the much higher primary markets.

The present revolution in China may also mean much smaller crops there next year and present indications are for still higher prices in the future. All these conditions either mean a lower quality at the same prices, or the same quality at higher prices.

Our experience shows that the tea-drinking public prefers the latter.

FINANCE COMMITTEE REPORT ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL

The following is the reoprt of the City Finance committee's meeting held yesterday afternoon, which was adopted by the Council last night:

Gentlemen,—Your Finance committee beg leave to reprot and recommend as follows:

1. That the Clerk notify the assessors that there are persons liable to pay poll tax as shown by the manhood suffrage registration, who have not been notified to pay such taxes, and to serve such persons with with the demand.

2. That the usual grant of $25 be made to the Peterborough Teachers' Institute.

3. That the application of the National Sanitarium Association for contribution towards the maintenance of a patient from Peterborough be referred to the Central Charity Board.

4. That the City Treasurer be instructed to pay the manhood suffrage registrars in accordance with the opinion of the City Solicitor.

Teacher Cured of Barber's Itch

Tells of Cures Among His Pupils That Were Remarkable

Raw, Inflamed, Itching Skin is Soothed and Healed by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Barber's Itch is a form of Ringworm, which, when once started, is most annoying and unsightly, and most difficult to cure. Barbers often refuse to shave anyone having this disease, for fear of passing it on to other customers.

But you can cure Barber's Itch and keep the skin wonderfully soft and healthy by applying Dr. Chase's Ointment. Just read what this teacher has to say about the healing power of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mr. Chas. C. Poirier, Upper Caraquet, N. B., writes: "Two years ago while teaching at Shippegan I caught Barber's Itch. A friend told me Dr Chase's Ointment would cure me, as it had him. When I went for a box I thought it dear, but when I found how good it was I thought it cheap.

"Not only was I cured by that single box, but it also cured two of my pupils, and this too quickly to be believed. One of them, a girl, had a running sore on the chin which the doctor had tried in vain to cure. The other had a sore on the ear; water running out of it all the time. I can certify to the cure of these cases."

Wherever there is itching skin or a sore that refuses to heal you can apply Dr. Chase's Ointment with positive assurance that the results will be entirely satisfactory. The soothing, healing power of this great ointment is truly wonderful. 60c a box, at all dealers, or Edmandson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

LAID TO REST

The funeral of the late Mrs. James Campbell took place this afternoon. The funeral cortege, leaving the family residence, 334 Water street at 2.30, proceeded to the Little Lake cemetery, where interement took place. The Rev. Canon Davidson officiated.

In addition to many out-of-town visitors, a large number of friends attended the funeral, showing thereby a mark of respect for the deceased lady, the death of whom, coming so suddenly, was a severe shock to the relatives. There was a large and beautiful display of floral tributes, which was symbolical of the great esteem in which Mrs. Campbell was held.

The pallbearers were: Messrs. James Campbell, William Garrett, John Garrett, G. Clegg, William Campbell and Jas. Garrett.

CHRISTMAS SALE

Soon This Timely Offering of Gifts and Seasonable Goods Will be Brought to a Close---Share in its Savings While the Opportunity is at Hand.

Christmas is nearly here, and our Christmas Sale will soon be brought to a close. Have you purchased all the gifts you intend giving? Isn't there someone who has been thoughtlessly omitted from your list? Don't wait until the last minute to complete your gift purchases, come at once, and take advantage of the still large varieties of suitable gift things and goods for your own use we're offering at such wonderfully attractive prices.

Quite naturally, the exceptionally heavy buying has more or less depleted certain lines of our vast stocks, but there still remains a diversity that is sufficient to supply the desires of even the most fastidious gift-seeker.

On many small lots, prices have been reduced further so that our store is now crowded with hosts of better values than when the sale was first announced.

If you would share in these truly important values in goods appropriate for gift-giving it is absolutely necessary that you attend at once!

INTERESTING LETTER FROM MISSIONARY IN CHINA

Mr. J. J. Johnston has received a letter from Miss Quinn, missionary in China, which is in part as follows:

My dear friends:

I keep planning to write you, but find it hard to get to it. I have a great many unexpected things confronting me these days, and I am not sure of any time. I am sure you are all anxious these days for China and for us. It is a time when men's hearts are failing them, for fear, and when there are wars and rumours of wars, if there ever was, and we go on wondering what may happen next. I am sure you are better posted than we are as to what is actually taking place. We live in the country, and news is unreliable. We know there is fighting and people are fleeing, but so far, praise God, it doesn't affect us more than this.

All our students are here from all the schools; the girls got back yester, day; our family still grows. We are going on with our work as usual except that I do not leave home at all. If there is real need our Consul will write us. The only danger there is likely to be is that the people get excited, and lawless toughs rob and loot, and we may be in need of money. I heard the banks were closing, so I sent and got all the money I could draw just in the nick of time, and have enough to live on for a month or so. When that is done surely the Lord will provide for us. We are living as carefully as we can, for we don't know what sort of a muddle we may find ourselves in, and money is a good thing to have when you get into a tight place.

We were so thankful to get the $60, which came just when the note was due and was exactly enough to a dollar when exchanged. We were a little tempted after we got it ready to keep it back for a little in case we couldn't get more and should have to leave, but after prayer and conference we all felt clear that as the Lord had so signally prepared it, it was our duty to discharge the debt and let the consequences take their course, and we feel very happy about it. We have not yet had our deed stamped nor the alterations made, but it will all come in good time. I would be glad to have the deed stamped officially in case of future trouble. But the Lord knows about that too. I feel so sure that God has led us step by step in this thing and cannot praise Him enough.

We find the empty yard such a comfort with our large family. We were so congested with a small drying space and so many clothes to dry, and the children now have a place to play in.

So Grace is going to Africa. How I would like to help send her off. I know something of what it means to you. May the Lord give the grace to send her forth rejoicing. Nothing is too good to offer Him. He gave his all for us, but the heart suffers and it is right too, I believe, as long as the spirit is yielding and willing. I have been proving the sincerity of my consecration since hearing of my beloved father's illness and death. It is very hard to be so far away, yet I know the bitter dregs we drank the first time I came to China; indeed it was in Peterboroughh when I decided this was God's plan for me. It is only a little while and we will all be forever with the Lord. It has been growing more preciously real to me the thought that we are in Christ in His body, no matter how far separated or whether dead or alive we are in Him and therefore never separated. His body is one ,and when He returns those who went before come with Him. We go to Him because we are in Him. Oh, what a comfort and what a hope! What can separate us from the love of Christ? Nothing. We are eternally happy, and Heaven is just as near us in China and Africa as in Canada.

May He keep you all rejoicing in Him.

Yours in His keeping,
M. QUINN.

Mr. Bradburn And Local Option

To the Editor of The Examiner,—

Dear Sir,—From present indications it would appear that we are to have no opposition to Mr. Bradburn in the coming election for Mayor of Peterborough. If Mr. Bradburn be elected how would that affect the contest for local option, which every temperance person in the city expects to take place a year hence? It is inconceivable that a Mayor who is the owner of three properties with licenses in this city should look with favour upon or promote temperance. Are all the temperance people of Peterborough napping, and do they intend to let such an important affair as local option suffer, or be defeated, by electing a Mayor who is evidently opposed to temperance by being the owner of three of the twelve licensed houses in this place?

Yours,
A Temperance Workingman.

No Change In The Situation

Mrs. E. J. Hunter of Gilmour St., has received a letter from her daughter, Mrs. H. D. Robertson, written in the middle of October, in Chentu, China, which does not show any change in the situation. At that time the missionaries were still penned up in the compound with no knowledge of what was going on outside. They had no idea of the situation and did not know what the next day was going to bring forth.

Barbers' Union New Officers

At a meeting last night the Barbers' Local Union elected the following officers: President, Geo. Campbell; vice-president, Edward Whrite; financial secretary, Geo. Brousseau; recording secretary, E. H. Boyler; treasurer, Geo. V. Hall; guard, Bert Kidd. Trustees, Geo. Brousseau, Geo. Campbell, E. H. Boyler. Trades and Labour delegates, Geo. Brousseau, Bert Kidd, Percy Morden, Geo. Campbell, H. Gainey.

The union decided to make a grant of $10 to the St. Vincent's Orphanage and the Children's Aid Society.

A Minor Wreck

A freight train, containing four new cars, on approaching Blizzard's Swamp on its way through to Belleville last evening caused considerable delay by reason of four cars and the caboose leaving the track. The running gear, it is said, had not yet loosened sufficiently to allow of the cars taking the curve satisfactorily. However, no damage resulted, and Conductor Jobtett left for the scene with the Lakefield train, into which the passengers were transferred. A special also went down this morning to take the passengers off the No. 9 Belleville train.

The auxiliary is now at work and the cars will probably be righted in a very short time.

Annual Xmas Distribution

The King Daughters' annual Christmas distribution will be held this week. This society is entirely undenominational. Contributions of money, toys, groceries, fruit, etc., for the sick and others who are in need of a little Christmas cheer, will be gladly received, and distributed to the best of the ability of the members of the society. Gifts to be sent to St. John's Sunday school, on Wednesday afternoon, 20th December. 2d-142.

Horses Must Be Tied

Benjamin Hobson and Arnold Kennedy were arraigned in the Police Court this morning charged with being drunk. They pleaded guilty, but asked for a chance, promising to get out of the city. They were allowed to go.

Some more citizens have got tired of trying to walk in the straight and narrow path of the law and have neglected to tie their horses while leaving them standing on the street. Sherman Graham and Harry Zacks paid fines of $2 each for this offence this morning. "There was another runaway yesterday directly traceable to this cause," commented his Worship, Magistrate Dumble.

Christmas Tree

During the Christmas season it has been decided to give all the English children of the city a Christmas treat. For this purpose a committee of ladies held a very enthusiastic meeting at the house of Mrs. Jay, Aylmer St., when preliminary arrangements were made.

The treat will be held under the auspices of the St. George's Society and all children of English parents under the age of fourteen are invited to be present. Please note that this treat is intended for all English children of the city, and not for poor only.

A good sum of money has been provided for purchasing articles for the Christmas tree and a tea will be provided. The committee will be grateful for gifts of cake, etc. These may be sent to any member of the committee whose names are given below.

The date has not been definitely fixed, but will be announced at an early date.

It is hoped that a generous response will be given to this appeal so that the children may be able to thoroughly enjoy the Christmas season.

Committee.

Mrs. W. H. Pretty, 141 Hunter street east.
Mrs. Jay, 384 Aylmer street.
Mrs. John, 418 Rubidge street.
Mrs. Pitchford, 573 Homewood avenue.
Mrs. Huxley, 344 McDonnel street.
Mrs. C. Green, 508 Bolivar street.
Mrs. Smith, 83 Sophia street.

IN MEMORIAM.

To the memory of Mary, beloved wife of Ralph Godfrey, of Keene, who departed this life Dec. 19th, 1910:

We cannot tell who next may fall
Beneath thy chastening rod,
One must be first, so let us all
Prepare to meet our God.

364 GEORGE STREET

Could Not Help It.—A gentleman visiting Ireland for the first time wished to hire a car. The first driver who offered himself, being dressed in rags of a disgusting description, was indignantly rejected. Then, finding a smarter coachman, the hirer pointed to the ragged one, asking why a person thus attired was allowed in the public streets. Being told that the man could not help it the stranger asked whether his wretched state was due to poverty. "Och, no, yer honour!" was the smiling answer. "But, faith, there's not a tailor in all Dublin dares to put a measurin' tape to him—he's so ticklish!"

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY

Mr. H. O. Fiske Was Elected President of the Peterborough Centre at Gathering Last Night.

LECTURE ON SATURN

The Peterborough Centre of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada held their annual meeting in the Chemical Laboratory of the Collegiate Institute last evening.

After the minutes of last year's meeting had been read and confirmed, Dr. Marsh gave his financial report:

"Our finances," he said, "are in a more satisfactory condition than was the case last year, and the membership has increased. We began the present with a balance of 15 cents, while as yet several accounts had not been sent in. Had all accounts been received there would have been a deficit of $50. At present, though all accounts have been paid, there is only a debit balance of 98 cents.

The election of officers then took place and the following were chosen:

President—Mr. H. O. Fiske.
Vice-President—Mr. T. A. S. Hay.
Secretary—Dr. Marsh.
Council — Messrs. Segar, Walker, Elliott, Garveth, Johnston, Easton, Logan and Keyes.
Librarian—Mr. T. A. S. Hay.
Curator—Mr. H. O. Fiske.
Auditor—Mr. F. Adams.

Upon the motion of Mr. W. L. Logan, seconded by Mr. T. A. S. Hay, it was resolved to hold one of the Society's regular meetings in the Normal School, subject to the approval of the Principal and Staff.

After the business of the meeting terminated, Dr. Marsh gave a short talk on the Planet of Saturn.

"The Ancients," he said, "used to look up into the sky and tremble; when we look up, we adore.

"Saturn is very large, compared with our earth. It has nine times the diameter, and is seven hundred times larger than the earth, although its density is not so great. Saturn's day is less than ours. Only 10 hours and 14 minutes is required for that planet to revolve on its axis, while its year is about twenty-nine and a half of ours."

Here the lecturer agve a short resume regarding the rings encircling Saturn, and with the aid of lantern slides explained that the rings were supposed to be composed of meteoric matter, and said that they were not more than a hundred or a hundred and thirty miles in thickness.

"Saturn" he continued, "has eight moons, which are very small, comparatively speaking, and far away. Even with a telescope we cannot see more than one or two. The planet of Saturn is covered with a dense atmosphere. It cannot be inhabited for, as yet, it has not completely cooled."

DROP IN PRICE IN TURKEYS LOOKED FOR

TORONTO, DEC. 18.—"What is the outlook for Christmas turkey?"

This question was put to a number of poultry dealers this morning, and while a great diversity of opinion prevails among the dealers, the probability is that this requisite of the holiday dinner will be a few cents cheaper than the price prevailing for the past three or four years.

"Turkeys will undoubtedly be cheaper this year," stated Mr. M. P. Mallen, a large dealer in St. Lawrence Market. "The country is full of fowl of all kinds. The farmers would not dispose of their stock in any quantities during the Thanksgiving season and have not been sending many fowl into the market for the past two or three months, with the result that they have a large number on hand.

"One great factor in regulating the price in Toronto and vicinity, is the demand from the West on the Ontario farmer for their supply. This year, instead of buying from Ontario farmers, the Western Canadian dealers imported their supply almost exclusively from the State of Dakota, leaving the Ontario supply for Eastern consumption. Some idea of the significance of this action on their part will be gathered when it is remembered that from the counties of Kent and Essex alone last year, over one million pounds of turkeys were shipped to the West."

Good turkeys could be purchased on Saturday for 21 and 22 cents per pound, and as yet there are no great quantities arriving. Geese were fifteen cents and ducks 17 and 18 cents. With a little colder weather the dealers expect the market to be flooded with fowl of all kinds by Wednesday or Thursday, and then the true state of the market will be revealed.

Another factor in the housewife's favour this year is the fact that Christmas falls on Monday and wholesalers will not be inclined to take a chance of holding over any quantities, unless it is exceptionally cold weather.

The condition of the roads leading into the city was held by one man as a reason for a probable shortage in the supply having been exhausted. Farmers claim that it is cheaper to send the fowl in by express than to bring it to market themselves. Some of the dealers have had agents through the country buying up large amounts of fowl, but in almost every instance the farmer has refused to set a price on his supply, preferring to ship them in and take the prevailing market quotations.

Last year turkeys brought anywhere from 25 to 30 cents the day before Christmas and late on Christmas Eve as high as 35 cents was paid by some late buyers and that price was for the cold storage article, the fresh supply having been exhausted. Relief is promised this year, however, and the chances at present are that the general price this year will be from 20 to 22 cents per pound.

Sunday Morning Visit to St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church

(By Roy Gilray.)

The central thought that shaped the entire programme of St. Andrew's church last Sunday morning was, "The Living Church." I realized before the service was over that St. Andrew's was a living church. Not being a Presbyterian I was unfamiliar with the work being carried on by this congregation, but I discovered on examination that they are a people who quietly, but effectively, perform their duties without getting up on the house-tops to announce their accomplishments. Unlike the shallow, swiftly flowing stearm, as it noisly pursues its tortuous course, they resemble more the deep, quietly flowing river, as it calmly, but powerfully sweeps on its way; and the Minister, Rev. James Rollins, is in perfect harmony with the situation. His discourse was an inspiration and showed he did not belong to the decadent past, but was thoroughly alive to the present-day problems that confront the living church.

As in the case of the last two churches I visted the young men are intrusted with the responsibility of ushering and collecting the offering. (I am sure the collectors will forgive me if I suggest an investment in rubber heels.

The choir added greatly to the pleasure of the service. They were gowned throughout, each lady having a little extra adornment in the shape of a white jabot.

The organist was a revelation to me; the instrument was most responsive under his sympathetic touch.

St. Andrew's not only enjoys a commanding position on one of the best sites in the city, but occupies a prominent place in the crusade against wickedness. She has a history of which she might well be proud, dating from about the year 1833, when the Rev. John Morrice Roger, a Minister of the Church of Scotland, came from Aberdeen to Peterborough and gathered together a small congregation. A small building was erected on King street for the needs of the Presbyterians of Peterborough.

The following year Rev. Mr. Roger called for the selection of elders, the choice falling on Andrew Tully, John Hutchinson, M.D., John Edminson and David Hamilton. The Presbytery of Kingston sanctioned the appointments and the Kirk session of Peterborough, was recognized and authorized to transact all business in the congregation.

On the 30th May, 1835, a grant was made to the church of the ground on which St. Andrew's now stands, and the following year a stone structure was erected. Substantial, indeed, it was, built for use and not for ornament. A square stone building, with cottage roof, square topped windows and doors, without ornament of any kind, except the white dove and olive branch over the pulpit. In front of the pulpit stood the Precentor's desk, from which Sandy Stewart led the service of praise, assisted by his faithful tuning fork. The old pews, with their high, straight backs and unushioned seats, and doors securely latched, presented an ugly and uncomfortable appearance, quite a contrast to the luxuriously appointed "Havens of Rest" of our modern day. The service, like the building, was without ornament, but we are informed that it took more than a shower to keep the faithful members away on Sunday.

In 1843 the division in the ranks of the Church of Scotland took place, and a number of the minsters and elders decided to form another organization to be known as the "Presbyterian Church of Canada." The following year the Presbyterians of Peterborough, with a few exceptions, determined to cast in their lot with the lattter body, and as there was no other branch here they ocntinued to use the church until 1857, when the agent of the Church of Scotland took possession of the property, part going out, forming what later became St. Paul's, and part remaining with the "Auld Kirk" forming the nucleus of the present St. Andrew's.

The following year the Rev. J. S. Douglas took up the work, which he continued for six years. During the next twenty-eight years the congregation was served by the three "Macs." Rev. D. J. MacDonnell, Rev. Kenneth MacLennan, Rev. Andrew MacWilliams and Rev. Alexander Bell, who came in between the last two.

Rev. J. G. Potter, who administered to the wants of the congregation for the next thirteen years, looms up large in our recollections as a man who took a very active part in the moral uplift of our city, particularly the temperance cause.

St. Andrew's have been extremely fortunate in the matter of legacies, particularly those of the late Miss Nicholls, who during her life presented the church with a cheque large enough to wipe off the entire indebtedness, and later on in her will bequeathed another substantial sum for the benefit of her old church home. This the managers very wisely invested in real estate, which provides an annual income of some four or five hundred dollars. While these donations had a salutary effect on the finances I am inclined to think that they, together with the annual income, have been instrumental in causing a supreme feeling of contentment to come over the majority of the members, if the report of givings as listed in the last printed annual report, for the year ending Dec. 31st, 1909, is any indication. I could find only three members out of 250 who gave one dollar per Sunday, and only thirteen who contributed about fifty cents per Sunday for church support. I notice that the subscription list is arranged in numerical order according to the numbers of the envelopes without names. This provides absolute secrecy in the matter of giving, and if the financial condition of this church is in such a healthy state that they can afford to maintain this system, they are to be congratulated, but the experience of other churches has been that full publicity in all things pertaining to finances has a stimulating effect amounting almost to competition among the members, swelling the coffers to an appreciable degree.

One of the most important features in connection with the service of St. Andrew's is the splendid work being done in conjunction with the mid-week prayer meetings. During three weeks of the month the services are held at the church, but on the fourth Wednesday night there are seven district meetings held simultaneously in seven different sections of the city, at the homes of various members of the congregation, the location being announced from the pulpit and through the press. The city has been divided into seven districts, East City forms the seventh, and Peterborough proper contains the other six, Rubidge street being the dividing line north and south, while Brock and Charlotte streets are the dividing lines east and west.

A small card has been prepared outlining the principal features. These, in a very concise form, give the names and addresses of the chairman and secretary of each district. These positions are permanent, the duties being to keep up-to-date records of the membership under their care, reporting any points that come to their attention through the assistance and co-operation of the members attending the meetings. Everything seems to be done in a most systematic way, other cards being provided which are sent to any members, who ought to be interested, requesting them to call on the person indicated for any one of thirteen reasons the chief being Sickness, Sorrow, New Comers to City, Non-attendance at Sunday School, Need of Material Aid, and An Apparent Willingness to do Some Definite Work for the Kingdom.

The object of the meetings is to enable the members to become better acquainted; for the more hearty co-operation one with with the other in making religion a greater force in their communities. There is a short time given to business, obtaining reports and discussing needs of the district. This is followed by a brief discussion of topics previously assigned, praise and prayer, and a short time for informal social fellowship. The point that impressed me most, and which augurs well for their permanency is he fact that refreshments must not be served.

In charge of each meeting are two, and in some cases three, leaders, who prepare addresses on some special phase of the church work, each set of leaders being required to prepare only one subject, but by visiting the various districts in a circle they thus give their talk before a new audience each night. This obviates the necessity of these leaders, who are busy men of affairs, preparing seven distinct addresses. It also has the effect of impressing these questions on these men which no other system could accomplish. In other words after a winter's course they virtually become specialists along their own line, the chief departments of the work being well divided and emphasized instead of being scattered promiscuously and having no effect.

These themes chosen indicate the broad lines of the work, some of which are: The Young People and Practical District Work, How Best to Spend the Sabbath, The Church's Need of Young Men for the Ministry, and The Church and the Children. It will thus be seen that St. Andrew's age evidently on the right road in the development of this very important branch of the church's life.

If they do not possess an up-to-date Sunday school building they are endeavouring to introduce up-to-the-minute methods. Their latest is the installation of a lantern. Hearing of this innovation I visited the school to see the result of its operation. The instrument is one of the best that could be secured, manufactured by the well known optical firm of Bausch & Lomb, of Rochester. It is operated by electric light, an alternating current of 110 volt pressure being used. It throws an image highly magnified the entire length of the large room, a distance of about 30 feet, on a screen hung on a metal roller at the back of the platform. It is painted with aluminum and is in full view of almost every member of the school. The hymns are thrown on the screen ,to which all eyes are directed, no books being used (therefore none to destroy). It has resulted in making the service of song more hearty, due, no doubt, to the fact that every scholar stands erect, heads up, and "eyes front" a position most conducive to good singing. The announcements are cast upon the screen as well as a picture illustrating the lesson, which is duly commented on at the close of its study..

It is a well known fact in the teaching profession that anything presented to a pupil through the medium of the eye is more easily retained in the memory. The habit of concentration, too, is productive of a good moral effect, preventing many little acts of irreverence while hare all too common in some schools.

The work among the younger children deserves special mention. The little tots as they come to the Sunday school are put in the "Kindergarten" where the picture and object method of instruction is in use, in fact it is the kindergarten work of the day schools adapted to the Sunday schools. Then they are sent on to the "Primary" Department, where they receive careful instrucion for about two years, after which they graduate into the main body of the school.

A little incident occurred during the assembling of the scholars that touched the pathetic cords of my nature. A little fellow, pale and worn from a long period of pain, was wheeled to Sunday school in an invalid's chair by one of the male teachers. His face lit up with joy as he was taken to the front, and my heart sank as I realized that all three of us were victims of that dread White Plague.

Rev. Mr. Rollins took as his text I Corinthians, 1:2-4, choosing the phrase "The Church of God" with emphasis on the last word.

God is a living God, therefore His church will not become a petrified institution bound in the traditionalisms of the past. Jesus, during His earthly ministry, never failed to impress this on His hearers. Some people are so steeped in ceremonialism they claim that what God has done in ages past He will always do, because they glorify the past at the expense of the living present, because they forget that God is a living God.

The conception of a living God was forcibly illustrated by reference to two types of men. One the farmer, used to a light loamy soil, did his plowing and sowing in the spring and reaped a bountiful harvest. After a number of years he moved to another settlement where the soil was entirely different, but where he used the same methods, which resulted in a poor crop. Being a man of common sense he never made the same mistake again. The other type, an engineer, thoroughly trained in his work, carefully estimates the weight of his train, the pressure of the steam, and speeds along a straight track at 40 miles an hour, while approaching a curve he reduces the speed to ten or fifteen miles and passes safely over to another stretch. All at once the engineer is stricken down at his post, the train rushes madly on round curve after curve, till at last it is wrecked. The living engineer never did exactly the same thing twice unless the circumstances demanded it. In like manner, the living church adapts itself to the requirements of its ages and the needs of its environment.

Holding services of the same form in English, French, German or Chinese countries and using one of the dead languages because it was the prevailing tongue 1900 years ago is a thing almost inconceivable, but it shows plainly that emphasis has been placed on "Church" and not on the living God. Nor is it intended that the church should adhere to the usages of ten, twenty or thirty years ago any more than a progressive farmer would want to retain the customs of his forefathers.

Is the church losing its grip? I was much pleased that Mr. Rollins introduced this question, as we have been awaiting an opportunity of explaining the purpose of these articles, "As Others See Us." This very question suggested the idea of visiting the dif-

Interesting Information For The O. H. A. Clubs Certificates Are Issued

TODONTO, DEC. 18.—The blank playing certificates were mailed to the 111 teams of the Ontario Hockey Association on Saturday night, and were received by the clubs in the first mail to-day. The following instructions to secretaries of clubs should be closely scrutinised by all concerned:

Each club is responsible for the eligibility of its players.

Junior players must be under 20 years of age January 1, 1912.

Certificates are revocable by the association without notice.

Don't put off until the last minute the registration of players.

All certificates must be countersigned by the Secretary of the Association.

Each player must have a certificate signed by himself in ink, and by the President and Secretary of his club.

Birth Certificates for Juniors.

In addition, all junior players must furnish official birth certificates. These should be sent in with the playing certificates and not separately. No junior will be allowed to play until this is done.

Birth certificates filed last year for eligible junior players desiring to play this year will not require to be renewed.

Clubs are requested to pay particular attention to the lighting of their rinks, and to the condition of the goal nets. Both must be perfectly satisfactory to the referee, or there will be trouble for the home club.

No junior player will be eligible to again play in that series who plays one senior game in that season.

The Residence Rule.

Under the residence rule, a player must be a bona fide and continuous resident of the town to which his club belongs since August 1, 1911. The exceptions are students and sailors. The latter must play where they were living last January.

Players living in rural districts must play in their nearest O. H. A. town.

No player who has received an O. H. A. certificate shall play in an exhibition match for another club without first receiving permission from the Association.

No player shall play for more than one club in the association year, nor shall he sign a certificate for more than one club.

Any club intending to default a match must give three days' clear notice to opposing club and the Association. Failure to give such notice will cost offending club $25, in addition to all expenses.

A Default Puts a Team Out.

A club defaulting any match debars itself from further competition. All scheduled matches played by such club will count as played, and all unplayed matches will count as wins to the teams scheduled against the club defaulting.

Every club must file a list of officers with the association. Do this at once and save a lot of unnecessary correspondence.

O. H. A. clubs playing in another association must give precedence to O. H. A. scheduled matches.

A junior may play one intermediate game with his own club, and an intermediate player may play one senior game. Two games will disqualify the player from competing in the lower series.

Failure to start a game on the scheduled hour will cost the offending team or teams a fine of $10.

All clubs are required to register their playing colours with the association. Send these in with the list of officers.

Expenses of Visiting Club.

Expenses of the travelling club are 10 cents per mile for one way for eight men, which amount must be paid by the home club.

The junior birth certificates must be official documents issued by the Registrar-General's Department at Parliament Buildings, Toronto, or by a local registrar, or an exmact from a church baptismal record.

Any club refusing or failing to play the club against which it is matched debars itself from further competition.

Notice of the result of each match must be sent to the association by the victorious club through the referee.

Referee's fee is $5, in addition to an allowance at the rate of 10 cents a mile one way for all distances. The minimum of fee and allowance is $8, except in the case of a local referee. After the group winners are returned the association appoints all referees. Each club is to pay half the referee's expenses.

In case of a club playing its home game and defaulting the return game, the penalty will be the payment of a sum sufficient to completely cover the expenses of the visiting club in the first game, such expenses to be hotel and 'bus bills for ten men and one-half the referee's expenses.

72 Hours' Notice for Referee.

Clubs failing to agree upon a referee must give the association 72 hours' notice of their match, and an official will be sent; otherwise both teams will be ruled out of the competition. Either club may send in the notice. Clubs should agree on a referee whenever possible, and save trouble for themselves and the association.

Protests must be in duplicate and signed by the president or secretary; must be filed with the association within 48 hours of the match protested, and must be accompanied by a deposit of $25. Defending club has 36 hours to file a defence. Service personally or by registered post will conform with the rule. Protests on questions of fact will not be entertained, as the referee's decision is final.

Sixty-Four More Liberal Heads Fall Into The Basket

Over 200 Dismissals From the Works Department--Civil Service "Reform" Consists in Clearing Out All Liberal Employees.

OTTAWA, DEC. 18.— Another instalment of the Government's idea of "civil service reform" came to-day with the summary dismissal of another batch of sixty-five Liberal employees in the Public Works Department. Over two hundred men in Mr. Monk's department alone have now been dismissed in Ottawa without notice and practically without investigation. Their only offence is that they are Liberals who stand in the way of Conservative workers who want their jobs. No more cruel or unjust wielding of the axe has ever taken place in the history of government in Canada. It is practically, as Mr. Carvell M.P. for Carleton, described it, a system of "petty larceny." Christmas gifts to the party workers, regardless of who suffers, seem to be the spirit of peace and good-will now animating his Majesty's loyal advisers..

Clean Out the Liberals.

The real policy of civil service reform on which Premier Borden has embarked is now apparent. Before the present act applicable to the inside service is extended to the outside service the Government intends to get rid of practically every Liberal in the service who can be dismissed under any pretext. Then, when the whole outside service is filled with Conservative employees, the promised extension of the act, making all employees of the Government permanent, as far as possible, will be put through by order in Council.

ROYAL BLACK KNIGHTS HAVE SPLENDID BANQUET

The Royal Black Knights of Ireland held their annual banquet in the S. O. E. hall last evening.

Almost a hundred persons participated in a bountiful supper, after which very aproriate addresses were delivered by the Rev. C. E. Cragg, of Mark Street Methodist church, and the Rev. W. C. Riddiford of Park Street Baptist church.

The remainder of the evening was spent in music and song, which was greatly appreciated by the gathering. The banquet was pronounced to be a decided success.

Want Separation From Ontario

Special to The Examiner.

KENORA, ONT., DEC. 19. — The Board of Trade here passed a resolution last night to campaign with other Boards of Trade of this end of Ontario to be separated from Ontario from Fort William west and joined to Manitoba because Toronto is too far away from this district to give is proper consideration provincially.

Olympic Blamed

Special to The Examiner:

London, Eng., Dec. 19.—The Admiralty Court to-day found the White Star Steamship Olympic guilty of navigating negligence and responsible for the collision with H.M.S. Hawke, near Osborne Bay, on September 20th last, with severe damage to both vessels. Judgment with costs is given in favour of Commander Blunt of the Hawke in the case brought against him by the White Star Line.

Mercantile League Organized

The Mercantile Hockey League met last night and elected following officers:

Patrons and Patronesses—Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Cressman, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Doan, Mr. and Mrs. Hawkinson, Mr. and Mrs. C. Westbrooke.

President—J. T. C. Laing.

Vice-President—G. O. Cameron.

Sec.-Treas.—T. G. M. Jamieson.

Executive Committee—W. H. Harris C. M. Shoebotham, N. Wettlaufer, J. Mahoney and C. Wolff.

The teams comprising this league are the C.G.E. tool room, machine shop, Lock Works, Bell Telephone and the clerks. A meeting will be held a week from Thursday evening, when the schedule for the season will be drawn up.

No Skating At Brock St. Rink This Week

Although hockey players and skaters are keenly anxious for a chance to get out on the steel blades and have welcomed the colder weather to-day with delight, they will have to wait a while yet as far as Brock street rink is concerned. The Street Railway rink at Jackson Park and the Sacred Heart rink on Romaine street were flooded for the first time last night, but the Examiner is informed that Brock street will not receive its first dash of water until after Christmas Day, which will mean even if the weather remains cold, that there will be no ice skating until a week from to-morrow night.

HOCKEY

A meeting of the T.A.S. Hockey Club will be held in St. Alphonsus Lyceum to-morrow night at 8 o'clock. A full attendance of members is expected as there is to be business of importance taken up.

KINGSTON, DEC. 18.—Of all the scattered players belonging to last year's Frontenac junior hockey team only two of them can play this year again owing to the new rules which were introduced. Davidson and McCammon cannot play anywhere except in professional circles. They have taken up residence in another city, yet they were not there early enough to be eligible to play with amateur teams there. Marchand is in the same fix. Millan and Hunt could play with the team this year. Although Lee has been away longer than all the other players on account of being a student, he would be allowed to play here.

MOVING PICTURES TAKEN BY NIGHT.

A surprising advance in the photographic art, says "The Inventive Age," is marked by the production of moving picture films by artificial light. We read:

"Flashlight photographs are common enough, but in all such work the subject must remain perfectly still, and the results have by no means been perfect. The production of artificial light strong enough to cause the exact imprint of the image on the sensitised plate is not new, but the making of a perfect moving picture, which shows a number of objects in every detail, is distinctively new. With true western hustle a committee in Kansas City, who wanted to advertise their metropolis, determined to overcome the obstacles in the way of perpetuating the night parade on a certain festival. A platform 20 feet high was erected on one side of a street through which the parade was to pass. On this was strung 60 arc lights in two rows, backed by a monster sheet tin reflector, 70 feet long by six feet high. On the opposite side of the street was another embankment of light almost as powerful so that for a distance of about 100 feet the street was brilliantly illuminated. The machines were started when the parade began to pass, and a film 600 feet long was made, showing every detail. Snapshots taken by private cameras were found to be as good as similar pictures made in the daylight.

Liked It.—"Well, did you like the theatre?" asked a mistress of a servant to whom she had given a ticket. "I did that, mum, and it was fine." "But why did you not see the play out! You are home early." "Indeed I did, mum, there were grand ladies in the boxes, and elegant gentlemen next me, and I had a lovely seat, and enjoyed myself looking at the splendid picture as much as anybody. But when they took the picture up and I found myself looking into a gentleman's house, and some ladies come in and began discussing family matters I came away. It wasn't for the likes o' me to sit and listen to family secrets. I hope I know my place better than that, mum."

Notice is hereby given that a Quarterly Dividend for the three (3)months ending December 31 st 1911 at the rate of ten per cent. (10%) per annum has been declared upon the Capital Stock of this Institution, and the same will be payable at the Offices of the Company in this City on and after Jan., 2 nd., 1912.

The transfer books will be closed from the 20th to the 31st day of Dec., 1911, both days inclusive.

Guns For The Armouries

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I would like to make a suggestion to the military authorities of the city, if you will be kind enough to allow me a little space in your valuable paper.

We have in the city one of the finest armouries in the province, but there is something lacking, which, in my opinion, would add greatly to its appearance, namely, the placing of some guns around the building. I doubt if there is an armoury in the province around which there is such a noticeable absence of ordnance. In my opinion, if a couple of guns were placed on the south side of the structure, on top of the bank, one on either side of the entrance, it would give the building a better appearance.

If the officers in charge would take this matter up, and apply for old guns, to the proper authorities, I think they would have little difficulty in securing them.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I am

Yours, etc.,

An Evening With Drummond

The first literary evening of St. John's Church Association was held Monday night in the Sunday School room, at 8 p.m. Mr. W. F. Johnston, Church Warden, who kindly acted as Chairman, spoke a few fitting remarks, making all feel at home to enjoy the programme, which was principally given by Mr. C. E. Jamieson, Commercial Master of the Collegiate Institute, in an evening with Drummond, the great Canadian poet, who was ever true to the life and character of the French-Canadian habitant. In his every relation —civic, social, and religious. Drummond's point of view was rather sympathetic than critical, preferring always to discover goodness, even though it was flavoured, at times, with human weakness, you will, therefore, look in vain in the three volumes and verse from his pen for a false note.

Mr. Harold Cluxton, president of the Association, kindly recited one of Drumond's poems, and also announced the arranging of a banquet to be held on Tuesday, January 16th, when one hundred men will be expected to attend.

The musical part of the programme, consisting of an instrumental by R. J. Devey, and a solo by Mrs. Frederick Long, entitled "The Nightingale" was very much appreciated.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mr. C. E. Jamieson for the very pleasant and instructive evening, and the meeting concluded with the singing of God Save the King.

TAFT IS BACKED UP

U. S. Senate Ratifies Abrogation of Russian Treaty

RUSSIA IS NOT PEEVISH

Washington, Dec. 20.—The Senate, by an unanimous vote last night, formally ratified President Taft's notification to Russia of the termination of the treaty of 1832. The Lodge joint resolution reported by the foreign relations committee as a substitute for the Sulzer resolution, that passed the House 300 to 1, was adopted after an all-day debate over Russian discrimination against the Jews of America. The House to-day is expected to agree to the Senate measure.

Commercial relations between the U.S. and Russia will not be affected as a result of the abrogation of the treaty of 1832, in the opinion of Senator William Alden Smith of Michigan, because the favored nation clause of that treaty has been swept aside by the operation of the maximum and minimum clause of the Payne tariff law, carried into effect by the President's proclamation of July 18, 1910.

The Senator's view was discussed widely at the capitol yesterday as a feature hitherto lost sight of in consideration of the annulment of the pact.

Framing New Treaty.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 20.—Having accepted in an equable spirit the notification of the American ambassador that the treaty of commerce and navigation entered into by the United States and Russia in 1832 would be abrogated on Jan. 1, 1913, officials of the Russia Government are now directing their attention to the question of a new treaty. It is recognized that diplomacy of the most experienced kind will be required, especially on the American side, if negotiations for a new treaty are to proceed satisfactorily.

B. C. To Control Railway Belt.

Ottawa, Dec. 20.—The Dominion Government has made an important concession to the Province of British Columbia in response to appeals from the McBride Government. The administration of the unalienated rights in that portion of the province, known as the railway belt, along the line of the C.P.R., goes to the province subject to any possible future action of the federal administration.

The condition is that the administration by the province is to be paid for out of the revenue and any surplus revenue, after the administration charges have been met, comes to the Dominion Treasury.

The necessary order in council has been passed. Valuable water rights exist in the railway belt and the province has been anxious to have the administration of them. In the action now taken there is no provision for the ultimate transfer of the unalienated territory back to the province.

Railway Rights Cancelled.

Brantford, Dec. 20.—Acting on instructions from the City Council, City Solicitor Henderson has been instructed to serve notice on the Grand Valley and Brantford Street Railway here that the rights of the company have been cancelled owing to default of terms of the agreement, and to prosecute the same immediately. The company, it is stated, owes the city a considerable amount in taxes.

Just what result will follow from the action of the city is problematical, as a deal is understood to be in progress whereby the company will be acquired by big interests.

AMONG CANNIBALS.

Canadian Missionaries Home After a Perilous Journey.

New York, Dec. 20.—Stories of cannibalism in Africa were told by missionaries who arrived yesterday on the Minnewaska.

Rev. Dr. W. T. Currie and Mrs. Currie of Toronto, who have been stationed in the Portuguese Province of Angola, on the west coast of Africa, told of having been surrounded by man-eating natives.

"We were making a 14-month trip into the interior," Dr. Currie explained, "when on one occasion armed cannibals surrounded us and made preparations to serve us up for a Christmas dinner. It looked pretty serious for a time, but I called the chief over and finally talked him out of his intention of eating Mrs. Currie and myself.

"It ended up by the cannibals giving us a pig and a gourd of native beer."

On other occasions they were surrounded, but they still have the same arms and legs with which they started.

Dr. Currie has spent twenty-five years in Africa, and his wife has been with him there for eighteen years. He said that the natives of Angola practice polygamy, but discard all their wives except one when they become Christians. He told of one chief who had twelve wives, and seemed to be glad to get rid of 11 of them.

The missionary was met at the pier by his brother-in-law, Rev. Henry J. Johnston of the First M. E. Church of Hoboken, with whom he will stay for two days before leaving for home.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

A publicity board has been formed for Norfolk County.

Robert McKeown, father of C. R. McKeown, M.P.P., died at Orangeville.

The great powers are lending their moral support towards an early termination of the war of revolution in China.

Kenneth Kingston, an Ottawa civil engineer, was found dead on a trail in Saskatchewan. Foul play is suspected.

The explosion of a barrel of gasoline caused a dangerous fire in the oil storehouse of Mr. C. Hughes near Guelph.

Milton, Ont., is plagued with tramps and the police magistrate has had many applications recently for sleeping quarters for the night.

A. W. Green, ex-reeve of Zorra, surrendered to the Chatham police to answer a charge of misappropriating township funds. He claims that he can clear himself.

The physicians in charge of Sir Charles Tupper in London report that there is a further improvement in his condition. It is stated now that there are distinct hopes of his recovery.

Calgary Municipal Street Railway reports earnings $100,000 over and above expenses in 11 months, receipts totaling one-third of a million. The expenses include taxes, sinking fund and sundries.

Liner to Blame For Collision.

London, Dec. 20.—The Admiralty Court yesterday found that the White Star line steamship Olympic was responsible for the collision with the British protected cruiser Hawke, near Osborne Bay, on the north side of the Isle of Wight, on Sept. 20 last. The company pays the costs.

Stationmaster Assaulted.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 20.—The provincial police are facing a mystery that may never be completely solved, in finding Ross Hall, Michigan Central stationmaster at St. David's, unconscious in the road near his home, late Monday night. It was Hall's custom to take railroad money home over night, and the police believe he was sandbagged and robbed. His head and body are cut, and his condition is serious.

DIES OF SMALLPOX

Rev. Elmore D. Harris, of Toronto, Passes Away in Delhi, India

WIDELY KNOWN BAPTIST

Toronto, Dec. 20.—With startling suddenness yesterday morning came the news by cablegram from Delhi, India, of the death on Monday through smallpox of Dev. Dr. Elmore Harris of this city.

Four brief words—"Elmore Harris dead, smallpox"—was the whole of the message received by his brother-in-law, Mr. J. M. Shenstone, of the Massey-Harris Co., which told of the end of the earthly career of one who had been an outstanding figure in the Baptist Church of Canada, and one of the greatest benefactors of Christian institutions of his time.

The news will come as a shock to thousands of people in Ontario, by whom Dr. Harris was known, loved and respected.

J. M. Shenstone, who is a brother-in-law of Dr. Harris, said last night that no further news had been received from Delhi, India, where Dr. Harris died.

Preceding the announcement of his death, no news of Dr. Harris' illness had been received. It is probable his remains will not be returned to Toronto, but will be interred in India. Rev. Dr. Harris was a native of Beamsville, and a son of Allison Harris, one of the founders of the Massey-Harris Co. He was educated at the Beamsville public and high schools, and had a brilliant course at Toronto University, especially in classics and Hebrew. His first pastorate was at the Baptist Church, St. Thomas. Coming to Toronto, he became pastor of Yorkville Baptist Church, and was prominently identified with the establishment of Bloor Street Baptist Church. He was a pioneer in the mission in Walmer road, from which developed the stately church there, to which he pledged $36,000 just before starting on his journey.

Eighteen years ago Dr. Harris was identified with the Bible training movement, resulting in the founding of the College Street Bible Training School.

While Dr. Harris was a trenchant champion of the Old Testament as against some of the views of the higher critics, he is universally spoken of in the highest terms by the most representative Baptist clergymen of the city, to whom the news of his death came as a stunning shock. He was a member of McMaster University senate, and one of the lecturers there.

Brantford's License Board.

Brantford, Dec. 20.—A permanent license board, governing all except liquor licenses in this city, has been appointed by the City Council. The board consists of five members—the city engineer, chief of police, fire chief, medical health officer and chairman of the finance committee. All license bylaws have been consolidated.

Dr. Bruce Smith addressed a meeting of ratepayers here last night, urging the adoption of the hospital bylaw to raise $35,000 by debentures for an enlargement to the hospital. The county will spend $15,000 and the Women's Aid $20,000 for the nurses' home. Dr. Smith showed the imperative necessity of increasing the accommodation, as the city has long ago outgrown the hospital.

Five Years For Stanton.

St. Catharines, Dec. 20.—This was sentence day in the general sessions of peace. County Judge Carman handed out stiff terms of imprisonment to Wm. Leiden at Vineland, convicted of burning a barn last September and Burner Goodall, convicted of writing threatening letters to Annie Black, a Beamsville girl, to whom he was previously engaged to be married.

Goodall was given a sentence of two years in the penitentiary.

Stanton, who is quite deaf, made a strong plea for freedom, claiming that he was not only innocent, but the victim of a conspiracy, even his own family turning against him. The judge imposed a sentence of five years in the penitentiary.

German Budget Goes.

Berlin, Germany, Dec. 20.—The Norddeutsche Allegemeine Zeitung publishes yesterday a summary of the imperial budget for 1912. The total expenditure is given as approximately $704,840,750, an increase of $14,506,670 The army expenditure is given as $192,696,000, an increase of $10,310,250

On the navy $114,353,750 is to be spent, a decrease of $199,500. The naval ordinary and non-recurrent expenditure shows an increase of $6,385,800.

The interest on the national debt calls for $8,198,009 less.

Ready to Try Packers.

Chicago, Dec. 20.—The jury, which is to try the ten Chicago packers, who are charged with violation of the criminal provisions of the Sherman anti-trust law, was completed yesterday and the opening statement of U. S. District Attorney James H. Wilkerson was begun.

In outlining the case, Mr. Wilkerson, in a speech replete with bitter invective, declared that the defendants through the National Packing Co. had continued the old pooling practices of the packers and had actually put into effect the most powerful engine for the suppression of competition ever devised in the industrial world.

TO MEET JAN. 30.

Legislature Will Assemble in About Six Weeks.

Toronto, Dec. 20.—About six weeks from to-day, or to be more explicit, about Jan. 30, the newly-elected Legislature of Ontario will begin its session with Sir James Whitney and N. W. Rowell in the glare of the spotlight.

Preparations for the coming session are beginning already. A busy session of the Cabinet was held yesterday, with Hon. Adam Beck the only absentee. Mr. Beck is in Ottawa at present attending to the interests of the Hydro-electric power project and its contemplated extensions and ramifications throughout the province. Hon. J. S. Hendrie and Hon. I. B. Lucas, both without portfolio, were in attendance.

Among the names already mentioned for the Speakership this session are W. H. Hoyle of North Ontario, Dr. Jamieson of South Grey, and T. Herbert Lennox of North York.

The following official document was handed out yesterday afternoon:

"Although in all probability the coming session of the Legislative Assembly will not be opened at an earlier date than usual, yet it is important that all persons interested in private bill legislation should lose no time in taking the preliminary steps required by the rules of the House. The requirement of the rules in such matters will not be set aside in cases of mere carelessness or negligence to comply with them. In all ordinary cases the rules will be adhered to. Suggestions have been made that the rules at Ottawa be adopted, namely—that in no case will an exception be made except on the payment of a much larger fee."

Applications for legislation must be advertized previously for six months in The Ontario Gazette.

Another Dynamite Plot.

Los Angeles, Dec. 20.—Twenty-three sticks of high-powder dynamite were found yesterday afternoon at the home of Arthur Lewis, proprietor of two of the largest department stores in Los Angeles.

The dynamite was found by a servant, who at once notified the police.

Fielding May Stay In England.

Ottawa, Dec. 20.—It is stated here that Hon. W. S. Fielding will go to England to reside, taking charge of his late son-in-law's business, and perhaps entering British politics. British Liberals have, it is said, offered him a seat.

THE EAST LOSES SEATS

Bulk of Constituencies Below the Limit of Representation

MALE POPULATION GROWING

Ottawa, Dec. 20.—A second census bulletin issued last night gives the count of June last by sex and electoral divisions. It covers the whole of Canada with the exception of two subdivisions in Saskatchewan, two in British Columbia, and a few in the Yukon.

With these omissions, the total is still greater than the 7,189,000 announced in October, the figures announced yesterday being: Males, 3,808,280, and females 3,374,327, a total of 7,182,338, as against 5,371,315 for 1910. The male population has increased by 1,054,965, and the female population an increase of 797,350, showing a much greater increase of males than of females. This increase is largely in the west, which has seen a great influx of settlers and railway builders. A large male surplus is shown in each of the western provinces.

The figures issued last night will form the basis of the coming redistribution of constituencies. The unit of representation will be 30,282, which is higher than may now be found in a majority of eastern constituencies, but lower than may be found in the big riding of the west. Maisonneuve, which is represented by the one Labor man in Parliament, has the largest population of any riding, 170,976. Winnipeg is second with 127,382, Vancouver third with 123,902, and West Toronto fourth with 105,268. Many of the ridings are far below the new unit. Antigonish, N.S., has only 11,962, the Yukon 10,051, North Lanark 14,620, North Middlesex 13,727, and West Northumberland 13,955.

The provincial totals are:

Ontario: Males, 1,939,403; females, 1,922,925; total, 2,923,326. Population in 1901, 2,182,947.

British Columbia: Males, 243,838; females, 136,982; total, 380,767. Population in 1901, 178,657.

Yukon: Total, 10,051. Population in 1901, 27,219.

Doctors Protest.

London, Dec. 20.—A large gathering of 2,000 doctors from all parts of the United Kingdom at a meeting held in Queen's Hall yesterday struck against the Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd-George's insurance scheme.

Sir Victor Horsley, member of the council of the British Medical Association, which the doctors charge with sacrificing their interests to the blandishments of Mr. Lloyd-George, was roundly hissed. He was denounced as a traitor when he tried to defend the action of the council of the British Medical Association in promising Mr. Lloyd-George that the doctors of the United Kingdom would do their share toward the success of his measures.

The meeting passed a resolution to boycott vigorously Mr. Lloyd-George's scheme and not to treat the poor under its provision until the demands of the medical profession were granted.

Jamaica Sugar Industry.

Ottawa, Dec. 20.—The Department of Trade and Commerce is in receipt of an exhaustive report, which may have an important bearing upon the negotiations for closer trade relations between Canada and the British West Indies. The report comes from E. H. G. Flood, Canadian trade commissioner at Barbados. He says that the favorable market offered by Canada to West Indian sugar and molasses and the absence of destructive competition from beet-growing countries in Europe have not been sufficient to increase the sugar production of the islands, capital being repelled by the speculative character of the industry.

"There is," he says, "in Jamaica, the appearance of an awakening and with the improved machinery, which is being introduced throughout the colonies, a larger output of sugar may be looked for in the near future."

Attacks Montreal Liberals.

Ottawa, Dec. 20.—Oliver Asselin, the young Nationalist, who was defeated in St. James' constituency last election, was in the city yesterday and asked the Government to appoint a royal commission to investigate the preparation of the list in Montreal for the last election. He claims that if such an investigation is held it will reveal an astounding state of affairs. He believes that a wholesale system of personation and ballot-stuffing was followed in Montreal and district by the Liberal machine last election.

Mr. Asselin is strongly in favor of the abolition of the system of plural voting in vogue in Quebec for federal elections and would favor a Dominion election law for the cities at least.

Medico In Jail.

North Bay, Dec. 20.—As the result of a prosecution by Charles Rose, detective for the Ontario Medical Council, an unregistered physician practicing in a village near North Bay, is serving 30 days in the county jail in default of a $50 fine imposed on a second conviction. The first conviction, some months ago, resulted in a fine of $25 and costs, which was paid.

Brantford's Busy Custom House.

Brantford, Dec. 20.—Ald. J. W. Blakney and Edward Young have been added to the staff of the Customs Department in this city. Both are well-known factory foremen. Receipts of the Brantford office have reached the half million mark annually, and an increase in the staff was necessary.

Rich Strike In Yukon.

Dawson, Yukon Territory, Dec. 20.—A stampede to the head of Sixty-Mile River is in progress, as the result of a rich gold strike there, news of which was brought by John Matson, who told of getting two and a half ounces of gold, worth nearly $40 from a bedrock space five by eight feet. Many old prospectors have started over the 120-mile trail to the new diggings, which are 20 miles from the Alaskan boundary.

SUREST TONIC IN THE WORLD

IS "FRUIT-A-TIVES" THE GREAT FRUIT MEDICINE

Like fruit juices, "Fruit-a-tives" acts on the great blood purifying organs of the body—namely the liver, bowels, kidneys and skin, and stimulates all these parts to increased activity. The splendid nerve tonics and intestinal antiseptics, combined with the intensified fruit juices, make "Fruit-a-tives" the finest of nerve tonics.

On the stomach, "Fruit-a-tives" acts as a soothing tonic and allays all irritation.

By purifying the blood—strengthening the nervous system and regulating kidneys, bowels and skin—"Fruit-a-tives" builds up the whole system as nothing else will.

"Fruit-a-tives" is a really wonderful medicine—being made directly from fresh fruit—and is the intensified juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes. "Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit. It is mild in action—pleasant to take—and is a tonic of inestimable value.

50c. a box. 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers, or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

THE WYANDOTTE SHARES

(Short Story.)

BY EDGAR DAYTON PRICE

Old Sherwin passed in the office as a trifle—just a trifle—crazy. Not that it manifested itself in his work. George Sherwin was a capable and accurate bookkeeper, and the books over which he toiled for eight hours every day were marvels of precision and neatness.

The lack of sanity showed itself in the old man in his interest in stocks. Feverishly he followed the market, keeping tabs on fifty or sixty stocks, from Western Union and Northern Pacific down through the list to the "industrials," some of which lacked a footing on the stoc exchange. A $20 a week bookkeeper without a spare $10 to bless himself with, going home with a long face over the fact that some stock had dropped 10 points—of course he was a bit crazy.

The office did not know the old man's history, how in his younger days he had been a broker on the "street" and a sharp one, how he had transgressed the unwritten rule of brokerage never to speculate on your own account, how he had made one of those wild successes which sometimes last a fortnight, and how, in the windup, the market cleaned him up with neatness and despatch and after a week of frantic fighting to retrieve himself sent him to his bed with brain fever.

It was probable that during the heyday of his success old George had been a trifle crazy. The brain fever left him sane enough, without any outward longing for speculation and an unimpaired ability to keep books. He could have a job in a dozen brokers' offices, keeping the complicated records of the stock business, but he had a terror of the game and went away, to turn up years later in the manufacturing town where we find him keeping books at $20 a week for the Peebles factory of the Amalgamated Button Company.

With the years had come a dulling of the terror of the days that had "wiped him out," and the old man kept sheets on the market and did an imaginary business in Wall Street. He made some shrewd guesses, too, and if he had actually margined the stocks he had slated for a big rise he could have sold out a rich man. On the other hand, he sometimes missed and the favourite stock went down. Those were the days he went home with a long face.

There was quite an opportunity right in town for speculation in a not expensive way if the bookkeeper had had the money. The manufacturing plants were all big ones—cotton mills, steel plants, sewing machines, agricultural implements, and so on. Not a one but was incorporated with stock and bonds to sell, some of the securities being held in the local market at a few cents per share. Everybody who made a little over necessities bought shares of some kind; all the employees of the different concerns were privileged, nay, requested, to buy preferred stock in their employers' businesses, and downtown there was a place where local stocks were bought and sold.

There are possibilities in industrials even at a few cents per share. In times of prosperity holders of local securities received dividends and the value of their holdings soared. The shipping clerk in the Peebles factory was a devotee to Consolidated Locomotive, the Burnham & Barry branch of which was located down by the railroad, and one day he came into the office radiant and had the bookkeeper cash him a cheque for $160.

"What do you think of that, Pop?" he asked jubilantly. "That cheque represents an outlay of $40 in Consolidated Chu-Chu futures when things were so slack six months ago. Now they are full of orders and everything humming, and I've sold out $120 to the good—money found. Why don't you go in?"

The old speculator's eyes glowed as he straightened out the neat cheque. He knew in a way about the local industrial situation, but it seeemd puerile beside the doings of the New York market, and he had not bothered with it. And here was a chap drawing $15 a week actually cleaning up $120 of money, real money, while he, George Sherwin, frittered away his time to no purpose. A bunch of money, not a large bunch, would do so much, too. There was that place for sale, ten miles out, house, barn, boathouse, and ten acres of ground on a lake—a man could keep chickens there, chickens! and a horse and cow and a boat on the lake for fishing purposes. Three thousand dollars would buy it.

"I've got no money to throw away," he said. "This rise in Locomotive is a mere fluke."

"Fluke nothing,' said the shipping clerk. "I saw it a coming. And some of the boys have made money in thread stocks—buying for a fall. The thread mills have passed a dividend and the stocks are away off sure enough. And there is the Walldell Plow company stock——"

"Here's your money, go away," growled the bookkeeper ,frightened at the feeling the talk had engendered.

"All right, stick to those big deals that are keeping you poor," said the shipping clerk, winking elaborately.

It was shortly after this the bookkeeper took to keeping chickens. Mrs. Sherwin and the girls were delighted when one day the taciturn old man came home early and went to tinkering with an old shanty on their place, and it developed that he was making it into a chicken house. If the wound of their earlier days had healed in the husband it had not in the wife, who for months back had watched her preoccupied mate figuring, figuring interminably evenings by the fire, and who saw the old gambling propensity growing in him again. If he would only take to chickens it would be a hobby to take his attention when he wasn't keeping books, and he would have no time to bother with those things which had come so near wrecking their happiness.

"Here's the beginning of our flock," said George, coming home the next Saturday with a big Wyandotte rooster under his arm.

"What a pretty fowl," cried the women delighted.

"He ought to be pretty," said the husband grimly, "he cost me $10."

"Ten dollars!" shrieked Mrs. Sherwin, aghast.

"I chanced to have the money saved and had a notion to take a little flier——"

"It's all righ, Geordie," said Mrs. Sherwin quickly. "I only thought $10 a little bit extravagant for one rooster, but you know best. He's such a handsome fellow, you ought to give him a name."

"I'm going to call him 'Stitch,'" said the bookkeeper gravely, withal a twinkle in his eye.

"Stitch!" cried the mother, and the two daughters in concert.

"See here, ma, and you two girls, can't I keep a few fowls and call them by names of my own without you getting mad?" he asked. "Wait till I buy the hens and name 'em and you won't think 'Stitch' anything. I have my little whims, but if they are going to make you unhappy——"

"Goodness! Call the birds anything you like," said the women, while "Stitch," released, flew to the top of the fence and crowed loudly.

Sherwin's selection of hens was the talk of the neighborhood and gave painful recurrence to the whispers about his sanity. From his savings he bought them one at a time, and the first hen was a Brahma christened "Twist." A Plymouth Rock followed, labelled "Wire," a Cochin China called "Reaper," a brown Leghorn gravely named "Peebles," apparently after the factory that employed him. Of the flock no two were of the same breed, they came one at a time at intervals, and the prices the old man claimed to have paid for them were simply outrageous, and kept the family short for days afterward. "Stitch," the rooster, lorded it over the heterogeneous flock and the owner sat by the hour and proudly watched them busily picking up their living. If rumours of his brain trouble which resulted in the outlandish names reached him he did not deign to notice them and in a short time the whim ceased to attract attention.

The chicken fad was a fortunate one for the old man. He was out bright and early working in the henhouse, and never were fowls so tenderly cared for.—As hens will, they reciprocated the attention lavished on them, and laid eggs right royally: eggs big and eggs little, eggs brown and eggs white, speckled eggs and double yolks—the family had eggs to eat and eggs to sell. Sherwin quit his imaginary speculation in stocks and instead opened up a set of books with his hens over which he never tired working.

It was quite easy to fall into stock nomenclature in keeping track of the hens and their doings. When "Twist" or "Wire" or "Reaper" were laying regularly their market was "rising," when they moulted and shortened on laying the market was "off," and he was "long" or "short" on their products as the case might be. The bookkeeper laid out sheets and gravely set down the names of the flock, now counting over twenty-five, with another rooster named "Oilcloth," and reduced the fluctuations in hen fruit to figures to a decimal basis. Strangely enough, both the roosters figured in the sheets, but presumably their percentages were based on the fights they indulge in, in which however, the Wyandotte invariably won.

Sherwin made no secret of his foible in the office, where it created much amusement.

"You must be planning to get rich on your poultry yard," laughed the boys; "what are you going to do with your surplus?"

"You'll see me living on my own place and driving in behind my trotter yet," said the bookkeeper, in no wise moved by the grins. "My hens 'Wire' and 'Twist' are worth three times what I paid for them and are declaring good dividends right along. I've got to the point now where I put the profits of my hens into still more hens, and some of these days I'll strike a hen that lays golden eggs and then—the trotter."

"Fine, fine!" said the office help, sadly tapping their foreheads behind Sherwin's back.

It was a pity that the bookkeeper had not taken to keeping hens years before. He lost his taciturnity and actually whistled as he tossed his ledgers about, and one day he opened a bank account.

"You see," he explained to the banker, "my hens are making money for me and I need a place to keep it safe. Then, too, I am meditating going into the hen business wholesale and I will want to borrow money."

"Made up your mind what breeds to plunge on?" asked the amused banker, who knew all about the twenty-five and more varieties.

"Yes," said his customer gravely. "I do. There will be an elimination in my varieties to two or three soon—I have spotted the best layers by keeping sheets on them, and the rest can go to the chopping block for all I care."

2nd galley of Wyandotte shares

"Come in and see me when you want to borrow," said the banker; "I guess we can accommodate you to a few hundred—with a good name on your note."

"Thanks; I'm going to send you a couple of dozen of fresh eggs," said borrower at the bank, unknown, how.

The women mourned when most of the fowl was sacrificed. It was some consolation that Sherwin had not paid big prices for them, and according to him they were not thriving and needed the ax. For a time they ate chicken—roasted, fried, fricassed and boiled, and the back yard looked deserted.

"Never mind, ma," said the poultry fancier," those that remain will get along better for my exclusive attention and I can work out the problem of that kind that lay the golden eggs"—he chuckled.

"Geordie"—the good woman was looking at him apprehensively, and he chuckled again.

"Don't worry, ma, my head's all right," he declared, and started for the Peebles button factory whistling.

True to his word Sherwin became a here than in the smoky city. You ever, to the women folk. Simultaneously he began to fill up his hen yard with Wyandottes mostly, then "Wires" and "Twists." About this time he hired a carriage for a Sunday afternoon and took Mrs. Sherwin and Adelaide and Gussie for a drive, stopping at a little place on a lake about ten miles from home, to rest. It was a cosy spot, a nice house, a barn, trees, a vegetable garden, and the rest was grass. There was a boat house and a wharf at the lake, and a little way out fish were jumping in the most alluring manner.

"What a paradise this is," sighed the women; "how much better to live here htan in that smoky city. You could keep hens by the thousand in a place like this, Geordie," said the wife wistfully.

"When my present 'Stitches,' 'Wires' and 'Twists' work out that golden egg problem among themselves," he chuckled, "we'll buy a place like this, get a horse and a cow, and live happy ever

"It's time we started for home," said the good woman hastily. Somehow she felt frightened when her husband talked so about the hens—it reminded her of the days when he had quit brokering for speculating.

The "performance sheets," as Sherwin styled his hen bookkeeping, were quite easy to keep now, reduced to three classes. Unending attention worked wonders with the Wyandottes, Brahmas and Plymouth Rocks were separated, quite filling the narrow quarters, and the fine big eggs were saved and hatched out in an incubator. There was a ready sale at big prices for settings of eggs and young pullets, and really Sherwin was making quite a profit on his investment. Not enough to account for a bank book locked carefully in his desk at the Peebles factory with several hundreds to his credit or the easy accommodation he was getting at the bank, however.

For the Wyandotte rooster, "Stitch," the bookkeeper developed a mighty affection as time went on. He often sat and watched the proud fowl, lord of the back yard, and muttered things beneath his breath. The finest of living was none too good for the big rooster and a world of petting "Stitch" got from his attentive master. Was it possible that from the race of "Stitch" the golden eggs were to come?

The shipping clerk of the Peebles factory was by this time a regular speculator in the local "industrial" stock market. The profits on his deal in "Chu-Chu" had gone in a different directions for industrial shares which he bought and sold industriously as the values fluctuated. The shipping clerk was not always wise in his investments and formed the habit of consulting with the bookkeeper, whose former connection with the big stock market had leaked out. Sherwin took time from figuring his performance sheets to give the shipping clerk counsel, and in turn the shipping clerk reported the many rumours he picked up of happenings in the various industries likely to affect the price of shares.

"I want your advice on 'sewing machine,' Sherwin," he said one day. "There is something new going on in the Standard factory, and a friend of mine there, a pattern maker, tips me that it is a new invention, something that will make the sewing machine trust crazy when the Standard sewing machine comes out with it. He does not know this positively, just a flying shop rumour, you know, but what with somebody buying 'sewing machine' pretty freely, the stock is stiffening, and——"

"Buy it, my boy, buy it—for a rise," said the book keeper. "I happen to know that the Standard people have been kicking the price down for some reason, and it may be that they are going to buy it back cheap if they've got a good thing cooking, and make all the money for themselves. Buy it by all means." The bookkeeper turned his back and went on figuring his absurd hen sheets and the shipping clerk went away. Sherwin went down to the bank in the middle of the morning and borrowed $1,000 with which he purchased poultry, making a neat entry in the performance sheet under the head, "Stitch."

"The time is ripe," he muttered.

The shipping clerk bought "Sewing Machine," a very little, for "Sewing Machine" was on the rise and the Standard people were buying back their stock as fast as offered. In a few days he hastily sold it, for "Sewing Machine," never worth more than 60 cents a share, was kiting along to the impossible price of $2. A week later the shipping clerk was kicking himself, metaphorically, all over the Peebles factory, for "Sewing Machine" was bid at $5 the share and none offered. That rumour about the new invention was a fact.

In a fortnight it was whispered that the Standard people were in a hole over their own stock. The original issue had been 500,000 shares at $1 per share, ten shares being given outright for a time with every machine sold as a premium on a rather poor sewing machine. Now, when they had an improvement, which made the machine highly valuable, they found that others had been busy picking up Standard stock, and that the company was a minority holder of its own stock, being short several thousand shares. It soon developed who had bought the stock, for agents of the sewing machine trust, throwing aside all disguise, came into the open and bought right and left at any price. The Standard people frantically tried to outbid them.

It was a fight for existence on one side and monopoly on the other. If the trust won and got a majority of company and the valuable improvement into camp, the improvement went on the trust machines and the inventors were "squeezed." If the Standard succeeded in buying a few shares it could hold its position and in a few years wipe the trust off the face of the earth with its superior machine. Both sides ransacked the country and bought shares at ruinous prices and the contest quickly narrowed down to the possession of 2,500 shares—both parties had approximately 248,000 shares, and the one that got hold of the missing block of 2,500 would win the mastery. Somehow it was learned by the trust agents and the Standard people that the block was owned right in town and a sleepless hunt for it was begun.

George Sherwin was sitting in his poultry yard smoking a pipe and meditating as he threw corn to his favorite rooster. His meditations were interruped by a man who came running from the house. At the same time another man tumbled over the back fence.

"I understand you are the owner of 2,500 shares of Standard stock," they said simultaneously, glowering at one another.

Sherwin chuckled.

"Do you see that rooster there?" he said, "his name's 'Stitch'—named for the Standard sewing machine. Now supposing 'Stitch' stands for 2,500 shares of Standard stock, what'll you give me for my rooster?"

"Fifteen thousand dollars," said the "Trust" promptly.

"Twenty," roared the Standard man.

"Thirty," bellowed the "Trust."

"Fifty thousand dollars," said the Standard man, white faced. Sherwin recognized him as the president of the company.

"I'll have to consult my principals," said the "Trust" man. "Will you hold off for half an hour?"

"Fifty thousand dollars, one—two—three, do I hear any more? Sold to the president of the Standard Sewing Machine Company and a mighty fine Wyandotte rooster you've bought for the money," declared the rooster's owner. "Would you mind stepping into the house to complete the transaction?"

"Geordie, what's the matter?" asked his wife, half crying. She had sent the president of the Standard Sewing Machine Company out in the yard to see her husband, the worthy declining to wait in the parlour, and the noise of the bargaining had come ominously to her ears.

"Matter? "Why, I've found the hen that lays the golden eggs, and it isn't a hen either—it's my rooster, 'Stitch,' who stood for 2,500 shares of sewing machine stock that I have just sold for $50,000."

"Geordie!" said his wife wildly.

"I ain't crazy, ma. I've been doing a little speculating in stocks right here in town, and to keep you from worrying, I've made you think it was hens I was dabbling in. 'Stitch' has stood all along for Sewing Machine, 'Wire' for the Wire Mill, and 'Twist' is the Thread Factory,' et cetera, et cetera."

When the news got to the office there was a quick revision of opinion about old Sherwin, the bookkeeper.

"Crazy! I wish I came from the same lunatic asylum," was the envious cry.

"What are you going to do with your wealth, George?" they asked the man busily writing in his ledgers as usual.

"Going to buy back my Wyandotte rooster, and move to paradise," he said with a chuckle.

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skilful. I wrote them and got THE NEW METHOD TREATMENT. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $15 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $31 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

Would Fall In a Faint

When She Attempted to Work, so Exhausted Was the Nervous System

The Feeble, Wasted Nerves Were Restored and Revitalized by

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Nervous prostration is a terrible disease to all who understand its symptoms. At times the sufferer feels comparatively well, but with slight exertion the dreadful helplessness returns and all strength and vitality seems to leave the system.

This letter from Mrs. Martin very well describes the terrible conditions in which many a sufferer finds herself. She also tells how she regained health and strength by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food after all other treatments had failed.

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition from nervous exhaustion and prostration. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall to the floor. The weakness was so great that I could not so much as sweep the floor without fainting, but the nerve food helped me after the doctors failed. It has done wonders in building up my nervous system. I can do my own housework now and washing, and feel that this great medicine has been a God-send to me. I think it is the best of medicines."

Why Should I Use Cuticura Soap?

"There is nothing the matter with my skin, and I thought Cuticura Soap was only for skin troubles." True, it is for skin troubles, but its great mission is to prevent skin troubles. For more than a generation its delicate emollient and prophylactic properties have rendered it the standard for this purpose, while its extreme purity and refreshing fragrance give to it all the advantages of the best of toilet soaps. It is also invaluable in keeping the hands soft and white, the hair live and glossy, and the scalp free from dandruff and irritation.

While its first cost is a few cents more than that of ordinary toilet soaps, it is prepared with such care and of such materials, that it wears to a wafer, often outlasting several cakes of other soap, and making its use, in practice, most economical. Cuticura Soap is sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, but the truth of these claims may be demonstrated without cost by sending to "Cuticura," Dept. 7M, Boston, U. S. A., for a liberal sample cake, together with a thirty-two page book on the skin and hair.

GOOD SHORT STORIES

"What is your name, little boy?" asked the teacher.

"I'll have to write it for you, ma'am," said the new boy, hesitatingly.

"I think not. My hearing is quite good. Your name, please?"

"I'd rather not tell you."

"Are you ashamed of your name?"

"No, ma'am, but——"

"Then we will not waste any more time, if you please. I am waiting."

The boy began desperately.

"Kuk-kuk-kuk-kuk Clarence! That's my first name. The other is Pup-pup-pup-pup Perkins! I never stutter 'cept when I'm speaking my name and when I'm nagged like this I'm a whole lot worse, ma'am."—Housekeeper.

If any readers are still in doubt as to the exact connotation of the adjective "pawky," or question its entire applicability to the humour of Scotland, I think the following little tale will clear the matter up. At a funeral in Glasgow a stranger had taken his seat in one of the mourning carriages, clad in decent black. His presence excited the curiosity of the other three occupants, one of whom presently could stand it no longer, and thus addressed him:

"Ye'll be a brither o' the corpse?"

"No!" replied the stranger; "I'm not a brither o' the corpse!"

"Weel, then," pursued the curious mourner, "ye'll be his cousin?"

"No. I'm not that!" Was the still tantalising reply.

"No?" went on the insatiate querent; "then ye'll be a freend o' the corpse?"

"No that either!" admitted the stranger. "To tell the truth, I've no been that weel mysel' and my doctor has ordered me some carriage exercise, I thought this wad be the cheapest way to tak' it!"—Harper's Weekly.

The late Gen. Gordon of the Confederate army was a young man when the Civil War began. He organized a company in Kentucky and came down with his men by easy stages through Virginia. Everywhere he grew more enthusiastic in his denunciation of the Yankees. Finally, at Petersburg, Va., he made a brilliant speech and declared amid tremendous enthusiasm:

"Why, fellow citizens, we can lick the Yankees with popguns."

Years afterward, when the country was at peace and Gen. Gordon had settled in Virginia, he was running for Congress.

He arrived at Petersburg to make a speech, ad while in the middle of it a grizzled Confederate veteran rose.

"Say, General, wasn't you here at the beginning of the wah?" he said.

"I was," said Gordon.

"Didn't you-all say we could lick the Yankees with popguns?"

"I did," replied Gordon.

"Well, then, why didn't we?" asked the veteran.

A visitor to the opera, who, by the way, is not a regular attendant, sat through the performance of "Die Walkure" the other evening. Apparently she enjoyed the music, and she didn't show signs of lack of interest at any point. She didn't know the legendary tale that was sung.

When she met an intimate friend the next day she asked: "Were you at the opera last night? Oh I'm so glad! I wish to ask you something. Tell me, was it good? Was the story interesting?"

Assured that such was the fact, the enquirer said: "You see, I liked it fairly well and I just wanted to know if I was liking something that was worth it."—Philadelphia Times.

"Why don't you speak to that prima donna about her careless performance?"

"I don't dare," replied the manager. "When I talk to her, she sings her part of the conversation, and she has a contract with me for ten dollars a note."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Mr. Style—I have tickets for the opera."

Mrs. Style—Oh, good! I'll go and put my hat on right away."

Mr. Style—All right, dear. I guess you'll be ready in time. The tickets are for to-morrow night.—Yonkers Statesman.

An Irishman crossed to Canada on a Canadian Pacific steamer, took the Canadian Pacific train for Vancouver, ate at C.P.R. eating houses, stopped at C.P.R. hotels, was shown C.P.R. land and finally got to Vancouver much impressed with the greatness of that institution.

He went to a hotel, registered and asked the clerk how soon breakfast would be ready.

"Breakfast is over," said the clerk.

The Irishman looked at his watch. "It isn't time for it to be over," he answered.

"Oh, yes it is," said the clerk. "You see your watch isn't right. We run our dining room on Canadian Pacific time."

"Good Lord!" said the Irishman, in an awed voice. "Does the Canadian Pacific own the time too?"—Saturday Evening Post.

A well-known Scottish architect was travelling in Palestine recently, when news reached him of an addition to his family circle. The happy father immediately provided himself with some water from the Jordan to carry home for the christening of the infant, and returned to Scotland.

On the Sunday appointed for the ceremony he duly presented himself at the church and sought out the beadle held up a warning hand and cious water to his care. He pulled the flask from his pocket, but the beadle hel dup a warning hand and came nearer to whisper:

"No the noo, sir; no the noo! Maybe after the kirk's out!"—St. Paul Dispatch.

CONCERNING SNAKES

The first impulse of a man on seeing a snake is to stamp on its head, which is unwise. A snake's skull is very tough as behooves a part of the body that is always liable to be knocked against stones, etc., owing to the extreme shortsightedness of all serpents.

The back, on the contrary, can be broken with a light rap, for it consists of a delicate system of ball and socket joints. Should snakes be harmless the best plan is to leave them alone; should they be dangerous, a shot from a revolver is safe and effective.

In case no revolver is at hand a rap with a cane will be sufficient, but care must be taken to keep away from the head of the snake.

A snae does not normally go about hitting its head against hard objects; it only does this when in a hurry. Moving at its ordinary pace it feels its way with its long, delicate and forked tongue.

In the same way, when about to swallow its food it touches it all over with its tongue, in order to ascertain where to take hold, and this process has given rise to the mistaken idea that a snake covers its prey with saliva prior to swallowing it. No doubt a consiederable quantity of saliva is generated during the process of deglutition but it does not come from the tongue, which is merely used as a feeler.

When a snake bites it bisects its head up to the nape of its neck and opens its jaws till they are in the same plane, that is, at right angles to the body. These jaws are provided with six rows of strong, sharp teeth, four on the upper jaw and two on the lower jaw.

This is a formidable arrangement but when you remember that a medium sized constrictor can project its head with sufficient force to knock a man off his feet and will either on provocation or sometimes without let go this catapult, rat trap machinery, you are likely to avoid constrictors as far as possible. Such a snake can take hold of a man and shake him or strip the skin nd flesh from the part seized as if it were paper.—Rosary Magazine.

SPOKE THE TRUTH

Teacher: Willie, did your father spank you for what you did in school yesterday?

Willie: No, ma'am; he said it would hurt him more than me.

Teacher: What nonsense! Your father is too sympathetic.

Willie: No, ma'am; but he's got the rheumatism in both arms.—Tit-Bits.

THE LONELY OLD HEN

(Short Story.)

"Say, Miss Abby, here's a letter for you. Guess it must be from your brother up Bolton way." The postmistress generally guessed who one's letters were from.

"Yes. Guess it is. I was expecting a letter to-day." It had been four months since Miss Abby had received a letter, but no one at Bellwood was ever surprised at receiving mail.

"Hope nothing's the matter with him. You haven't heard from him for quite a spell, have you?" solicitously inquired the postmistress.

"No. It has been quite a time since I heard from Sam, but I don't think anything is the matter. Anyway, I must be getting home—all the flowers must be watered to-night and that's quite a job." Miss Abby betrayed no sign of emotion at receiving the first letter from her brother since he had left town five years ago. People had wondered when there had been no correspondence between the two, but there had been no satisfactory explanation. So when the letter came at last Miss Miner, the postmistress, had casually remarked to all the women coming for the mail.:

"Guess Sam Clark's decided to write to his sister once more. It's about time—don't you think?"

One and all agreed that it was and speculated as to the kind of letter, but they were all disappointed when they thought Miss Abby would tell, for she carried her letter home before she opened it.

As she tore open the envelope she she wondered what Sam would have to say after such long years of silence. True she always searched the Bolton news in the Weekly Gossip and knew about Sam's latest horses, his new house, and his prosperous business, but then this was the first real word from him in five years. The first words, "My dear big sis."—brought tears to her eyes; he was the same affectionate fellow. Then she steeled herself and read on.

"Your brother is a pretty sick fellow and needs some one to look after him. Can't you forget his foolish speech and come to live with him? He will try to be good."

The letter was so pitiful, so boyish, that mother love told Miss Abby to go to him and take care of him for ever; but her stubborn pride cried out.

"No, I won't go. I told him I would never live with him and I won't. Just because I didn't want him to marry that foolish Cary girl, he said that since I was a lonely old hen, who couldn't get a cock of my own, I nedn't try to keep everybody else the same way. I told him then and there that so far as I cared he could go and take his hen with him, and that he need never say anything more to me about his affairs. Well, he hasn't said a word since his flyaway wouldn't have him until he needed a hen to take care of him—then I'm good enough. No, I won't go." She had torn the letter into bits as she was talking, and as she finished she threw the scraps in a pile under her table. Then she went out to take care of her flowers, the only thing on which she poured her whole love.

As she weeded the pansy bed near the fence, her neighbour came out and called cheerily:

"Hope there wasn't any bad news from Sam."

"Oh, no," answered Miss Abby, trying to appear unconcerned. "Don't you think this bluish pansy is a beauty?"

"Yes. I always liked your pansies. They seem to grow bigger than most folks' do. By the way, weren't pansies Sam's favourites. He always used to be picking them when he was a little fellow. John and I thought may be that was why you worked so much with your pansies, is it?" The neighbour was tactfully trying to learn more about the letter so that she might have the honour of retailing it.

"No, there isn't any special reason. I just fancy pansies myself." Miss Abby had turned to her sweet pea vines hoping to avoid further questioning, and the neighbour finding inquiry fruitless hailed a passer-by with the hopes of hearing the very latest from the village.

Despite Miss Abby's negation, she knew that her neighbour's reasoning was right, for Sam had always called pansies his "velvet flowers," and had helped her set them out, but she was too proud to acknowledge the truth. She had said time and again that all the love she had ever had for her brother had died when he ad so unjustly taunted her. She went into the house more determined than ever to write her refusal in good plain English. She took out her gold pen—in the plush case was a tiny card on which was written, in a boyish scrawl, "Merry Christmas from Sam to Abby." No, she couldn't make her refusal bitter enough if she used that pen, so she looked through the desk to find another.

In the midst of her search, the minister interrupted to talk over some parish matters with which she was helping him. When he left it was late, but she was determined to write her letter before she had time to think it over. So taking a rusty pen from an old pigeonhole, she wrote very painstakingly:

"Mr. Samuel Clark.

"Dear sir,—It will be impossible for me to undertake any more duties. My time is fully occupied.

"Abby Clark."

As she re-read it she said to herself, "Well, I guess that will show him that I can get along good nough without him and that I don't care to waste words on him. I surely hope he won't pester me any more."

Then she tried all the windows and doors and went wearily into her room; she noticed scraps of her brother's letter under the table, but she was too tired to pick them up. After undressing she sank to her knees and began slowly to repeat the Lord's Prayer. When she reached "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors," she choked up a bit, but she went on determined to let nothing soften her heart. When she finally got into bed she found that she couldn't go to sleep. She heard the clock strike twelve, one, two, before she dozed off to dream about a sick little boy with his head pillowed on a big velvety pansy.

She had not been asleep long before she heard a tapping on the floor, near her bed, then a scratchy noise like someone tearing paper. She listened frightened. What could it be? She lay perfectly still trying to think what was there in the room with her. An awful thought struck her. It was a ghost come to haunt her. Now it was tearing up the letter she had written. Now it was knocking, knocking as her brother had knocked to gain an entrance into her hard heart. She grew cold with fright; the silence broken only by that tapping noise oppressed her; she tried to pray, but the words stuck in her throat. How could she ever hope for forgiveness when she had refused to forgive? She reached her hand out to pull the covers closer over her head and as she did so a little piece of velvety fur just brushed her hand.

"Oh Lord," she cried, now in agony, "if you will take away this punishment I will go to him in the morning. I have always loved him. Lord, forgive my pride. Spare me to go and ask forgiveness of him."

New strength seemed to come to her as she prayed and she got up bravely, lighted a lamp, and dressed hastily, never noticing that several of the scraps of paper, with tiny footprints on them, were now lying between the table and the bed. It was still dark in the old house, and Miss Abby was frightened at the squeaking of the loose boards, even at her own breathing, but she marched bravely into the sitting-room ,took out her gold pen, and wrote, forgetting all her fear:

"My dear little brother,—Your lonely old hen is coming to the shelter of her protecting cock just as soon as ever she can. Take good care of the cock until she gets there.

"Lovingly,

"Your Own Big Sis."

Then she went out into the garden, wet with the early morning dew, and picking the big, bluish pansy, she placed a kiss on its golden centre, and dropped it into the envelope.

TO DEFINE "HUMOUR"

A writer in La Revue of Paris, M. Maurice Dekobra, has been inviting representative humourists in various countries to define "humour," and publishes the results of his inquiry in the current number of that periodical.

Eight well-known English writers contribute their ideas on the subject. Mr. G. B. Shaw, whose own humour M. Dekobra says is "saturated with ferocious irony," tersely dismisses the question in these words: "Humour cannot be defined. It is a primary substance which makes us laugh. You might as well try to prove a dogma."

Mr. Jerome K. Jerome writes: "I do not think humour can be explained. I would define it as that which strikes us by its drollery." This, M. Dekobra remarks, is evidently "The Idle Reply of an Idle Fellow."

Mr. Owen Seaman, editor of Punch, takes the matter much more seriously, and devotes two and a half pages of print to his conceptions of humour, pointing out that it depends largely on contrast, incongruity, and a subjective sense of superiority. In America, says Mr. Seaman, one of its leading characteristics is exaggeration, while in England it finds expression in implications (sous-extendus) equivalent to the reserve strength of an athlete. It embraces irony in the largest sense and the art of delicate suggestion. One of its most popular forms of expression is the grotesque, as exemplified by Robert Burns:

"And some are fu' o' love divine,
And some are fu' o' brandy."

The pun, Mr. Seaman reminds us, is now out of fashion in England, but humorously pedantic efforts are often obtained by the employment of literally translated French words or words of Greek or Latin origin. An Englishman is even more afraid of ridicule than a Frenchman; yet he will turn the laugh against himself or against his national institutions, thus anticipating the ridicule he dreads. In English literature, laughter and tears are more closely allied than in that of other countries.

Mr. Anstey suggests this definition: "A delicious conception of the incongruous," but he admits it is not complete. The particular humour appreciated by different races is, he thinks, largely a matter of climate.

Mr. Zangwill says "Humour is the smile in the look of wisdom."

Mr. Pett Ridge declares that the most modern tendency in England is to laugh at our heroes of romance instead of laughing with them. A good story, he says, should have an unexpected ending. Every country has its own humour and thinks it the best. Jokes which make an American laugh till he cries leave an Englishman unmoved, and some French comic papers do not even make him smile. The English have more affinity with the Germans.

Mr. R. C. Carton, the playwright, considers that humour is to our existence what oxygen is to the air we breathe. It is the best disinfectant that science has got discovered. A sense of humour is the real philosopher's stone, turning to gold all the little worries of life, especially those of others. Mr. Carton wonders whether humour, with its first cousins, wit and irony, will have a good place in the next world. He hopes it will, for without it eternity will be terribly dull.

Mr. W. L. Courtney, like Mr. Seaman, points out the close affinity between laughter and tears. He sums up humour as the minute observation of life with its alternations of light and shade, and the power to drive away melancholy by an irony, now grave, now gay, which shows the insignificant brevity of everything that moves the human heart.

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES

From Farm and Dairy.

APPLE SALAD

Pare, quarter and core six tart apples. Cut the quarters in halves lengthwise and then slice. Wash and crisp the lettuce and arrange it in a salad bowl. Add the apple and sprinkle over it a finely chopped Spanish pepper and a cupful of chopped walnuts and almonds. Pour a French dressing over all and serve.

CHOCOLATE CREAM DROPS

Mix one-half cup of cream with two of white sugar; boil and stir full five minutes; set the dish into another of cold water, and stir until it becomes hard. Then make into small balls abut the size of marbles, and with a fork roll each one separately in the chocolate, which has, in the meantime, been put in a bowl over the boiling teakettle and melted

PINEAPPLE SPONGE

Get a whole pineapple and heat with a cup of sugar and a cup of cold water and simmer ten minutes. Soak half a box of gelatin in half a cup of cold water till well dissolved. Mix with the hot pineapple on taking that from the fire and cool; then add the whites of four eggs beaten stiff and beat all till it begins to thicken. Pour into a mold to harden. Serve with cream or soft boiled custard.

NUT BREAD

Scald one-half cup milk and add to one-half cup of boiling water. When cooled to lukewarm and three-fourths of a cake of compressed yeast, dissolved in three tablespoonfuls lukewarm water, one-half teaspoonful each lard and butter, two tablespoonfuls molasses, one cup chopped nut meats, preferably English walnuts or pecans, one-half cup white flour, three cups or a little more of entire wheat flour, and knead like ordinary bread. Bake in a moderate oven. This bread makes a delicious sandwich when cut thin and spread with currant jelly.

CHOCOLATE RICE PUDDING

Make a custard of two cups of milk, one-half cup of sugar, a generous pinch of salt, four eggs blended but not beaten too stiff, one-half teaspoon of vanilla, one and one-half cups of cooked rice, and four tablespoons of grated chocolate. Bake in a pudding dish until firm, not hard. Serve with whipped cream.

ARTIFICIAL FOG FOR WAR

The newest weapon in naval warfare may be a chemical fog spread broadcast over the water. The inventor claims he can produce fogs artificially, miles in extent. He proposed to equip battleships with the proper chemicals and apparatus, which, upon being attacked, may surround themselves with a thick blanket of mist. It is argued that this barrier would be more formidable than steel armour-plate, since the enemy could not detect the presence of the ship.

A Poor Weak Woman

As she is termed, will endure bravely and patiently agonies which a strong man would give way under. The fact is women are more patient than they ought to be under such troubles.

Every woman ought to know that she may obtain the most experienced medical advice free of charge and in absolute confidence and privacy by writing to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. Pierce has been chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y., for many years and has had a wider practical experience in the treatment of women's diseases than any other physician in this country. His medicines are world-famous for their astonishing efficacy.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

Too many and varied symptoms of women's peculiar ailments are fully set forth in Plain English in the People's Medical Adviser (1008 pages), a newly revised and up-to-date Edition of which, cloth-bound, will be mailed free on receipt of 50 one-cent stamps to pay cost of mailing only. THE FLIPPANCY OF FELICIE

(Short Story)

When Franklin Doranger, the president of a great copper mine in the Southwest, took up his residence for a year on the outskirts of the little mining town among the mountains, everyone prophesied for his daughter, Felicie, debonnaire and debutante, a flying visit and speedy return to drawing room life in the ast. No one really understood Felicie but her father, and he was not surprised when she contentedly settled down in the old, picturesque house for a year's sojourn, or as long as her father should remain.

Felicie was adaptable and found a charm in something everywhere. The wildly romantic country, the little town of crooked streets, the narrow river winding below the silent mountains were charming in their novelty, but she was completely fasciated by the mine and its workings. The white lights, the clanking engines, the flaring furnaces and the masses of red copper ore were of absorbing interest to her.

One day her father announced to her that he had engaged a new superintendent, a scholarly youg nglishman from Colorado, who would take up his abode in their house. Felicie didn't like the description. "Scholarly young nglishman" sounded very dull and prosaic to her, and she was sorry that he was to eb one of their household. "I won't let him repress me," she thought defiantly.

When Hugh Fairfax, the new superintendent, was met at the train by the president and was told that his young daughter was presiding over his hearth and home, Fairfax was secretly annoyed. Young girls of the bread-and-butter age were not to his liking, and he didn't think a mine was any place for domesticity, anyway.

Therefore he and Felicie met, secretly resenting the other's existence. She instantly read in every austere line of his handsome, rgular-featured face the opinion he had formed in regard to her, and she perversely resolved to exaggerate her usual exubrancy of manner. He, in turn, divined that she thought him stupid, and he determined to be unresponsive and unapproachable.

It was late on o Saturday night when Fairfax arrived. Sunday morning Felicie came into the breakfast room like a small whirlwind, bringing a spirit of joyousness and activity that jarred upon people who get up in the morning somewhat blase. All through the long, silent, sunshiny days, she danced about the house and the little irrigated plot they called "garden." Now a snatch of song, a flow of music, a burst of laughter that seemed to mock the passivity of the young nglishman.

"He is dull and heavy," thought Felicie. "I will wake him up," and she began to be more brisk than ever.

By evening evn her father, generally a sympathizer with her flight of spirits, was tired.

"Now, see here, Felicie," he remonstrated, "we've had enough nonsense for one day. Fairfax and I want to talk business."

"No, papa," she replied, willfully, "we're going to cut out copper on Sundays," and catching up the banjo she played wildly and distractingly.

"Never mind, Fairfax," said Doranger, "one consolation is that Felicie never stays in one mood very long."

"She is certainly very flippant," thought the young Englishman, as he strolled 'neath the stars for the last pipe before retiring, "but so beautiful, so very beautiful."

The next day Felicie was domestic and assisted the Mexican cook in the preparation of a sumptuous and palatable dinner, and on the day following that she was very quiet and subdued and sang low, sweet songs in a soft voice, while her father and Fairfax discoursed of diorite and dolerite; cuperite and azurite.

The new superintendent was bewildered by the constant change of mien and mood, ad was owning to himself that he had misjudged her, when Felicie returned suddenly to her old state of high spirits and light, nonsensical chatter. Some way it did not strike him now as flippancy, but made him conscious of being stupid and prematurely old. He tried to converse with her on general subjects, but she pretended not to fathom his meaning and answered with the simplicity and ignorance of a child.

On day this young will o' the wisp appeared at the mines and smelting works. A stockholder, profoundly ignorant of everything pertaining to mines, had just arrived and wanted to be "shown around." Everyone was very busy, and Felicie gaily volunteered her services.

"She is wll posted, Norton, and can tell you all you are to know," assured Doranger.

Thereupon Felicie intelligently began a description of the methods, workings and results, glibly touching upon "outputs," "grade of ore," and all technical terms with a knowledge that fairly amazed Fairfax. Then she took the visitor down the shaft, through the long tunnel far out under the crest of the mountain. When Norton's curiosity was satisfied and he had gone to town, Felicie came to the smelting works, where Fairfax was busy directing and working with the men. He seemed to be everywhere at once, giving instructions in one place, while his quick, roving eyes let nothing escape. Now he was at the tunnels, now at the chutes, and again at the engines. His voice rung out clear, sharp and decisive, and the lazy "greasers" were kept moving. Felicie admired action in a man and her eyes followed him appreciatively. They were both very quiet at the dinner table that night, each adjusting foregone conclusions. arly in th evening Fairfax said good night.

"I have to be up before dawn and away with a train of mules and ore across country," he told Felicie.

"Oh! And how long will you be gone?"

"Four or five days."

"I am sorry," she said, earnestly.

"Are you? Will you miss me?" he asked, eagerly. "I thought you fancied me stupid and priggish."

"I did," she said, frankly, "until to-day, when I saw you at work; but we are quits. I am sure you think me silly and frivolous."

"I only thought so that first day. I think you can be anything you want to."

She laughed carelessly.

"Papa says I am prismatic."

"I think you hide your light to me," he said, "but—when I come back, cannot we be friends?"

"Yes," she said, softly, raising her beautiful eyes to his, "we can."

All through the weary days that followed when Fairfax mad his laborious way with the teams and men, dragging the heavy loads and encountering difficulties from the sudden rains that had swollen the creeks and made impassable the roads, he was sustained by the thought of the beautiful face uplifted to his and the promised friendship. At last the ore was shipped, and the return home quickly made. He arrived at dusk, tired, drenched to the skin, but happy.

Lights streamed out in welcome from the home of the Dorangers. He crossed the porch, looked in at the open door and saw Felicie in th embrace of a slender, graceful young fellow. Unobserved, Fairfax went out again into the night and strode away in the rain—he hardly kne wwhere. He was only conscious of wating to be out of sight to hide his misery like a hurt animal. One, two, three hours he walked, facing the thought that he loved the flippant Felicie with all his might, and that she was another's.

At last he plodded wearily back to the house. The lights were still shining out from the open door, but the newcomer was talking agerly to Doranger this time.

Fairfax stepped in. Felicie glanced up and flew to meet him with outstretched hand.

"I am glad you have come home again. But you ar dripping wet! Go and change your clothes and we'll have some hot coffee for you."

"Well, Fairfax, did you make it? I shouldn't have been surprised to have heard everything had gone down stream after it began to rain. I want you to meet my son, Harry, who surprised us to-night."

Harry wondered a little at the cordial handshake and hearty greting he received from the young Englishman. "Gee! he must like me," he thought.

Later, he concluded it was his sister that the Englishman liked.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

CRUEL METHOD OF CATCHING ELEPHANTS

When we go to a menagerie or to a zoological garden, and there see the fine animals, we little think of the cruelty practiced in their capture. Perhaps none are treated more cruelly by those taking them into captivity than the elephant. This is largely due to the splendid creature's enormous size which makes it very difficult for man to take him alive or without wounding him mortally.

There are several ways of capturing the elephant, but the one here described has been the favourite way for many years, especially by the natives of the lands where the elephant lives. It is perhaps the most barbarous method in existence, and it makes our hearts ache to think of helpless creatures being put to such torture, not to speak of the frightful loss of life the system entails.

Great pits are dug in the ground,in a narrow pass used by the elephants when going to some watering place. These pits are carefully covered by a light layer of brush and grass and leaves to deceive the unsuspecting animal to be caught into. The standard native measurement for the pit is 15 feet deep, ten and a half feet long and seven and a half feet wide. You will see by these dimensions that the pit is a close fit for the full grown elephant. This is intentional for if the elephant had more room than required to accommodate his body he would move about and dig his way out with his tusks. Sometimes in the case of a small elephant, and one which has not been injured by the fall, it does succeed in digging its way from the pit. But such cases are rare indeed.

The depth of the pits being so great, it may be imagined that an immense majority of them have their legs dislocated or broken, or receive some fatal internal injury. In some cases the poor beast is killed outright by having its neck broken in the fall. To prevent such mishaps, so far as is possible, a strong pole is placed across the pit, about half way down, in such a position as to catch the falling animal's neck, and while the pole breaks beneath the heavy weight, it decreases the violence of the animal's fall. In the old days of elephant hunting, the hunters did not trouble themselves to place the poles in the pits, for there were so many elephants that even if half of those caught in the pit died, there remained enough to supply the trade. Those killed outright or dying from their injuries, were not a dead loss, for their ivory, hide and bones were sold to good advantage.

The only pace of the elephant is a walk or a sort of shuffle, and when making his greatest speed, the animal cannot cover more than fifteen miles in hour, and he cannot go at this pace more than a few minutes at a time. It can neither trot, canter, nor gallop. It does not move with the legs on the same side together, but nearly so. A good runner can easily keep out of an elephant's way on a smooth piece of turf, but on the ground where they are usually met, any attempt at flight, except by concealment, would be unavailing.

The idea that elephants have decreased of late years in India has given rise to orders being issued by the Local Governments for their protection. This has also been done in Ceylon, where there is no doubt of the marked decrease in the number of elephants.

On measuring an elephant, it has been found that twice around his foot will, with rare exceptions, measure his height. This would seem to be impossible, for the foot looks small when compared with the creature's height. But it is a rare instance to find an elephant whose height goes more than two or three inches over the double measurement of the foot.

The African elephants are greater in size and height than those of Asia. They usually measure a foot or fourteen inches taller than the Asiatic elephants, and are not so easily taken into captivity.

One of the most remarkable facts in connection with elephants is the extreme rarity of any remains of dead ones being found in the jungles. This circumstance is so marked as to give rise to the notion amongst the natives that elephants never die. In the wanderings of a hunter and naturalist through the elephant jungles of India he declares that not one carcass was ever seen by him. One dead elephant was seen in a basin of water having been carried down by a mountain torrent during a heavy freshet. Another elephant was found dead from wounds. But no carcasses, nor bones indicating the death of animals from old age or natural causes, were ever found, although he made careful search for such proofs of the mortality. Bones of other wild animals were often found, and whole carcasses.

It may be possible in the thick forests vultures do not attract attention to the dead animals and devour the flesh quickly, leaving the carcass to be disposed of by the monsoon rains and jungle fires. Still, one would think that some of the bones and an occasional carcass would be found by the explorer and hunter whereas they never are. Of course, the elephants die, but there has been no reasonable explanation of what becomes of their remains.

The Height of Politeness.—The politest intimation ever addressed was probably that of the governor of the Bombay Gool to a man about to be hanged. The execution was fixed for 1 p.m., and the governor was to sail for England on leave two hours later. But the time for the boat's sailing was changed from 3 p.m. to midday. The governor was equal to the occasion. He addressed an official communication to the convict as follows: "The governor presents his compliments to Mr. X., and desires to know whether it would suit his convenience equally well to be hanged at 10 a.m., instead of at 1 p.m.?"

PLATINUM TO REPLACE GOLD FOR RINGS

Platinum will soon take the place of gold rings. Gold costs $23 per ounce and platinum cannot be bought for less than $45 an ounce. When the latter metal is properly alloyed with iridium, which is somewhat costly, an ounce of platinum is worth about $52. This iridium is the hardest metal known and the rings and jewelry made of this iridium-platinum will last for centuries.

Platinum has a sort of all dead look that does not commend itself to most people. A silver chain can be distinguished from one of platinum nearly a block away. No matter what happens that dead-white of platinum never changes. It never tarnishes and it is never polished.

It is tougher and more wearing than any other known metal. This quality makes it especially valuable in settings for valuable stones. There is but little danger of a tough platinum setting giving way and allowing a big diamond to roll out and become lost. The same heat that will melt a lump of gold has no more effect upon platinum than if you were blowing your breath upon it. You have to have a specially constructed blowpipe in order to melt it down to liquid form. As a diamond setting it has no equal. An ordinary yellow stone full of cracks and flaws, if set in a perfect platinum setting, will loom up like a perfect diamond. Gold being yellow naturally throws yellow tints all through the centre of a diamond set in it. But such is not the case with platinum. It is white and all the lights that it reflects are silvery.

Diamonds look larger when set in platinum. It does not contrast the appearance of the stones as does gold. It makes them look bigger and better and in every way improves their appearance.

Old Senor Ulloa was the first man to discover the metal now known as platinum. He was wandering around in what is now known as Colombia, and in the valley of Pinto river he came across what he took to be a gold sand. This was back in 1735. He named it "like silver" and the name still sticks in spite of the radical disparity in the value of the two metals. The old dons and grandees who were overrunning that part of the world in those days did not care much for the metal. They wanted gold and so they paid little attention to the platinum deposits. It had no value in those days.

Now if it were possible to find a great range of platinum deposits we would have a bigger stampede than Cripple Creek, Quray and the Dawson City rushes, all combined. Potash deposits are worth millions, but a great deposit of platinum would be worth so many millions that it would make an adding machine dizzy to compute them. It is found only in the Ural mountains, here and there in the Andes, and there are a few scattered tons of it in Borneo.

Most people when they want to compare a thing to something that is heavy naturally think of lead. Lead is heavy—a little over 11 times heavier than water, in fact, and gold is still heavier. Its specific gravity is 19.26, but that of platinum is 21.5, heavier than any common or uncommon metal outside of a few freak compounds that are found in laboratories of mineralogists.

TIT-BITS

Death to Emotion.—Many people to-day are trying to be ashamed of their emotions. They are not really ashamed of them; they are awfully proud of them; but it is the swagger thing in a certain set to pretend that you have no emotions. Intellect is to be all—emotions nowhere. What are the emotions? Well, you have pity, sorrow, indignation, anger, admiration, joy, triumph. Here are a few offhand. What would this business of life be if you never felt pitiful, sorry, indignant, or angry? If you never chuckled in triumph or laughed for joy? Think of it! How dull! And the people with the thickest brains, the most alive sensibilities, must always be the most emotional. They cannot help it. They may sneer at tears, but they are always fighting to keep them back. They may try to look as grave as owls, but they will laugh like children when the right thing is said to them at the right time, or the right thing done in the right way.

A Favourite Saying.—"Patience and Perseverance will accomplish all things," was a favourite saying of an old miller. He had just given utterance to this remark one day when a youth employed by neighbouring tradesmen, who was waiting for some flour, turned to him, and said: "No, sir; I can tell you a great many things patience and perseverance cannot accomplish." "Perhaps you can," said," the miller quietly, "but I have never yet come across the thing. Will you name one?" "Will patience and perseverance ever enable you to carry water in a sieve?" eagerly inquired the youth, feeling certinly that he had caught the other. "Certainly they will." "I would like you to tell me how it is to be accomplished." "Simply by waiting patiently for the water to freeze."

When Scotland had a Navy.—It was James IV., who first created an effective navy for Scotland, exhausting all available timber for ship building, so that he had to ask France and Denmark for more, and of the 16 large and 10 small ships he owned, his special pride was the largest then existing. To build this Dreadnought of her day all the woods of Fife were laid waste. She cost 30,000 pounds, an enormous value in those times, had a crew of 300 sailors, 120 gunners and 1,000 marines, with "more great ordnance in her than the French king ever had to the siege of any towns," as James himself boasted.—Westminster Gazette.

Sunday Morning Visit to St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church

(By Roy Gilray.)

ferent churches, to see if they were failing in their mission, and incidentally to introduce some remarks from observation, and some criticisms from comparison, that might be helpful to those that are lagging behind in the great onward march of Christianity in solving the problems of the world. Christianity holds up a great ideal which makes its followers forever dissatisfied with anything that comes short. Therefore, if any feeble comments of ours are instrumental in causing churches to compare notes and profit by the experience of others, we will feel that the time and energy have been well spent.

Is the church losing its grip? Mr. Rollins answered, in no uncertain terms, in the negative. He claims the churches of to-day are living churches trying to express in modern terms the purpose of God. The church of to-day is remarkable for its zealous spirit, its free use of good common sense and intelligence, and for the loyalty and devotion of its members. He cited the churches in the south end of the city: All Saints, Knox, St. James, and Park street Baptist, all living churches, officered and manned by working men. In London ten out of thirty-five were officered and manned by the same splendid class of people, Toronto, Montreal, and other large, congested cities presented special circumstances peculiar to themselves, which required special treatment. The last general assembly of the Presbyterian church set apart a minister to study these conditions in the large cities, $35,000 being appropriated for the work. As a result, the church, the press and the country at large, will get information that never was available before, which, no doubt, will spread the impression that the old world is getting worse, but this is a mistake; the conditions existed before we are simply finding them out.

In conclusion Mr. Rollins pointed out that a church's best work was done when its members catch the contagion of Christ's spirit and His purposes, and carry them out in their daily lives.

The ordination service that followed was most impressive. Six new elders being set apart for their important work. The last verse of the ordination hymn very appropriately summed up their duty:

O use me, Lord, use even me
Just as Thou wilt, and when, and where,
Until Thy blessed face I see,
Thy rest, Thy joy, Thy glory share.

One thing that touched me deeply as I looked upon these new elders, was a picture of memory that came before my mind, where one of these men, almost a year ago, was prostrated with grief at the loss of his only child. I realized this was but one more link binding him closer to the home beyond, where his dear one awaits his coming, my heart echoed, "Thy Will be Done."

UNUSUAL CASE

A baby girl, three days old, with heart partially exposed to the outside air, is the unusual case of infant deformity which for two days has been causing no little interest at the Hospital for Sick Children. Two days ago, the parents, who are Ontario people, sent their little charge to the hospital for treatment. On examination it was discovered that the child was suffering from the unusual, but not unprecedented, ailment known as "ectopia cordia."

Briefly the condition is as follows: Instead of having a chest wall formed as in the normal infant, in this instance a part of the normal chest wall has never been found, and a cavity has been left opening into the thorax. Through this cavity a large thin-walled sac, which contains most of the heart, has protruded. In this way about three-quarters of the organ is revealed to the naked eye outside the body. It has slipped from its normal position downward and forward about two inches and a half, with the foregoing result.

The physicians say that it is hardly possible to force the organ back into its place; but suggest that an operation might be performed by removing skin from the sides of the body and by this means covering the exposed parts. A second method would be to cover the protruding parts with a leather pad after the fashion of a shinpad used in hockey or football. The present danger, of course, is that a sudden blow might strike the heart, and cause it to cease beating. There is also the added danger of cold, for the sensitive membrane is deprived of the usual natural covering, and must rely on the less trustworthy artificial means.

Since its arrival at the hospital the child has done as well as any normal child, and the chances for its life are said to be about even. Its heart beats are the normal per minute, 100, and its feeding is also satisfactory. Should the infant continue to develop in the usual way, the necessary operation will be performed when it has grown strong enough to withstand the anesthetic.

Although the case is most unusual, and is the first of its kind to be witnessed by many of the younger medical men in the hospital, it is by no means unprecedented. Yesterday afternoon the child was removed to the Medical Building of the University of Toronto, where two of the professors made a lineal record of its heart beats. A glass ball was placed over the organ to which was attached a rubber tube and a lever. The lever was acted upon by the vibrations of the heart, and in turn traced minutely the record on a revolving drum over which smoked paper had been drawn. The force of the heart beats can also be easily determined by the ordinary observer, as the organ is so exposed as to be liable to a pressure of the hand. The surgings of the red blood through the heart can also be seen by the naked eye.

GRANTING OF CERTIFICATES

From Farm and Dairy.

Gen. A. Putnam, Supt. of Dairying for Ontario

During the session of the Provincial Legislature for 1910, legislation was passed providing for the granting of certificates to cheese and butter-makers in the Province of Ontario. In accordance with the provisions of this Act, the Advisory Board called for applications for certificates and upon receipt of these the qualifications of the applicants were thoroughly looked into and certificates granted accordingly.

While the great majority of experienced makers were given permanent certificates, 473 "one year" certificates were granted to cheese-makers and 45 "one year" certificates to butter-makers. These "one year" certificates, of course, included a number of men who had not up to the time of granting certificates taken full charge of the manufacture of cheese or butter, but had, in the opinion of the Advisory Board, sufficient experience as first assistants to warrant the Board in granting them a permit or "one year" certificate.

Where an honest effort has been made on the part of the recipients of these one year certificates to take advantage of the instruction afforded by representatives of the Department, and have shown that they are capable makers, either a permanent or "one year" certificate will be furnished as soon as the old certificate has been returned to the Department. All makers concerned will be communicated with regarding the renewal of certificates early in December. It will be in the interests of all such to make plans to attend one of our Provincial Dairy Schools.

Dairy School graduates who were given permission by the superintendent of the dairy school from which they graduated, to take charge of a factory or creamery during the past season, and have made good, will be given permanent certificates from the dairy school concerned before the season of 1912 opens.

While the Department was necessarily quite lenient in the granting of certificates at the beginning of the system, it will be the policy to draw the lines a little closer as conditions warrant. It is fully expected that the benefits which resulted from the granting of certificates will be more marked as the years advance.

Will Make Hair Grow

Every up-to-date woman, should have radiant hair.

There are thousands of women with harsh, faded, characterless hair, who do not try to improve it.

[illegible]gland and Paris women take p[illegible] having beautiful hair. Every Canadian woman can have lustrous and luxuriant hair by using SALVIA, the Great American Sage Hair Tonic. McDermid and Jury sells a large bottle for 50c., and guarantees it to banish Dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in ten days, or money back. Also sold at Paynes' Drug Store.

Heard Farther.—The roar of the lion can be heard farther than the voice of any other living creature. Next comes the cry of the hyena, and the hoot of the owl. After these come the panther and the jackal. The donkey can be heard fifty times farther than the horse, and the cat ten times as far as the dog. Strange as it may seem the cry of the hare can be heard farther than that of either the cat or the dog.

Kenora Business Men Voice Discontent With Treatment.

Kenora, Ont., Dec. 20.—The business men of this section favor cutting off all the Ontario country west of Fort William and adding it to Manitoba. The culmination of a long agitation resulted Monday night in the following resolution by the local Board of Trade:

"Resolved, that it is the opinion of this Board of Trade that the welfare of this district would be best advanced by joining the Province of Manitoba, and that copies of this resolution be sent to the Premier of Canada, the Premier of Manitoba, the Premier of Ontario and the Boards of Trade for Fort Frances, Fort William, Port Arthur and Dryden."

The resolution was passed at a largely attended meeting called specially to consider the question of the electoral division of Kenora casting in her lot with Manitoba. A committee consisting of Messrs. Pope, Horn and Earngey were appointed to draw a memorial.

While many speakers spoke in favor of the move, they did not think there would be any likelihood of Kenora joining Manitoba. Still they thought it would have the effect of waking up the Provincial Government to the fact that the people were much dissatisfied with the treatment which has been accorded them, not only by the present Government, but by previous Governments. There were many speakers, and with one exception, all were in favor of a change.

Looted Jewelry Store.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 20.—Thieves early yesterday entered the store of Harry Laws, Welland, and nearly fifty watches and many rings were taken. They practically cleaned out the store, leaving no clue to their identity. The border is being guarded to prevent the escape of the thieves to the States.

Local authorities will ask the Government to investigate the methods pursued by contractors in bringing foreign laborers into Canada.

The request results from a number of foreigners picked up by the local police during the week, who told of having been paid paltry sums for several months' work after the contractors deducted transportation charges from the wages.

Child Fatally Scalded.

Hamilton, Dec. 20.—Wilbur Lloyd, the three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Billington, 391 Main street west, died last night as the result of being fatally scalded yesterday morning, when he accidentally fell into a tubful of boiling water, which was being prepared for the family washing.

Big Real Estate Deal.

Toronto, Dec. 20.—The biggest single real estate deal ever put through in Canada was closed yesterday at 6 p.m., the Dominion Bond Co. buying the Manufacturers' Life building, at the northwest corner of King and Yonge streets for $800,000.

The deal has many other outstanding features. The price per foot, including the structure, on the King street frontage, is over thirteen thousand dollars. This is the highest price paid for property in Canada, exceeding any Montreal sale.

Teachers Are Defiant.

Kingston, Dec. 20.—Teachers in the public schools are up in arms because the Board of Education has decided to adopt the bonus system instead of a fixed salary increase. They have written the board, stating they will not accept the plan and asking that the question be reconsidered. If the board decides to press the scheme many resignations will follow at the end of the year.

Bernard McColl, aged 22, of Camden East, left on Nov. 27, with a rifle to spend a few hours shooting in the bush and has not since been seen. He is a chemist employed in Rochester, but he has been visiting at his home.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church will likely extend a call to Rev. S. J. Compton, Bellymony, Ireland, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Dr. Mackie.

John Bigelow Dead.

New York, Dec. 20.—John Bigelow, the venerable diplomat and author, died at his home here yesterday morning from general breakdown due to old age.

Although in the 95th year of his age, Mr. Bigelow had displayed almost to the time of his death, amazing vitality and mental keenness. He had kept thoroughly abreast of current events and recently taken part in many public functions.

He leaves four children: Major John Bigelow, jr., U.S.A.; Poultney Bigelow, the journalist and author; Miss Grace Bigelow, and Mrs. Butler K Harding, Mrs. Lionel Guest and Mrs. C. B. Tracey.

John Bigelow, author, statesman, journalist, lawyer and diplomat was born in Malden, N.Y., on Nov. 25, 1817. His long life was of action.

A conspicuous figure in the anti-slavery contest, a convincing journalist, minister to France throughout the troublous times of the Civil War, his career was always one of service to his country and the world in general.

Flying Post Must Go.

Ottawa, Dec. 20.—Exit the "Flying Post." The manner of its going is decreed in an announcement issued last night by the Postoffice Department:

It points out that last May the late Government entered into a contract with the G.T.R. for a special train to leave Toronto at 2.55 in the morning and reach London at 6.30 a.m. This was an entirely new departure in the railway mail service and costs the country some $40,000 a year.

The new Postmaster-General says he has looked into this matter very carefully and has come to the conclusion that this cannot be continued, and if certain newspapers desire to have special delivery they must do so at their own expense.

Claims $10,000 Back Taxes.

North Bay, Dec. 20.—The town of Sturgeon Falls is suing the Imperial Land Co., Limited, of that town for back taxes amounting to nearly $10,000. The company contests the claims, alleging that the law was not complied with in reference to the assessment and collection, and that consequently no taxes are due, and that the municipality lost the priority of its lien to the bondholders by accepting promissory notes for taxes, and asking judgment on the same.

Right to Slap Passenger.

Galt, Ont., Dec. 20.—Magistrate Blake yesterday ruled that a conductor on a G., P. & H. train was justified in slapping a passenger's face when the passenger used profane language, and although warned, continued, and the conductor punched him in the face. The complainant was a local man, while the conductor was a Preston man.

A Royal Picnic.

Apropos of the royal visit to Scotland, a good story is told of the Queen's stay at Balmoral. One day the royal party, consisting of the Queen, the Princess Mary, the Marquess de Soveral, Lord Rosebery, and several others, motored to Stonehaven. Putting up the motors at an hotel, without any attendants they carried their lunch-basket down to the beach, and people passing remarked that it was the jolliest picnic party they had seen for many a year.

Later on they motored out to Dunnotter Castle, and, on leaving, the old caretaker requested them to sign the visitors' book.

The Queen took the pen and signed "Mary."

The Princess also signed "Mary."

Seeing this, the caretaker said: "It is usual for visitors to sign their full name—there are hundreds of Marys in the country."

Then Lord Rosebery turned and said: "But you must know you have the Queen with you to-day!"

At first the old man was sceptical, thinking it was a party of wags that he had to deal with; but at last he was convinced, and nearly fell through the floor!

In the evening he hastened to Stonehaven and told the townfolk. Then everyone remembered the jolly picnic party, and, annoyed that they had not recognized it, they watched all evening for its return. To the disappointment of the good folks of Stonehaven, however, another way was chosen for the return journey.

Anyone can verify this story by turning up the visitors' book in Dunnotter Castle.

The Odor of Rainbows.

Everybody has heard about the pot of gold buried at the end of the rainbow, but there is another old belief connected with the rainbow that is not so familiar nowadays. The attention of meteorologists was called to it a few years ago by Mr. Richard Bentley, of the Royal Meteorological Society.

It appears that over half a century ago a controversy took place in the English newspapers as to whether the rainbow admitted an odor. A belief in such an emanation existed in antiquity, and has been echoed by several modern poets. Thus it is mentioned in Pliny, Aristotle, and a Greek writer referred to by Coleridge, in his "Table Talk," in the "Peripathetic Philosophy" of Georgius de Rhodes; in Bacon's "Sylvia"; in Browne's "Britannia's Pastorals," and more lately in a poem by Robert Snow.

The origin of this curious belief is explained by Mr. Bentley as follows: Everyone is familiar with the increase of scent given off by plants and shrubs on a warm evening after the air has been newly washed by rain. This would naturally often coincide with the appearance of a rainbow.

SHORTAGE IN THE POTATO CROP IS ANTICIPATED

Dealers Interviewed by the Examiner To-day Say That There Will Be No Chance of a Reduction in Price.

THE LOCAL SITUATION

Several carloads of potatoes have arrived in the city during the last few days, and are being rapidly disposed of among the local dealers. These imports of potatoes are principally from New Brunswick and other Eastern points.

While Peterborough's appetite for potatoes is not large, amounting to about 333 bags per day, it is of sufficient magnitude to cause uneasiness in view of the world shortage in the potato crop. Potatoes are certainly attracting, due to the prevailing high price, more than their usual share of public attention. A Canadian press despatch from New York, referring to the situation, states as follows:

Importations of potatoes from abroad are beginning to arrive in this port, the main bulk of them coming from Ireland. Up to date this fall about 25,000 sacks have arrived.

Wholesalers quote Maine potatoes in the market here at $3 a sack, and say this price is just about double the price of a year ago.

Since early fall the price had risen steadily and $4 a sack is expected by February.

Not only is there a scarcity of potatoes in this country, but from practically all the potato producing countries of the world reports show slack crops.

Several local merchants, when interviewed by the Examiner this morning, in regard to the situation, were unanimous in their opinion that the present high price of potatoes would prevail throughout the winter and spring. It is probable that many of the growers, knowing this, are holding back supplies until they get a higher price.

To-day's retail price for potatoes, was $1.50. Estimating that Peterborough takes 333 bags, or, 14 tons, 970 lbs. a day, to supply its needs, this represents a value of $499.50 from the consumers' or retailers' standpoint; a very respectable sum, indeed, for the Electric City.

Considerable difficulty is also experienced in shipping potatoes at this season of the year, many of the growers preferring to hold shipments over, rather than take the risk of having them frozen. However, it is the general opinion of local authorities on the matter, that little difficulty will be met with in securing sufficient supplies to meet the local demands at the present price of $1.50 per bag.

CHANGES IN TARIFF ARE RECOMMENDED

Special Wire to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, D.C., DEC. 20 — With a favourable recommendation, Taft to-day sent to congress the report of the Tariff Board recommending that the rates on wool and woollens from Canada and other countries be reduced.

MR. CANN TO BE CANDIDATE

Will Run for the Smith Council at the Coming Elections

Mr. Fred Cann, who resides on the old Stevenson farm of the second line of Smith, and who is one of Smith's most prominent farmers, has announced his intention of being a candidate as councillor for the township of Smith.

IS GRANTED SEPARATION

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, DEC. 20.—Madame Langevin was to-day granted a separation in a famous case against her husband, who is a prominent scientist, Professor Langevin. She named Madame Curie, the discoverer of radium, as correspondent. Several duels have been fought over this case.

WILL YOU HELP THOSE CHILDREN?

The Examiner has received a number of parcels from local citizens for the children at the Children's Aid Society Shelter, which will help to make Christmas brighter for these little people. There is room for more. Will you help? Mr. Cochrane has asked the Examiner to acknowledge the receipt of $1 for this fund from Mr. E. G. Wanless. The children will be entertained at the Park street Baptist church on Friday night of this week and will have a Christmas tree at the Shelter on Christmas Day.

STORES TO KEEP OPEN

Will Give People a Chance to Do Some Shopping at Night—Do it Early Please

BETTER DO IT NOW

The Christmas rush is on in earnest now with the last awful week in full swing. The local stores will be open to-night and also on Thursday, Friday and Saturday night. It is hoped that those who are not able to shop in the daytime will see to it that they take advantage of the stores being open for four nights and make their ppurchases as early in the week as possible. Don't leave everything until Saturday. You will get better service to-night and have a better selection as well.

RICHESON IN HOSPITAL

Special Wire to The Examiner.

BOSTON, MASS., DEC. 20.— Rev. Clarence Richeson, accused of murder in the poisoning of Avis Linnel, former sweetheart, attempted to kill himself with a piece of tin this morning and was removed to an hospital, where his condition is reported serious.

It is asserted by some that Richeson intended to commit suicide by bleeding to death, but he found his method too painful and called for assistance. It seems that lately the Edmands family, to whose daughter he was engaged, and from whose home he was arrested, had dropped him completely, and he was practically friendless. The trial for murder will go on on January 15th.

PRESENTATION

Reading Lamp Given to Mr. D. Kennedy by His Sunday School Class

Mr. Dawson Kennedy, 600 Water street, was presented with an electric reading lamp by the members of his Sunday school class at a banquet and social evening held by the class in the school room last night.

A sumptuous repast was served by the ladies, after which addresses were given by Mr. Kennedy, who presided, Rev. I. Couch, Mr. D. W. Dumble, Mr. W. C. Switzer and Mr. S. R. Armstrong.

A recitation was given by Mr. R. J. Winch which was greatly appreciated. After Mrs. Renwick had delighted the audience with a vocal solo, the presentation to Mr. Kennedy was made. An address was read by Mr. B. F. Ackerman, to which Mr. Kennedy made a suitable reply, in which he thanked the class for the kindness they had shown him and expressed his appreciation of the beautiful present.

The evening was a most enjoyable one, and the whole event a delightful success.

LAY DOWN BY RIVER

Special to The Examiner.

WINDSOR, ONT., DEC. 20—While intoxicated, last night, John Cross, a foreman on the Construction Works, at Walkerville, lay down beside the river, and was found dying, this morning, from galloping pneumonia. He leaves a widow and child.

Above is an excellent photograph of the splendid local Salvaton Army Temple Band taken recently by the Roy Studio. A glance over the picture will show how well the band is provided for in the matter of members, instrumentation and uniforms and the efficiency of the organization is too well known to the citizens to need any comment here. The present most creditable condition is due not only to the earnest efforts of the indivdual members and incessant work on the part of Bandmaster Wm. Peryer and his predecessors, but also to the financial help that the band has received from the citizens of Peterborough in past years. This preamble leads up to the announcement that the band will commence its annual holiday serenade on Saturday night of this week, when they will play on George street. Christmas day will be a field day for the members of the organization, who will also continue the serenade every night next week until New Years, if the weather is at all favourable. No doubt the bandsmen will be well received as usual, and that the funds will be placed in a flourishing condtion as a result of the serenade. Peterborough people are proud of the splendid Temple Band, and will no doubt welcome this opportunity of effectively assisting the organization, which has proved itself in every way worthy of help.

GENERAL DROP IN CHRISTMAS PRICES IS PROPHESIED FOR PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Throughout Province it is Said Farmers Have Been Unable to Get to Market for Some Weeks on Account of the Bad Roads and Now There is an Over-supply, Which Will Cause Descent in the Figures.

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, DEC. 20.—Contrary to all traditions the prices of provisions at the various market towns and cities in Ontario seem to have taken a flop for Christmas. There seems to be a little scarcity of turkeys, for instance, which are selling at from 16 to 18 cents per pound from farmers' waggons. Butter, of fair quality, is selling at 28 cents; eggs, fresh laid at 40 cents; potatoes at $1.25. The explanation is that owing to bad roads many farmers were unable to get in for weeks, and now there is an over supply.

EAST PETERBORO' POPULATION DECREASES WEST RIDING HAS GAINED IN DECADE

Second Census Bulletin Issued at Ottawa Gives Some Interesting Information.

THE LOCAL FIGURES

The second of the census bulletins giving the population of the Dominion by sexes and by electoral constituencies, was issued yesterday. In East Peterborough the figures show that there are 8028 males and 7470 females, making a total population of 15,498 as against 16,291 in 1901 — a decrease of 793. West Peterborough shows 12,936 males and 13,220 females, a total population of 26,156, as against 20,704 in 1901—an increase of 5,452.

WHAT ABOUT THAT BOY?

To be or not to be, that is the question; whether it would be more profitable to have your boy learn to swim, or deprive him of the opportunity, and perchance drag him from a watery grave next summer; whether would it be more sensible to expand his chest, or permit him to grow up round shouldered and sickly, a victim of the dread white plague, to be taken off many years before his time; whether would it be better to have his body well developed, or allow him to grow up a puny fellow, a prey to disease, doctors and death; whether would it pay to be particular where he spends his evenings, or take no thought thereto, and have to bury your face in shame for some of his thoughtless pranks; whether would it be wiser to give him an outing up the lakes next summer under careful supervision, or allow him to swelter in the city's dusty streets and gain no strength for the next year's school; whether would it be wisdom to develop his mental, moral and spiritual nature, or suffer him to grow up a namby-pamby, spineless youth to be tossed about by every wind that blows.

A season's ticket for the "Y" will aid you greatly in the development of your boy along the right lines. If you deprive him of t don't cast the blame on him in after years if he is a disappontbent.

It is up to you to do your duty by that boy NOW.

If you have no boy of your own, possibly you would like to help some other boy who cannot afford a ticket.

Call up the Boys' Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. They have a special Christmas Gift Ticket, beautifully embossed with holly in two colours.

It would be an ideal Christmas gift.

—Roy Gilray.

SIDEWALKS SLIPPERY

The slippery streets are again claiming victims. They are ice coated in many places, and several people have got very hard falls. An aged gentleman was walking down George street this morning and sliped on one of these icy places, sustaining a sprained ankle and other minor injuries.

Mysterious Disappearance Of Fenelon Falls Young Man Has Created A Sensation

FENELON FALLS, DEC. 20.—The disappearance of John Taggart, a young man, aged about 30 years, a resident of Falls, is attracting a good deal of attention. Three weeks ago the missing young man left the Philips' camp, near Burnt River with Mr. Phillips' horse and rig to go to Coboconk for the mail. On his way he was joined by a young Englishman, who also worked at the camp, and another young man. The three proceeded to Coboconk. On their way home they disagreed as to their destination, Taggart being determined to come to the Falls, leaving the rig to walk to the Village by way of the railway track. The others drove on to Burnt River, leaving their companion on the road which is said to be the last seen of him. To reach Fenelon Falls by way of the track h would have to cross a railway bridge which is not provided with a railing. The general supposition is that the unfortunate man stumbled and fell off the side of the bridge into the river, as the timbers are only a few inches apart, making it impossible for anyone to fall through.

A search party drove to Burnt River on Sunday morning, having sent their canoes up on Saturday night, and paddled down the river, carefully searching the whole distance for some trace of the missing man. The members of the search party were Messrs. A. J. Gould, Geo. A. Calder, F. A. Metcalfe, F. Keast and Thos. Lodge.

No clue whatever was found by the party, and rumours of various kinds are rife as to the cause of the young man's disappearance, some hinting at a suspicion of foul play. It was thought until recently that he had walked to a neighbouring camp or to some place in the vicinity, therefore it was not thought necessary to take any decisive action until Friday last.

A preliminary investigation was held on Monday before His Honour Judge Harding of Lindsay. One of the most important witnesses being absent it was found necessary to postpone it until a later date.

BARTENDER FINED $25 FOR SELLING LIQUOR TO MINOR

Magistrate Held That Charge That a Nineteen-Year-Old Boy Had Been Given Liquor Was Proven

THE FINE WAS PAID

At the Police Court this morning, matters were somewhat quiet. One drunk appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning, who allowed the offender to go, after reading him a lesson to the effect that he should lead a better life, promising that if he came before him again he would not be so lenient with him. The delinquent promised that he would not be found there again.

The case that was adjourned yesterday, in which a bartender of one of our leading hotels was charged with selling liquor to a minor, came up. The mother of the young man gave evidence, proving that the boy was nineteen years of age. The Magistrate held that the case was proven, and the bartender was fined $25 00.

There is a strong feeling in Police Court circles that the hotels are not carrying out the law as carefully as they should. It is contended that any young man who wants liquor can obtain it. It is claimed that the bartenders pay no attention to the age limit. The Police Magistrate says that the law must be carried out, and that bartenders will be severely fined, when a conviction is obtained for violation of this particular clause of the Liquor License Act. The fine was paid and court adjourned.

INJURING SHADE TREES

Farmers residing in the neighbourhood of Peterborough have been making strenuous complaints to the local authorities that some residents of the city are allowing their Christmas seal to run away from them to such an extent that they have been injuring shade trees on private property in order to secure Christmas trees. On Sunday last it is said that fifty men and boys were engaged in the work, and they even attacked shade trees in front of residences. There will be trouble for the offenders in future, and guilty parties are asked to take this warning as final.

CANADIAN CLUB DINNER

Dr. Peterson, Head of McGill University, Will Address Members on "Our English Speech"

TREAT ANTICIPATED

The meeting of the Canadian Club of Peterborough, to be held in the Oriental Hotel, to-morrow night, at 8 o'clock, promises to be of unusual interest. The feature will be an address by Dr. W. Peterson, C.M.G., Principal of McGill University, on "Our English Speech". Dr. Peterson has a reputation as an orator of great ability and the first visit to Peterborough of the head of McGill, one of Canada's foremost educational institutions, should result in a large attendance.

Dr. Peterson will arrive in the city on the 4.28 (C.P.R.) train to-morrow evening, and the dinner will commence sharp at 8 o'clock.

NEW KIND OF TEST FOR NETEMERE

Special to The Examiner.

DUBLIN, IRELAND, DEC. 20.—The Ne Temere decree which declares that marriage must be performed before two witnesses is receiving a new kind of test here, where a wealthy farmer is seeking to annul his secret midnight marriage to a servant girl by the parish priest, on the ground that there was only one witness. All parties are Catholics. The case is exciting much interest here.

A PATRIOT IN OFFICE.

Hon. Col. Sam Hughes is a gentleman and a patriot, a member of a cabinet whose patriotism is not above reproach. He has instituted a patriotic innovation in the matter of the supply of militia clothing. He proposes having the habilimentary harness of the Canadian militia manufactured in Canada, so as to have it "uniform" in quality as well as cut. If Hon. Sam will permit the liberty we pat him on the back. He has the courage of his convictons. He is a Canadian in character as well as name. He was a patriotic friend of the Ross rifle, for two reasons—because it was made in Canada, and because it was the best military arm made. Now, as minister, he is consistent. When he has the power he applies the made-in-Canada principle. He takes a patriotic attitude towards the militia, and has evidently not waited for Mr. Bourassa's permission to be loyal and patriotic. He will add new laurels if he will succeed in persuading his titular leader, Hon. Mr. Borden, to take the loyal and patriotic stand towards a Canadian navy.

THE HOME MARKET.

It appears that the Christmas Globe editor is disheartened over the lack of Canadian humour, as demonstrated by his failure to receive a humorous Canadian drawing worthy of the hundred-dollar prize ordered. This is rather, perhaps a subject for congratulation than of regret. If we are to classify humorous drawings according to the standard of the inane absurd, frothy monstrosities that find place in United States newspapers, under such a title, we may well hug ourselves over the fact that Canada lacks artists—or idiots—capable of similar crimes against art, decency, and reason; that can only be called humour on the lucus a non lucendo principle the old Latins applied to grove nomenclature. We find the Globe and lesser journalistic lights filling their "humorous" corners with quotations from the columns of the alleged humour of United States journals—for the most part, the most grotesquely inane drivel—whose most conspicuous quality is its defiance of the resources of the English language of derision and denunciation to fittingly characterize. No extravagant praise is implied in the suggestion that if a Canadian newspaper would make its humorous selections from, for instance, the columns of the Toronto Star, or Toronto News, or other Canadian newspapers, it would find much that in point of pith, pungency and humorous conceit and expression, would be leagues ahead of the drivel that does duty for humour and wit in the columns of over-line contemporaries. The home market for humour is the best source of supply, even if it is not overstocked. Even in the way of bad jokes we should in patriotism, favour the made-in-Canada article.

PEACE AT LAST.

During the last two years of Mr. Borden's leadership of the Opposition, there was a standing quarrel between him and Mr. Monk, the apple of discord being the navy and Canada's cooperation with Great Britain, in imperial defence. But, when the elections were held, and Ontario, by a majority of about seventy, gave Mr. Borden a mandate to drop the navy idea altogether, and to fall into the arms of the Nationalists, he—fell in with the anti British and anti-naval views of Mr. Monk, Bourassa, et al, and now all is harmony and peace—between Mr. Monk and what he represents, and Mr. Borden—and what he does not represent, the truly "loil" electors of Ontario. But anyway, it's all in the family—the Conservative family. The Conservative party is in power, and it is in a position to give office to its supporters—not to all of them, however, unless they consent to sleep, two or three in a bed; and, at the rate things are going, the Nationalists will get the most of the plums. Mr. Monk has made a splendid start; he has chopped off about two hundred Liberal heads, and put a like number of good Nationalists in their stead. If it not to be supposed that he will give many places to the loyal Conservatives; it is natural that he should provide for his "Nationalist" friends, and the British born and flag wavers must wait and take what is left—eat in the kitchen.

NOT A DEAD ISSUE.

The Conservatives of all shades and stations are rather cheerful over the belief they assert that reciprocity is a dead issue and that it will not further complicate the political situation or embarrass the Bourassa-Borden government. But, like Banquo's ghost, it will not down, and its echoes still penetrate the chamber of the chief minister. The circumstance that Saturday last was the anniversary of tthe big farmers' delegation from all over Canada which invaded the House of Commons on that now historic day, was emphasized when the Premier's secretary opened his mail on Monday morning. From all parts of Canada came letters from men who were in Ottawa last winter, repeating their demands for consideration of their bill of rights as presented on December 16 last, and asking what the Premier intended to do about it. Incidentally, it is said, that some of the same men have written to Sir Wilfrid Laurier congratulating him upon the stand which he took in their interests, and assuring him that reciprocity, or the sentiment which led up to it, was by no means dead. Mr, Borden, at the instance of the Nationalist wing of his supporters, may side-track or beach the naval question, but reciprocity, freedom of trade, is one that has a personal relation—one that affects the pockets, the prosperity, the homes of thousands and tens of thousands of farmers and others also. This makes it an immanent issue that cannot be sacrificed on the altar of political opportunism.

MAYOR MORROW'S FIVE YEARS.

His Worship Mayor Morrow, on Monday night, made his valedictory address to the City Council, an indication that his reign is practically over. He thanked the Council for their courtesy and kindness towards him, a sentiment that they may well reciprocate. He, himself, has set a good example in this regard, and not in this respect alone. In his occupancy of the chief Mayor's seat, he has, by his personal demeanour, and personal example, and by the quiet dignity he has invested his responsibility with, not only maintained worthily the dignity of the position, but set an example that succeeding mayors can, with advantage, emulate.

Mayor Morrow has given five years of faithful and attentive civic service—three years as an alderman, and two years in the Mayor's chair. At this time it may not be amiss to recount a few of the accomplishments of his civic lustrum. During Mr. Morrow's presidency of the Council, a very considerable amount of work has been accomplished. The Isolation Hospital, for so long a time on paper, has been built, and the arch bridge at Smith street begun and completed. The Public Library has been built and put into operation; there has been a considerable extension of the water works mains within the past five years; the new waterworks dam has been built, and an advantageous arrangement made with the Canadian General Electric Company for utilisation of the surplus power available—beyond the needs of the pumping station. By this arrangement the Company pays the city $2,000 per year for twenty years and at the end of that time the entire power development plant—machinery, building, erected and installed at the expense to the company, of over one hundred thousand dollars—reverts to, and becomes the absolute property of the city. Land for a public park has been purchased at the King Edward School, so that there is a plot of some seven acres now available for a park at the south end of the city. Within the past five years, the old volunteer fire brigade has been replaced by an efficient, paid brigade, an excellent new fire station built and equipped in the most modern manner. There have been built twenty-five or thirty miles of concrete street walks. Eighty-five thousand dollars have been appropriated for two new public school buildings, for the east and west districts of the city, respectively; the Protestant Home enterprise, fine new buildings, has been placed well on the way to accomplishment. Steps have also been taken, looking to new city buildings. Permanent pavement of some of the streets would have been done, according to arrangements made to this end, but the project was necessarily abandoned in deference to a largely and sufficiently signed petition against the proposed permanent pavement. Mayor Morrow retires, for the moment, from municipal life, with a creditable record of good accomplishment during his five years of faithful and attentive service.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Postoffice clerks wish that Christmas could be divided into four or five days during the year.

Three more days to do your Christmas shopping—three days between you and temporary bankruptcy.

The Borden Government motto—well lived up to—is, according to the Montreal Herald, do your shopping early.

The National Insurance Bill has passed at Westminster. The Liberal government has, says the Montreal Herald, added one more stone to its already extraordinary record of progressive legislation, and, in spite of the violent opposition of many private and political interests Great Britain has taken her place among the foremost countries of the world in her provision for the old age and sickness of her workers.

A GREAT CONTRAST.

(Farmers' Sun)

"Hon. J. S. Duff, Minister of Agriculture, will act, when possible, as chairman at each of the following meetings."

This was the announcement at the head of the official programme of lectures at the Winter Fair. As a matter of fact Mr. Duff did not preside at a single one of these meetings. It was not that these meetings lacked in importance. The report given in this issue shows that the lectures heard were never more practical, or more instructive. And still Mr. Duff never once so much as looked in at one of them.

There is a great contrast between the present Minister of Agriculutre and the late John Dryden, under whose auspices the Fair was established.

A SHAME.

(Hamilton Times.)

Some time ago an appeal was made to the Ontario Government by the attendants and employees of the Provincial Insane Asylum for an increase of pay. But the appeal was treated with contempt, Hon. Mr. Hanna making the threat that he would place female nurses in the male wards and so keep down the wages by dismissing the male hands. Mr. Hanna knows perfectly well that women could not and would not take charge of insane males. It would be a scandalous thing to ask them to do so. This threat was merely made to try to scare these poorly paid but faithful servants of the Government. Whitney can raise his own and his Cabinet Minsters' salaries without even asking the people's leave, but he refuses point blank—treats with scorn—a humble appeal for living wages to these men. Think of paying a married man with a family less than eight dollars a week, with bed and board, and expect him to keep and bring up a family on it! Why, the half of it would go for rent, and four dollars would be left to feed, clothe and educate his family. The thing is scandalous, and any Government that treats its employees in such a fashion should be very quickly brought to time. Here's a state of affairs that Mr. Studholme might take up and press upon the attention of the Government, demanding decent, Christian treatment to these underpaid servants.

ABOUT THE PLANET MARS

During the clear nights of the present month the casual observer of the stars cannot help but notice a bright star high up in the eastern sky about nine o'clock, near a cluster of small stars which are known as the Pleiades. The first glance at this star will reveal something of an unusual interest, for it will be noticed at once that this star instead of sparkling and twinkling in a manner similar to its companions scattered throughout space, burns with a steady light. This is the planet Mars. For the past fifty years astronomers throughout the world have made this object a study, and some have devoted much time in studying and examining the markings over the surface of the globe. Some interesting converts in the scientific world, theory that Mars maintains life in a form similar to the earth is fast finding convrets in the scientific world. Perhaps the most noted adherent to this theory is Professor Lowell, of the Flagstaff observatory, Arizona. Mr. Lowell was present at the British Association meeting held in Winnipeg two years ago. Those who had the pleasure of meeting the noted scientist were impressed with his modest manner, and he left the impression with those he met that the importance of the investigations of the planet was in safe and reliable hands.

This nightly conspicuous object in our skies demands additional attention at the present time, for on November 24, during an hour of ideal sky for telescopic work a number of new canals were discovered by Professor Lowell, and a photograph secured. In looking into the evidence presented by scientists as to the possibility of life on Mars, we find positive proof of similarity to the earth. By looking through the large telescope we see large patches of bluish green, which were formerly called seas and oceans, but are now thought to be areas where vegetation is abundant. Other areas, covering more than half of the entire globe of the planet are of a reddish orange colour, and are said to be extensive deserts. The polar regions are marked by white areas which increase and diminish with the seasons on Mars, and it is very natural to call these snowcaps, from their likeness of behaviour to that of the polar areas of snow and ice upon the earth. The day of Mars is only about forty minutes longer than ours but the year is 687 of our days. The axis of the planet is tilted out of the perpendicular to the plane of its orbit only half a degree more than the tilt of the earth's axis, so that the seasons on Mars will be almost the exact counterpart of our own, except that the length is nearly double ours. There are still many difficulties in the way of saying positively that Mars is inhabited by beings similar to humans, but it would be an error to say that the conditions which exist on the planet were not suitable to maintain life in a form very similar to ourselves. The fact that Mars only receives half the amount of heat from the sun that the earth receives does not mean that the climate should be twice as cold as the earth, for it is a well known fact that the top of a mountain is nearer the sun than the base, and on the former ice never melts while the base is covered with flowers, which of course is due to the density of the atmosphere. Of the rarity of the atmosphere of Mars there is no doubt. Should one of the inhabitants of our earth be suddenly transported to Mars it would be difficult for him to breathe owing to the rarity of the atmosphere, but he would in time become accustomed to this.

Crossing the reddish orange area is a network of lines running in every direction which are called canals. They are so narrow and so difficult to see that no colour can be assigned to them, but as they always connect with the bluish green areas it is probable that they are composed of the same. Professor Lowell does not hesitate to explain them as lines of vegetation along artificial watercourses, not the canals themselves but the irrigated areas along the canals. Certain of the canals run north and south through the dark areas as well as the light ones, into the regions covered in the winter by the polar caps.

As the caps melt in the spring there first appears a blue band at its edge. After a time the canals nearest this band become visible, then later those near the equator, the interval between the melting snow of the cap and the appearance of the canals being sufficient to allow for the time required not also for the springing up of vegetation after the water has reached the irrigated region. Then many of these lines meet at a certain spot and form a dark only for the transference of water but circle on the globe, which have been often called oases. On the whole it would not be unreasonable to say that there is some form of life on Mars, but whether a higher order than earth beings, or in the first stages of development, it would be hard to say, so we must content ourselves with the knowledge we have gained from men who have made this a life study, and await the event of some grand discovery which will concentrate or either disperse light waves in a manner similar to the sound waves, and then utilize this science in a way to penetrate into the sea of light with telescopes, as wireless messages encircle the globe by disturbing the sound waves.

ELLIOT'S

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY

ALBANY, DEC. 19.—The police are searching for Edward Doula or Denig, or Denis, Italian farm hand, employed by the Morner family of DeFreestville, Rensselaer county, the mutilated bodies of four members of which were found in a stable on their farm.

The missing man has not been seen since last Tuesday afternoon, when, about 3.30 o'clock he went to a farmhouse, located near the Morner farm, and had his trousers, which were ripped from the knee down, one leg mended and several buttons sewed on his clothing.

He it described as of very dark complexion, five feet six inches tall and weighing about 120 pounds. He has been employed at the Morner farm since August last, when he was received through an employment agency in Albany. Mrs. McCann, who mended his clothing at the neighbouring farmhouse, did not notice any blood stains on his clothing.

BODIES HACKED WITH HATCHET.

The victims were Mrs. Conrad Morner, aged 52 years, the mother; Edith and Blanche Mornel, aged 18 and 16 years respectively, the daughters, and Arthur Morner, aged 28 years, the son. The bodies were hacked with a hatchet and battered with a bale stick until they were almost unrecognisable.

The bodies of the mother and two daughters were found in a manure ccss pool beneath the barn floor long after midnight and that of the son was discovered about 9 o'clock in the morning buried beneath the barn floor.

The quadruple murder took place within the barn, it is presumed, sometime on Tuesday. The Morner family were prosperous dairy farmers and 50 of their cows were in the fields on Tuesday. They returned to the barnyard at night and bellowed out their discomfort at not receiving food or drink. A state inspector visited the farm, but finding no one in the house, believed the family was away for the day.

MILK DEALER DISCOVERED TRAGEDY.

The Morner family supplied milk each evening to Horatio Hould, a milk dealer of Rensselaer City. On Tuesday evening Morner failed to appear with the milk. Hould presumed he was ill. When he did not bring the milk Wednesday night Hould drove out to the Morner farm and began the investigation which led to the ghastly discovery.

The hatchet and bale stick, with which the murder had been committed, were found. During a search of the house a note was found on the piano in the sitting room. It was written in English, and read: "Italians make sausage of Americans." A search was made of the effects of the missing farmhand. Among them was a letter written in Italian and unaddressed.

It was translated in Troy and read that he was tired of his job and wanted to go home and join the Italian army in the campaign against Turkey. For whom it was intended, who the missing man's relatives are, or where they reside, is unknown to the authorities.

MOTIVE FOR THE MURDER.

The motive for the murder is a matter for speculation. Some believe an attempt was made to criminally assault one of the girls and that the murders followed in an attempt to conceal the crime.

The theory of the attempted assault and murder of the women before Arthur Morner met his death received added strength by a report that Arthur Morner had been seen in Rensselaer as late as 4 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. This led to the belief that his mother and sisters might have been murdered during his absence and that he met his end when he returned to the farm.

Sheriff Cottrell and a large posse of men are making a search for the missing farmhand. Bloodhounds were procured and they took up the scent and started along a highway which leads to the eastern section of Rensselaer county and towards the Massachusetts state line. The sheriff and his posse followed in automobiles.

Sheriff Cottrell learned that an Italian answering the description of the missing farmhand was in the city of Hudson. He spent several hours with another Italian.

He enquired how he could make train or car connections to go to Pittsfield, Mass. The theory is that he went by trolley line from Troy to Albany and thence by trolley to Hudson. Officers have been sent to Pittsfield.

HIS TIME-SAVING PLAN

"I rarely read a letter through," Grampell has said many times. "If it is from a girl I can always gather from the first three lines what she is going to tell me and I let my imagination do the rest. This plan works particularly well if the letter is in reply to my invitation. If I see that the note is short I know she accepts. If it is long I know she can't go and is wasting four pages explaining why. Usually I don't care why—and think of all the time I save by not reading explanations!"

Grampell found his plan excellent when it came to dealing with Jeannette Trippe. She was an especially nice girl, but she posssed a superabundance of language. Jeannette always took five hundred words to tell one 20 words of news and when she had paper and pen before her she rioted in her verbal wealth. It was after she wrote Grampell six large pages conveying the regretful news that she was unable to go to the theatre that he inaugurated his plan. Grampell never did more than tear open the envelopes of Jeannette's notes. If the writing was of formidable length he merely threw it into the waste paper basket and asked himself, "Who'll I ask now to go with me?"

Grampell invited Jeannette to join an opera party recently and when her aswer came he kew it was short before he opened it because it felt so thin.

"Good!" he murmured, pulling out the sheet. He lingered over throwing it away because for some reason of late Jeannette had grown to interest him a good deal. But Grampell hates to break a habit. There were about six lines on the front page and he tossed the missive away cheerfully. Jeannette would be an ornamnt to any opera party. He decided to send her orchids.

It was 8 o'clock when Grampell in full regalia drew up at Jeannette's house and mounted the steps. The maid delivered her message as soon as she opened the door. "Miss Tripps," she recited, "said when you came you were to go to Mrs. Smith's, if you please."

"Oh," said Grampell, blankly. Then he decided that she must be dining out. The only Smiths who gave dinners were the Algernon Smiths, and they lived 20 blocks away.

Three policemen strained their voices shouting after Grampell's taxi as he shot through the streets. He was host at the opera party and would be late as it was. Dashing up the steps of the Algernon Smiths, on whom he had not a calling acquaintance, Grampell was ushered in. From the dining room came the clink and hum of a large dinner party. Presetly Smith appeared, was polite, but decidedly curious. Most evidently he could not recall having invited Grampell to dine. Also he knew that Miss Jeannette Trippe was not gracing his board.

It was very awkward. Grampell had the consciousness that Smith would tell the servants immediately on his departure to watch the upstairs windows and the silver safe. Once outside Grampell wiped his wet brow and gazed wildly about in the cold night. Where in creation was Jeannette? Finding a drug store, he called up her house. Nobody was at home. The maid he had talked with was out. Th other maid didn't know anything about any Smiths nor the whereabouts of Miss Tripps.

Grampell arrived at the theatre pale and melted as to collar, and he slunk down to his block of six seats like a criminal. The four persons already there greeted him with becoming hauteur and said, "Sh!" when he agonisedly started to apologise.

Something was happening on the stage, but Grampell never knew what it was. He was picturing the wrath of Jeannette waiting, hopelessly waiting for him at some mythical Smith's waiting and growing to hate him. Then the curtain fell and the lights went up.

Directly across the aisle from him, two rows down, sat Jeannette! Turning her head she saw him and smiled sweetly. It was not at all a look of indignation. Jeannette's mind seemed quite at peace. Grampell reached her side in three strides.

"Where were your" he inquired, sternly. "Why didn't you wait for me? And what Smiths were you at?"

"What are you talking about?" demanded the young woman. "Didn't you get my letter? I wrote you that I had already promised to go to the opera to-night. The Smiths? That was a message I left for the superintendent of my mission—he was to go to Smiths for some books we had collected for the children. Isn't the music lovely to-night?"

WOMEN OF ABILITY

California has long been noted for its women of marked ability in the business world, and among the remarkable galaxy who have conquered fortune i nthe Golden State, Mary Hallahan is a striking example.

Some 25 years ago, then a girl in her teens ,she became possessed of an insatiable craving to accomplish something worth while. Anxious to help in the support of those dear to her, she discovered there was a "gold mine" of opportunity in Lakland, Cal., at catering With a dauntless determination to try her fortune in this new field, she set to work to secure a foothold. The first obstacle she had to overcome was the opposition of her parents and friends —her proposed plans seemed to them a preposterous undertaking for a delicate, inexperienced girl.

But this clever girl, who "could cook a meal hat would tickle Lucullas' palate and could serve it in a style to delight the eye of an artist," was too firmly convinced of the golden possibilities awaiting "the one who should open a caterer's shop in Oakland," to be lightly turned from this vocation of her choice. After duly weighing the pros and cons of making the innovation, she sagaciously told her friends who were trying to discourage her: "There is no use making lace doilies, nor of embroidering centrepieces that nobody wants, when all the time I am just aching to get into the kitchen and cook something fit to eat." She had true chef's inborn horror of food improperly prepared. And she realized the money value in her gift.

In those early days th elittle California city possessed not one genius of the culinary art, to whom an Oakland hostess could turn when an unexpected emergency arose to require a skilfully prepared dinner or luncheon. This was the situation Mary Hallahan discovered, and realized at the same time her own opportunity.

Within fourteen days after she decided to venture into the business world, the representative women of Oakland received a nea little announcement informing them that their difficulty was solved, and thereafter a caterer would serve them at short notice and at reasonable terms. It was in a spirit of fun that her talents were put to test, as they later told the young caterer they had entertained just o see what style of a dinner the "yonugster"—she was but seventeen at the time—would serve. She gave them no cause to regret having employed her.

Oakland's much-felt need was so successfully filled and the girl-caterer displayed ability of such high order that in this new field she at once attracted the attention and approval of an ever-increasing number of the city's social entertainers. From time to time her stock was added to until it became one of the most thoroughly equipped establishments in the West. Her services were called for not only in Oakland, Berkeley and Alameda, but across the bay in San Francisco.

The office and warehouse of Miss Hallihan occupied a block located between the business and one of the most residential portions of the city.

Miss Hallihan's steady growth in both fame and fortune in the last quarter of a century, has been entirely due to her carefulnes sover details, for her heart was ever in her work, and she was unsparing of herself in her devotion to it. The splendid fortune this little woman amassed is an accomplishment of which either sex might well be proud.

When she decided to retire from active life, it was with the satisfaction of knowing that through her own unassisted energy she had won a place in the foremost ranks of caterer adepts. Of her success she modestly says: "From the first moment it was only a question of sticking to business, doing to the best of my ability what was to be done and, in short, giving people full value for their money."

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, Port Planford. Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her and on recommendation of a friend I used Dr Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

INTERESTING TRIP

An influential member of the Federal Government, who has been travelling over the Grand Trunk Pacific Ry. in the West, writes as follows:

"I must say that I found the trip very intersting. The country is certainly much more picturesque than any other route across the Prairies, and I have found the travelling comfortable and the service excellent."

Letter received by the Grand Trunk Pacific Ry. from a prominent business man residing in Seattle, concerning a trip he made from Winnipeg to Edmonton, contains the following abstract:

"Going out to Edmonton I went through your train several times, and I want to compliment you on your equipment and service. I consider it so far the best Canadian Transcontinental service I have ever seen, and I have travelled over all the American Transcontinental Railways."

Enjoyable Banquet At Gilmour Memorial Church

The Young Men's Bible Class of quet to the adult classes of the Gilmour Baptist Church gave a ban- School on Dec. 15. There were about 70 guests present. The guest of honour was the Superintendent, Mr. A. H. Campbell, who is leaving the community to reside at Harwood. Mr. Campbell has always been an enthusiastic leader of the young men, and will be very much missed in the church. Tables were prettily arranged and the S. S. room artistically decorated for the occasion. Six of the young men waited on the guests, dispensing the various courses, which were enjoyed by all.

Rev. Mr. Bonner acted as toastmaster. The programme was as follows:

Instrumental music, W. and M. Paul.
"King"—E. Scott, response by W. Scott.
Instrumental.
"Our Honoured Guest"—F. Scott; response by A. H. Campbell.
Solo, Miss Tindle.
Reading, Mr. Darling.
"Sabbath School," C. Moore; response by W. Paul.
Solo, Miss Young.
Instrumental.
"Ladies"—A. Edmison; response R. Darling.
Duet, Mr. and Mrs. Bonner.
"Bachelors"—M. Darling, response by A. Mann.

The singing of "Auld Lang Syne" closed a most successful evening.

A Des Moines man had an attack of muscular rheumatism in his shoulder. A friend advised him to go to Hot Springs. That meant an expense of $150.00 or more. He sought for a quicker and cheaper way to cure it and found it in Chamberlain's Liniment. Three days after the first application of this liniment he was well For sale by all dealers.

Royal Templars Of Temperance

Mr. E. Skitch, who has been in the city for some days, working in the interest of the Royal Templars of Temperance, is meeting with considerable success. A large number of new members for the Order have been secured. The executive of Dan Spence Council No. 26, Peterborough, are gratified with results obtained. Mr. Skitch will be here all this week.

The Central Smith Farmers' Club held their opening meeting of the season last Thursday. The meeting was addressed by the assistant district representative, Mr. Sackville, B.S.A., who spoke on things in general, making special reference to the Guelph Winter Fair.

The election of officers then took place as follows:

President—William Scott.
Vice-President—William Paul.
Secretary-Treasurer—Harold Archer.

The next meeting of the club is called for on January 16th, when Mr. Hopkins, B.S.A., will give an address on "Orchard Work."

THE COW AND THE MOON

The Cow and the Moon, which comes to the Grand for the first time on Friday and Saturday next, with Saturday matinee, is bound to be successful for two reasons alone. Founded on the Mother Goose fables, it appeals strongly to the children and, for like reason it has a deep heart interest to those whose weary feet are lagging along the way. For who does not love to be reminded in some attractive manner of the sweet times of childhood. While they are never to return again, we can enjoy their reproduction on the stage all the more for having once been real actors in just such a comedy. If from your troubled minds you'd have sorrow disappear and this weary world seem ever fair and bright, see the Cow and the Moon at the Grand. The seat sale is now open.

Dear Sir,—To-morrow, I'll have a look around to see if On-looker is right. Meanwhile, your correspondent should consider the presentment of the Grand Jury last week, that there is no place for the old but the gaol. On-looker might say whether the Protestant Home is so called because they protest they're not able to live entirely on the immigrants.

1200 TURKEYS WERE PURCHASED

Mr. J. J. Allen who bought turkeys for Messrs. Squires and Sons of Norwood during the past season, has completed his contract.

There were about 1200 turkeys bought throughout the township of Douro and vicinity, aggregating for the farmers over $2000.

Special prizes for large flocks were awarded, the first prize, $4 in cash, falling to the lot of Mr. Cornelius O'Brien, who possessed a flock of 63 turkeys, the value of which was $105.60. The second prize, a handsome lap rug, valued at $3.50, went to Mr. Wm. J. Moher, for 62 turkeys, equivalent to $104.85, and the third prize, a bag of Reindeer flour, value $2.75, to Mr. John M. Leahy for 60 turkeys, equal to $94.05.

The special prize of $2 in cash for the best flock of turkeys over twenty in number, was taken by Mr. John D. Kennedy, having 23 turkeys which together weighed 345 lbs. at 15c. per pound, the price paid for live birds. These realized the handsome sum of $51.75, or $2.25 each.

HOME FOR CHRISTMAS

Examiner Special:

WINNIPEG, MAN., DEC. 20.—The Railway authorities assert that two thousand people are leaving here for Ontario points to-night to spend Christmas at home.

PEACE CONFERENCE

Special to The Examiner.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, DEC. 20.—Representatives from all the big powers waited on the peace conference this morning and were assured of everything being done to prevent further bloodshed. It was hoped that a settlement would be made within a week or so. In the meantime generals of the Imperial and Revolutionist armies have been ordered to cease hostilities and they are now simply holding positions. The greatest trouble is caused by irregular bandits who recognize the authority of nobody.

EXORBITANT PRICES

"The farmers who attend the Peterborough market are asking a ridiculous price for fowl," was the statement to an Examiner reporter, by a local merchant to-day. "They simply don't seem to know how much to ask," he said. He predicted a drop in turkeys at least next Saturday. On the market last Saturday turkeys sold, but very slowly ,at 20 cents per lb. Two Toronto merchants were in the city with the intention of purchasing birds, but left for the city thoroughly disgusted with the situation here. They stated to several business men that they could purchase fowl cheaper in Toronto. The prediction of the merchant as to the drop for next Saturday, has already begun to manifest itself, in as much as several turkeys were purchased this morning at 15 and 16 cents per lb. And several geese at 10 cents per lb.

There has also been a drop in the price of hay. Last week several loads were sold for $15 and $17, and this morning first quality hay was sold on the market for $13. The farmers predicted a scarcity of hay earlier in the season, and as a result of this it sold verp rapidly at first, but it begins to look as if there will be plenty after all, hence the drop.

OMEMEE NEWS

Omemee, December 19.—Mr. George Weir was in Keene last week.

Mrs. A. C. Hoggetts and son are visiting her mother, Mrs. Birnie of Collingwood.

On Friday evening the O.C.B. and Epworth eLague of the Methodist Church, gave Miss Gertrude McQuade a "kitchen shower" at her home on Sturgeon street. The gifts were many and varied, all being useful and necessary for the stocking of a bride's kitchen. A pleasant evening was spent in games and music after which the girls of the League served refreshments and the evening was brought to a close with Auld Lang Syne.

Mr. Arthur Perkins, assistant operator at the junction for the past few months, has been transferred to Peterborough.

The public school board have secured the services of Miss Ina Hunt as assistant teacher in the public school. Miss Hunt is a former resident of Omemee, her father having been principal of the High School for some years.

Mr. Deane of Saskatchewan, is visiting friends in Town.

Miss Ethel Rehill of Peterborough, is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. T. J. Parsons.

Mr. Wesley Wilson spent Sunday in Janetville.

Miss Jackson was the guest of Miss Edith Robinson on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Corneil are visiting their daughter, Mrs. Melville Corneil of Beeto n.

A number from here have attended some of the evangelistic meetings in Cavanville, where Rev. Mr. McHardy, who was in Omemee last year, has been assisting the pastor for the past two or three weeks.

Miss Jessie Nichols was home over the week-end.

Mr. Wallace McQuade is the guest of her mother, Mrs. McQuade, Sturgeon Point.

Mrs. J. E. Eaton and party, comprising Mrs. J. Walker, Miss McCrea, Mr. Paul Hahn, Mr. Lister and Mr. Harvey Robb, of Toronto, came down in Mrs. Eaton's private car, "Etonia" for the openin gof the new "Coronation Hall" on Monday evening.

Miss Valera Laidley of Janetville, was in town on Monday.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

She isn't unusually pretty.
She isn't exceptionally clever.
She isn't particularly witty.
She isn't strikingly stylish.
And I don't think even her best friend would call her exactly fascinating.

And yet, she has converted a lover who was somewhat of a man about town into a husband who enjoys nothing so much as his own fireside and who, after six years of married life, appears to admire his wife and delight in her company almost as much as he did during the temporary aberration of courtship.

I suppose you are quite ready for the "why." Well then, let me give it to you in a little incident, as I myself saw it, instead of in a direct statement.

A crowd of us were coming home on the train from an evening function in a distant town. There were several married couples and several engages. As a rule you could have told the financees from the wedded in the usual way—that is the engages chatted or gazed meaningly into each other's eyes, while the wedded sat in meditative silence ,or gazed out the window or—surest sign of all—read their newspapers.

But when you came to the seat, on which the little lady of my tale was perched beside her six feet of husband, you would probably have made a wrong diagnosis. My own attention was first drawn to them by hearing the husband laugh out—the ringing laugh of one genuinely amused. I turned to look at them and saw that the little person was telling him some incident of the evening. And she was telling it not in the matter-of-fact married way, but with her hands and eyes, and with all the effort to please and amuse that she ever made in her engagement days. And her husband laughed out loud.

I wonder how many women who have been married six years, very often divert and amuse their husbands so that they laugh right out loud.

I wonder how many women who have been married six years, ever talk to their husbands with the empressment and effort to please of their engagement days.

The woman who can make her husband listen and laugh—
The woman who can keep the fretful note out of her voice—
The woman who does not drop the engagement manner the moment the honeymoon is over—
The woman who flirts with her husband occasionally—
This is the woman I'll back to keep her husband interested and in love long after the wrinkles have come, the hair has grown thin, and the bright eyes have become faded.

I think she has twice as much chance of reigning queen of his heart for life, as the woman who does not take care for any of these things, but puts all her trust in powders and potions, and all her effort into keeping herself pretty as long as possible.

NEW CORONATION HALL. IS FORMALLY OPENED

Splendid New Structure is the Gift of Mr. J. C. Eaton and is Appreciated by the Citizens---A Description of the Building.

OMEMEE, DEC. 19—On Monday evening, Dec. 18th, the new 'Coronation Hall,' Omemee, was opened by a grand concert. Judge McMillan, of Lindsay, acted in the capacity of chairman, and interspersed the programme with witty remarks. The doors were open at seven o'clock and the programme commenced at eight o'clock with an opening chorus, "Oh Canada," by forty voices, under the able direction of Reeve Mulligan. This was followed by an address by the chairman, who in a few words, congratulated the village upon the acquisition of such a magnificent building, which would be a credit to any town or village. He emphasized the importance of calling t by its proper name, 'Coronation Hall,' it fulfilling the requirements of an opera house as well as those of a town hall.

Mrs. Eaton, who looked extremely well in white satin, with over-dress of rose-coloured chiffon, inset with rose point lace and wearing pearl and diamond ornaments, took the solos in "Land of Hope and Glory," the chorus joining in the refrain.

Short addresses were given by Revs. Currie, Gurns, Earle and Father McGuire, and Mr. Boxall of Lindsay, each gentleman speaking in the highest terms of Mrs. Eaton's great munificence in giving her home town such a splendid gift.

Mrs. J. Walker, who is no stranger to Omemee audiences, looked charming in black net over lace, with heavy beaded trimmings, and sang with her usual charm of expression a solo, "Happy Days" with 'cella accompaniment.

Mr. Paul Hahu of Toronto, the noted violin cellist, and Mr. Lister, who possesses a splendid baritone voice, delighted the audience with their selections and their readiness to respond to the hearty encores. Mr. Hahu held his audience breathless from the first note, the marvellous depth and sweetness of the instrument being especially noted in his "Berceause" selection. Mr. Lister favoured those present with two solos, his "Song of Thanksgiving" meeting with hearty aplause. The pianist, Mr. Harvey Robb, Mus. Doc., accompanied the various numbers in a most able manner, giving a piano solo "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2," by Listat, in a brilliant style.

The chief feature of the evening was the signing of the deed by Mrs. Eaton, witnessed by Rev. R. Burns and the reading of an address.

The address, which was beautifully done by Miss Edith Shawe of Toronto, was bound in green leather and was in a green leather case. The frontispiece of the address was in the form of two wild pigeons (Omemee being the Indian for pigeon) bearing in ther bills a ribbon with "Omemee" on it. This was entwined in a branch of maple leaves done in autumn tints.

Mr. Currie then read an address from the Board of Trade and presented Mrs. Eaton with a silver key, chain and tablet on which latter was engraved the following, "Good for ten seats, first row of balcony—Mrs. J. C Eaton and friends." Mrs. Eaton graciously responded to these evidences of appreciation from those connected with the affairs of the village, saying that the only condition upon which Mr. Eaton allowed her to come was that it shouldn't get in the papers as he did not intend giving any more 'Coronation Halls,' after which three ringing cheers and a tiger, led by Reeve Mulligan, were given for her, followed by the hearty singing of "For she's a jolly good fellow." Mr. T. C. Stephenson, on behalf of the Library Board, tendered the thanks of that institution for the fine reading room and library provided in the new hall.

Before the closing chorus was sung, Reeve Sims of Fenelon Falls, who was present, moved a vote of thanks to Judge McMillan for the able way in which he had filled the office of chairman. Mr. Boxall of Lindsay, seconded the motion, Rev. Father McGuire of Downeyville, putting the motion to the audience, who showed by their hearty hand-clapping, that it me with their approval.

Two choruses, "His Majesty the King" and "Choral Fantasia on National Airs," in which God Save the King was introduced, closed one of the most successful concerts ever given in Omemee. Much credit is due Mr. R J. Mulligan in the training of choral society, which added greatly to the evening's programme. Regrets were received from the Hon. Col. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, and Dr. Mason, M.P.P. of Fenelon Falls, who were expected to be present. The proceeds of the concert go toward a piano fund, for the purchase of an instrument for the hall.

Description of the Hall.

The Hall, which is built of white brick with dark green trimmings, is on the north side of King street, near Sturgeon. Broad steps lead on either side to the front entrances. The upper part of the building is finished in stucco and the front bears the inscription, "Omemee Hall, 1911." The foundation and basement are built of cement, the latter being divided into two sections. Two furnaces heat he building ,the one being for the council chamber and library and the other for the main part of the hall. Immense square pillars of cement support the auditorium and stage.

In the first floor are the entrance halls, on either sides at the front, off which in the centre is the council chamber. The woodwork throughout is done with a cherry finish and dados around the walls add much to the splendid appearance. A flight of stairs from the right hall leads to the basement, to which there is also an outside entrance.

Winding staircases on either side lead to the second floor, ending in large halls. The library and reading room, which is directly over the council chamber, is large and commodious. In both rooms, broad windows afford a splendid outlook to the south. The walls and ceilings are plastered in smooth finish, with fancy crevices around the ceiling. A second flight of stairs leads on both sides to the balcony.

The walls and ceilings of the main part of the building are done in dull grey stucoc effect. The large beams in the domed ceiling are also done in rough finish. A sloping balcony projects over two-thirds of the auditorium, entrances to which can be gained by stairways from the outside. Comfortable opera chairs of birds-eye maple, with dark wax finish complete the finishings of the hall.

Two small stairways lead onto the stage which is large and well lighted by both drop and footlights. Directly in the centre of the roo fover the stage is a ventilator. The artistic curtain and scenery are the work of Mr. Goodwin of Lindsay. A large scenery door opens onto the outside at the laft of the stage. At the rear are two good-siezd dressing rooms, well lighted both by windows and electric fixtures. Entrance to these rooms is effected from the outside by means of stairways. Excellent fire protection is afforded by means of eleven places of exit. The building throughout is lighted by electricity.

WESTWOOD

Death of Mrs. John Brackenridge, a Pioneer Resident

Special to The Examiner.

Westwood, Dec. 18. — On December 15th the messenger of Death visited us and removed from our midst one of the pioneers in the person of Mrs. John Brackenridge.

The late Mrs. Brackenridge, who was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Stevenson, was born at "Boghall," Galston, Ayrshire, Scotland, on April 23, 1831.

The family moved to Canada in 1853, crossing the Atlantic on a sailing vessel called the "Glencairn," landing at Montreal, hence up the St. Lawrence and Lake Ontario to Cobourg. Here they took the overland route to Gore's Landing, and crossed Rice Lake to Keene in a row boat. They settled on a farm a mile north of the village of Westwood.

On the 7th of July, 1854, Agnes Stevenson was married to John Brackenridge by the Rev. Mr. Maclisse,and with her husband settled on a farm a short distance from her father's home. Eleven years later they mived to "Welbeck," the present family residence.

In 1904 Mr. and Mrs. Brackenridge celebrated the 50th anaiversary of their marriage, a pleasing feature of this event being the presence of 14 of their family of 15 (one, Janet, having passed away 18 years previously) and 20 grand children. Another was the presence of many of the associates of their early days, among them being the groomsman, Mr. Matthew Brackenridge, of Indian River.

Throughout her life Mrs. Brackenridge was held in the highest esteem by all who knew her. She was a woman of sterling character, who always entertained the highest ideals of life, and was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church, where her sympathy and presence will be greatly missed. The whole neighbourhood feel that they have lost a true friend, one who was always ready and willing to help in any way she was able.

The funeral took place from the family residence, "Welbeck," to the Westwood cemetery, at 2 p.m., Dec. 18, the bearers being the eight sons of the deceased.

Besides the bereaved husband she leaves to mourn her loss eight sons and five daughters; John, of Dinsdale, Iowa; Matthew, Thomas, David, Mrs. James Robb, Mrs. J. Thompson, of Westwood; Mrs. Gillott, of Millbrook; James of Edmonton, Alta.; Norman, of South Monaghan; Hugh, of Sandbrick, Alta; Marian, Agnes and William, at home.

DREAMING OF HER

The Young Man Tells a Dramatic Story

"I dreamed of you the other night," the young man remarked casually.

"Oh, did you?" murmured the young woman with a conscious flush.

"Yes," he assured her. "It was a nightmare."

"Well!" she said stiffly and sat up straighter.

"It was like this," the young man went on. "I really had a terrible time and suffered tortures. I had taken you to a big dinner party."

"If you think you're funny, Tom Ingles," exclaimed the young woman with considerable warmth, "I'd just like to form you that you were never more mistaken in your life! The idea! Taking me places and suffering tor——"

"You're mixed," he interrupted. "That is, you are jumping to conclusions in gigantic bounds. You and I had gone to this dinner and you looked mighty sweet. I remembered thinking what a contrast you were to the girl who was giving the dinner. She was tall and bony and thin and had little eyes and wrinkles and ugly hair and a hideous dress."

"Perhaps," commented the young woman, "you don't realise that it isn't much of a compliment to be told one is different from that! Almost anyone looks better than a perfect fright!"

"I see you are determined to quarrel," sighed the young man. "When I finish my story I'll be glad to have the next quarrel with you. We can sit it out if you don't care to dance it.

"But let me proceed with my story. Just as I was beginning to enjoy my dinner the caricature at the head of the table simpered and said she had an engagement to announce. Somebody asked whose—and she confessed that it was her engagemnt to marry me!"

"Who is she?" demanded the young woman. "What's her name? You might just as well tell me first as last!"

"I'm glad you are jealous of her," said the young man, in a satisfied tone.

"Jealous!" shrieked the young woman. "Well, I like that! What earthly difference do you suppose it would make to me if you were engaged to a dozen girls? I'm sure I hope you'll be very happy and——"

"You forget this was a nightmare. I distinctly was not happy. I remembered I stared at her and I could feel my hair rising upon my head in cold horror. I was paralyzed by her basilisk eye and could not open my mouth. Everybody looked at me and I felt as if tied up with twenty miles of rope around me, clamped down and sat upon. Everybody congratulated us and the hostess beamed fatuously."

"Did I congratulate you?" demanded the young woman coldly.

"No, not exactly. I think you fainted away and they threw cold water on you or something like that."

"I don't understand you," said the young woman, in decided tones. "I think you are presuming a great deal when you dream such things of me. I don't know why you should dare imagine that I would take the trouble to faint away because you were getting married and——"

"You can imagine anything in a nightmare, you know," the young man told her. "But just think of the horror of the situation. Centuries of training have made it almost impossible for an ordinarily civilized man to contradict a lady to her face. That's where women have the drop on you!

"Just as soon as I could after dinner I cornered my hostess and asked her what she meant. I said I had come to her dinner party with you and that I thought highly of your good opinion and didn't want you to get any false impressions as to where my interests lay. Then she got haughty and said she had observed that I had been paying you a good deal of attention and that it had upset her considerably and she hoped that in the circumstances I would cease my attentions to you. Someone called to ask us what we were talking about and she called back that we were 'just billing and cooing!' Me! With that!"

"What became of me?" inquired the young woman.

"I couldn't get rid of her any other way," explained the young man, "so at last I told her that I couldn't possibly be engaged to her because I was engaged to you and meant to stick to the engagement!"

"I think you had nerve!"

"Now, Carrie," said the young man persuasively, "wouldn't you be engaged to me to save me from a horrible fate? Haven't you any heart?"

"None whatever!"

"Well, that's because I have it," pursued the young man. "You can't imagine how relieved I was when I had said that you and were engaged. It just seemed to fix things right. Come on—let's announce our engagement to prevent any bony, homely female person from grabbing me—it might really happen, you know!"

"I don't know," said the young woman. "You may call this present conversation a nightmare when you come out of your trance. Are you sure you won't?"

"Then that's all settled," cried the young man happily. "We'll just skip the argument. I feel ever so much safer now!"

SEEN IN PARIS SHOPS

The long ,close fitting sleeve, with the flaring piece over the hand is trim and chic.

The vogue for the complete dress of whatever materials, is far reaching and greatly liked.

The two most fashionable forms of collars are deep point and the rounding form—cuffs are deep.

This season more violets and brocades are used than chiffons and other transparent materials.

The narrow tailored skirt, open at the side, is often seen among the new model gowns.

Black and white constitute the gentlewoman's color combination, no other being nearly so successful.

Inside the new muffs there is such a multiplicity of buttoned pockets that the wrist bag can be discarded.

Revers of coats are cut with broad point low and well down at the left side, nearly to the waist line.

Black and white is a great feature in gowns, especially when combined with a coral tone or coral jewelry.

Christmas GIFT SUGGESTIONS

Of Gifts That Will be Appreciated above everything Else because nothing is so appreciated as something to wear.

Santa Claus is growing more practical each year, and instead of the things that satisfy the eye alone—so common in years gone by—we now witness the giving of those wholesome, useful and practical things which one would buy for himself and which are not only gratefully received on Christmas Day, but are a source of much joy and pleasure for many days to come.

You are cordially invited to inspect our magnificent showing of Holiday Goods whether you come to buy or not.

Changes Made By Baseball Teams Of This League

New York, Dec. 14.—Eastern League clubs did some selling, exchanging and purchasing of players last night.

The Toronto Ball Club sold Outfielder Davy Rowan to the Mobile Club of the Southern League. Mobile is managed by Mike Finn, and he has been after Rowan ever since Manager Kelley and President McCaffery arrived in town. Rowan's real name is Drohan, and he is a Toronto boy. He can play either the outfield or first base.

Eddie McCafferty announced that he had again signed to manage the Montreal Club next season.

Newark bought two players, both first basemen, to take the place of Joe Agler, who was sold at the close of the season to the Chicago Nationals. One is Swacina, formerly of Pittsburg and later with Mobile, in the Southern League. He led that circuit with the bat last season, having an average of .313. The other is Tony Walsh, one of the several players tried at first base by the clubs last season when Chance retired. The Indians already had Summerlot, from Washington, but he will be sold. Walsh was the home run demon of the Connecticut League last season.

Wyatt Lee will not be with the Newark team next season. It is thought that he has about outlived his usefulness. Lee has signed a ten weeks' contract at $50 per week to coach the pitchers at Princeton University next spring.

The Buffalo Club figures indirectly in the appointment of Harry Wolverton as manager of the New York Americans. In the arrangements by which Wolverton secured his release from the Oakland Club Sharp, who played first base for the Bisons last season, and is manager of Stallings' plantation in Georgia in the off season, succeeds Wolverton at Oakland as manager.

It develops that Baltimore and Providence were after "Kid" Iberfeld of the Washington Americans. Dunn wanted him to play third base.

Fred Mitchell, the former Toronto catcher, with Rochester last season, will be a member of Milwaukee team of the American Association. Several teams refused to waive on him at first, but later consented to do so, when it was learned that Hugh Duffy was to take him to the American Association. Rochester had no use for Mitchell with Blair as first catcher and Jacklitsch next in order. The champions also have Graham to work behind the bat.

Rochester announced the purchase of Pitcher "Bumpus" Jones from Jersey City, and Catcher Walter Blair of New York Highlanders, both high-class men. The success of the Rochester club in dealing with the Highlanders and Washington is explained by the fact that "Long George" McConnell goes to the New York team this season and Foster, Spence and Moeller to the Senators. President Chapin says that he will have an entire new team. Rochester sold Pitcher Frank Desaun to the Atlantic Club of the Southern League, and got still another pitcher from the Highlanders, in the person of Kepler of the Sioux City team of the Western League. Kepfier was the leading twirler of the Western organization and cost New York $4,000.

Manager G. T. Stallings of the Bisons announced to-day the purchase of Infielder Downey from the Cincinnati Reds, ad Pitcher Baxter of the Phillies. Downey is the player Toronto tried to get last summer to play shortstop, when Bobby Vaughan was sick.

HOCKEY

The Sporting Editor has received the following from Dan McCabe, Convenor, District No. 2, Trent Valley Hockey League:

"A schedule meeting of District No. 2 of the Trent Valley Hockey League, will be held in the T.A.S. hall on Thursday evening, Dec. 21, and I wish you would see if Lindsay could have a couple of delegates present. The present difficulty seems to be that Havelock may not be here and in that case a very compact circuit could be formed with Lindsay, Peterborough T. A. S., Campbellford and All Saints of Peterborough. I wish you would drum it up a little and see that they are represented. If they decide to come, let them get all the open dates in Lindsay rink, so we can proceed with the schedule —Lindsay Post.

The Trent Valley Hockey League, District No. 2, will hold a meeting in the T.A.S. rooms to-morrow evening to draw up a schedule.

POWER NEGOTIATIONS AT THE CAPITAL TO-DAY

(Toronto World.)

OTTAWA, DEC. 18.—Ottawa was a meeting place for the powers that be to-day.

To begin with, there were Hon. Adam Beck of London and G. Lynch-Staunton, K.C. of Hamilton, representing the Ontaro Hydro-Electric Commission. Then there were also sundry other gentleman representing the Otonabee Power Company. The crux of the whole matter is the desire and intention of the commission to purchase the dam on the Trent canal at present owned by the Otonabee Company, and with other powers on the same waterway to develop power for Peterborough, Lakefield and surrounding municipalties.

On the occasion of Mr. Beck's last visit here he was accompanied by a number of members of Peterborough council, and the government was requested to sanction the taking over of the power by the commission. This, it is understood, the power company is opposing, and the matter is coming before the government to-morrow.

There were sundry conferences, but none of the representatives of either side of the case were very communicative.

Rather Evasive Reply.

"How do you think the question will be decided," Mr. Staunton was asked.

"Do you know I have always believed that Florence Kinrade was innocent," was Mr. Staunton's reply.

"We are just hanging around," said Hon. Mr. Beck when asked what he was doing in the capital. He further stated that he had heard nothing new in regard to the transfer of the Chats Falls Power to D. O'Connor, jr., by the late Dominion Government, regarding which he approached the present government in the city's interest some time ago.

TWO MEETINGS TO DISCUSS HYDRO ELECTRIC BY-LAW

The Hdyro-Electric Power By-law, to be voted on by the ratepayers of Peterborough at the coming municipal elections is going to be the subject of considerable discusson during the next few days. On Friday night the Board of Trade will hold a special meeting in the Council chamber at 8 o'clock, while on Thursday night of next week, Dec. 28th, there will be a public meeting in the Opera House at which an address on the by-law will be given by Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission.

"Help The Other Fellow" By Purchasing The Health Association's Stamps

"Help the Other Fellow!" That is always a good slogan to follow, and especially at this season of the year, when opportunities are so abundant for doing something for somebody else. What comes home to one, more than the appeal of the Peterborough Health Association? It is an appeal that strikes all classes for there is "no respector of persons" as regards those whom the White Plague afflicts. It is an appeal that can be readily responded to by all, from the small boy to the full-grown working man. A purchase of a few cents worth of stamps is the answer Think of the noble object—that of wiping out tuberculosis in our midst. Is not the aim of the Health Association a worthy one? Is it not deserving of your co-operation? Let each do his or her share in the accomplishment of this grand enterprise. The calendars are receiving a good patronage; but there are yet quite a number in the drug stores, and the citizens are asked to remember these when doing their shopping. Also the stamps, with their message of healing, in sending parcels to friends. The latter are only one cent a piece, thus within the reach of all.

SMITH COUNCIL HAS ITS LAST SESSION OF THE YEAR

The members of the Municipal Council of the Township of Smith met in the Council Chamber, Peterborough, on Friday, Dec. 15th, at 10 o'clock, for the last meeting of the year.

All the members were present with Reeve Graham in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

Moved by Mr. Garbutt, seconded by Mr. McKee, that Mr. Fairbairn be allowed to address the Council.—Carried.

Mr. Fairbairn stated that on the 28th of August last he had three lambs killed by dogs, and he requested that the Council pay him two-thirds of their value. The Reeve explained that when By-law No. 680 (levying a tax on dogs) was passed, a clause was inserted stating that no money was to be paid for sheep worried by dogs, but that the money so collected was to form part of the general fund. Instructions were given that the Clerk froward a copy of the By-law to Mr. Fairbairn.

Tenders were received from Messrs. Hunter, Redgwick, Lewis and Fowler, making an offer for the privilege of taking the wood cut on the highway by the Seymour Electric Company. Mr. Hunter was granted permission, his being the highest tender.

Mr. J. J. Bickle and others asked that steps be taken by the Council to repair or replace the fence surrounding the cemetery, situated on the north half of Lot 24, in the 5th concession. He stated that if the Council would buy the wire that he and the people of the neighbourhood would furnish posts and hang the wire free of charge.

Moved by Mr. Jobe, seconded by Mr. McKee, that the Council act on Mr. Bickel's suggestion, and that Mr. Bickle be commissioned to purchase the wire and also a small gate, and that the amount be paid when the bill was presented.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Jobe, seconded by Mr. Davis, that a by-law, authorizing the execution of a release to the Dominion Government for damages done by high water, in respect to certain highways and road ends in the Township of Smith be read a first time.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McKee, seconded by Mr. Garbutt, that the by-law be head a second time with the Council as a Committee of the Whole. Mr. Davis in the chair. Chairman reported by-law read without amendment.

Moved by Mr. Davis, seconded by Mr. Jobe, that the By-law be read a third time and passed.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Garburt, seconded by Mr. Jobe, that the time for the Collector to return his roll be extended until Monday, January 8th, 1912.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McKee, seconded by Mr. Davis, that the following accounts be paid:

Carried.

The Council adjourned to meet on January 8th, 1912, at 11 o'clock.

You will find that druggists everywhere speak well of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. They know from long experience in the sale of it that in cases of coughs and colds it can always be depended upon, and that it is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by all dealers.

SPECIAL SERVICE

Extra train service for Christmas on Dec. 23rd, 1911 only:

Regular train No. 18 will leave Peterborough for the East as usual at 11.35 a.m. A second section of this train will leave Peterborough at 12 noon, with standard equipment, parlour and dining cars, and a through parlour car from Peterborough to Ottawa. This train will consolidate with No. 18 at Smith Falls for Montreal.

Local train No. 600 will leave Peterborough at 7.47 p.m. for Havelock, Tweed and intermediate stations. A second section of this train will leave Peterborough at 8.07 p.m. for Havelock and intermediate stations. For further information, tickets, etc., see W. Mellroy, City Passenger Agent, Peterborough. 3d-143.

MAY OPEN ON SATURDAY

The management of the Sacred Heart Rink are working hard to get their ice surface ready for skating, and expect to have things ready for opening by Saturday or on Christmas Day at the outside. It all depends upon the state of the weather. The new South City rink will have the largest ice area in the city, being 90 feet by 190 feet.

CURLING

Caretaker Williams of the Curling Rink, is again busy making ice. The rink thermometer registered about 10 degrees of frost this morning. If the cold weather lasts the Knights of the Broom will be curling in Lindsay on Christmas Day.—Lindsay Post.

THE SLEEP QUESTION

We should sleep nine hours a day
To live long, some doctors say;
Eight, say others, will suffice
To keep us from paradise
Many years; and some say seven
Keeps us longes t out of heaven.
Five a day, says Edison,
Is enough for anyone.
And it truly seems to me
Five or even two or three Hours of sleep a day, would do
Me a lengthy journey through—
If, of course, I always might
Get my reg'lar eight at night.

THE TROUBLE NOW

No more the fitful frown we wear
About the cost of living;
That's now forgot in our despair
About the cost of giving.

Again Remanded.—Edward Tighe, of Dummer, who appeared before Magistrate Edmison, a few days ago, on a charge of seduction, was brought up in the County Police Court again this morning, and was remanded until Thursday afternoon next. Several witnesses will be called, and it was because of their not being served with subpoenas that the case could not be proceeded with to-day.

Patronize Home Industry.—There is no need of sending to Toronto, or elsewhere, for showcases, or store-fixtures of any kind. Patronize the Peterborough Showcase Co., a well-equipped factory, for turning out large contracts, as well as small ones The material and workmanship are of the best. Prices are right, and terms to suit all people. Any one intending to equip their stores with showcases, wallcases, etc., for the coming Christmas trade should send in their order as soon as possible, before the rush begins and not leave everything to the last two weeks.—W. THEOBALD, manager; Factory, 709 Water St. Telephone 1153.

So Sorry.—The tender hearted old lady on a charitable visit through the convict prison, stopped for a moment to peer through the little trap in the door of one of the convicts' cells and to exchange a comforting word with the poor fellow inside. "I am so sorry for you," she said. "I suppose that you will be very thankful when the times comes for you to leave this dreadful place?" "No, mum, I shan't!" said the man with unmistakable emphasis. I'm in for life!"

Shook his Head.—A benevolent old clergyman, while walking in a mining district, came upon an aged man turning a windlass which hauled up ore from the shaft. It was a very hot day but the old man had thrown aside his hat and the sun was streaming down upon his bare head, "If you expose your head to the sun in that way," said the good parson, "your brain will be injured." But the old man only looked wearily at the speaker and then shook his head. "I wouldn't be doing this all day long if I had any brains," he said.

No Luxuries for Him.—"Yes, look at me," cried the orator, as he waxed eloquent. "Sixty years of age—never had a day's illness, and can do my four miles an hour. Why? Because I live a regular life. No luxuries for me ,no late hours. Every day, summer and winter, I went to bed at nine o'clock, got up at five, lived principallyly on porridge, worked hard from eight to one, then dinner, then an hour's walking exercise, and then ——" "I say, guv-nor," said a voice in the crowd, "what were you in for?"

More Deserving—"Good heavens!" exclaimed Mr. Brown, meeting his neighbour's son in the street. "Whatever have you been doing?" "Playing football," said the youngster. "Playing football, eh? And that is how you got that black eye?" observed Mr. B. "Yes." "If I was your father," said Brown, "I'd give you a spanking for playing football and getting a black eye like that." "Garn," said the youngster, "gie your own kid the spankin'. He's got two!"

Women Arguing.—Two Scottish women were arguing as to which was the thriftier. First Woman—"Do you see that purse? Weel, that's my first ane, an' it's as guid as the day I got it. Ye canna beat that, noo, can you?" Second Woman—"Michty me! What a poor boast! Ye ken Dugal, my husband?" "Oh ay; what aboot him?" "Wel, he's my first man, an noo you've got yer third. So dinna preach thrift to me agin."

"Quite true," the dentist said, with grace,
"Yet, though all need your skill,
You must admit I fill a place
Which no one else can fill."

Has City Negotiated With Seymour Company?

Editor Examiner:

Could you inform the ratepayers of Peterborough if the City Council, City Solicitor, Mayor, or any person on behalf of the city have ever made any request of the Seymour Power Company as to what arrangements, if any, could be made by which the city could have two or three thousand horse power for the purposes of the city at a reasonable rate? If possible, I would like this information to satisfy myself and others as to what course is best to pursue.

Yours,
RATEPAYER.

Note.—We understand that no direct communication has taken place between the city and the Seymour Power Company, but we have heard it said that the Seymour Power Company were prepared to enter into an agreement with the city, by which the city could have from one hundred to three thousand or more horse power on reasonable terms, and to be taken by the city whenever they require it, only paying for what they require, the balance to be held in reserve.—Ed. Examiner.

IMPORTANT NEW WORKS

It is stated that the Canadian Pacific Railway will this year start the erection of a new steel bridge across the north fork of the Kettle River on the boundary line of the C.P.R.

The structure will be 360 feet long and will be supported on three mammoth concrete ppiers. A big staff of men will be employed on the erection work, which is expected to extend over a year.

One of the most important events scheduled in the railway to-day is the opening of the Esquimault and Nanaimo railway between Victoria and Alberni on Vancouver Island. In building this railway the company has provided facilities for the opening of particularly rich part of Vancouver Island. Not only will this new section of British Columbia be opened to the homeseekers, the miner and the sportsman and tourist, but the transportation difficulties which heretofore have militiated against the settlement of the whole of the west coast of the island will have been removed.

Alberni possesses a splendid harbor, large coal, copper, gold, building stone limestone, marble, brick clay and fire clay, great water powers, abundance of fish unrivalled scenic attractions, a plentiful supply of game and a splendid climate. The service which is being inaugurated by the C.P.R., is a tri-weekly one.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY

"My boy Frank seemed weak-chested, and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Kings, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

"NEUTRAL" CORRECTS "ON-LOOKER" A LITTLE

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—In yesterday's Examiner "On-looker" makes some "pointed comparisons." The writer says that the religious minority has established all the things he pointed out, for the benefit of their own people. I wish to correct "On-looker" to the extent that the institutions established have not been for the exclusive benefit of the minority. From many of them of a charitable type—such as St. Joseph's Hospital, House of Providence, Orphans' Home—nobody suffering or deserving of aid is extended, but on the other hand, welcomed, and cared for. These were established and are operated without conditions that would exclude other denominations.

Yours truly,
NEUTRAL.

In Praise of Walking.—In a note on the benefits of walking, Health points out that in a brisk walk of twenty minutes or more a man exercises all the muscles of his body; he shakes the abdominal organs into useful activity; he fills his lungs with fresh, pure air, and so helps them to discharge their office of purifying the blood; he quickens and strengthens the heart action, so that the blood now well aerated in the lungs, flows in a full stream to the brain, and washes out all the poisons with which the everyday work and worry has clogged it; and at the same time the ever-changing scenes in the city streets or country roads alter the current of thought. The business man is recommended to obtain this life-giving exercise by walking to and from his office daily.

MAY HEAD ENQUIRY

Messrs. Morine, Lake and Ducharme Are Mentioned

GENERAL HOUSECLEANING

Ottawa, Dec. 21.—It is reported that the Government has determined upon the men who are to conduct the investigation into the several departments of the public service at Ottawa. The names mentioned are those of Hon. A. B. Morine, K.C., of Toronto, who will be chairman; Richard S. Lake of Grenfell, Sask., and G. N. Ducharme of Montreal. Mr. Morine is regarded as peculiarly well fitted for the work of investigation by reason of his length: experience in the administrative affairs of Newfoundland and of his high standing as a member of the Bar.

Mr. Lake represented the Saskatchewan riding of Qu'Appelle in the last Parliament, but was defeated in the September election. He is a practical farmer, with a wide knowledge of business affairs and has made a study of civil service questions.

Mr. Ducharme is a wealthy man who has had a long and creditable business career in Montreal. It is expected that Mr. Morine will be the chairman of the commission.

No authoritative announcement in regard to the work of the commission is obtainable this morning, but it is to be expected, following the attitude repeatedly taken by Mr. Borden in Parliament within the last five years that the inquiry will be wide open and that there will be time enough allowed for the commission to make the enquiry thorough and complete. The present Premier repeatedly protested, while in opposition, against the restrictions with which the previous investigations by the Courtney and Cassels commissions were circumscribed. The Courtney-Drake-Basin Commission, appointed in 1897, dealt chiefly with the Marine Department, but reported that there was no time to go into the work of the other Departments, at the same time indicating their opinion as to what an investigation into the other Departments would reveal.

The Cassels enquiry, which followed, had to do only with the work of Marine Department officials.

The probability is that the new commission will take up and complete the work begun by the other commissions. The probe will go deeper under the enlarged powers of the commission now being established. Before the adjournment of the House the Minister of Justice gave notice of a bill to amend the Enquiries Act to enable commissions to employ experts who could be entrusted with some of the detailed work of investigation. This amendment, it is believed, will bear directly upon the investigation to be made by the new commission.

To Boost Annuities.

Ottawa, Dec. 21.—Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster-General, and Hon. Geo. E. Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, have been completing arrangements during the past few days for the transfer of the annuity branch to the Postoffice Department from the Trade and Commerce. All the details have now been completed, and after Dec. 31 the annuities will be administered by the Postoffice.

It is felt that with the machinery of the postoffice at the disposal of the annuities branch and the thirteen thousand odd postmasters throughout Canada to act as agents, there should be a great increase in business.

While the annuities branch has so far been a moderate success, the expenses have been so great that it has scarcely been paying its way. Hon. Mr. Pelletier is planning an aggressive campaign for the annuities branch throughout Canada.

Settlement House for Blind.

New York, Dec. 21.—With a silver trowel, handed to him by a blind woman, President Taft laid the cornerstone yesterday afternoon of the first settlement house in the world for the blind. A crowd of several thousand persons choked the street to get a glimpse of the Presidential party.

FAVOURS A REPUBLIC

Big Official Makes an Imperial Statement to Powers

NO INTERFERENCE WANTED

Shanghai, Dec. 21.—"I am convinced that the abdication of the Emperor and the establishment of a republic is the only thing that will satisfy the people and prevent the further wholesale shedding of blood."

This statement was made last evening by Tang Shaoyi, the representative of Premier Yuan Shi Kai, after the session of the peace conference with foreign powers.

Continuing, he said: "Pekin is not aware of the depth or the extent of popular feeling in the south. Even I myself, although somewhat prepared, am astonished to find such a change from an attitude of patient forebearance in dogged patriotic determination. It now appears certainly too late to save the dynasty.

"It will be difficult to persuade Yuan Shi Kai to abandon his plan for a limited monarchy, but we must use every endeavor to secure peace and end this awful bloodshed and the suffering among my people."

Tang Shaoyi expressed the belief that the situation might have been saved at one time by a conference with the revolutionary leaders and prompt assurances of adjustment of the wrongs, but he considers that it is now too late. He is also convinced that there must be no foreign interference in the way of loans, or otherwise.

Six foreign powers, the United States, Great Britain, Japan, Germany, France and Russia, united yesterday in presenting an identical note to Tang Shaoyi, and Wu Ting Fang, Foreign Minister in the revolutionary provisional cabinet. While the exact wording of the note has not been made public, it is understood that it did not go much further than to express the good will of the Governments represented and the hope that the peace conferences would result in bringing the revolution to a close. The German consul was first to read the note, he being followed by the other consuls.

In reply, Tang Shaoyi said he hoped that the conference would be successful in restoring peace. Wu Ting Fang, in response to the consuls, said that he was a lover of peace and therefore would do his utmost to attain a settlement. "But it must be remembered," he added, "that the Chinese are fighting for freedom and good government and that hasty peace might lead to serious consequences—perhaps to another worse revolution."

The conference between the delegates of the Imperial Government and the revolutionaries was resumed in the afternoon.

Practically the whole of the session was devoted to Wu Ting Fang's speech in favor of a republic. Tang Shaoyi, whose powers are clearly limited, expressed his readiness to accept Wu Ting Fang's views, but declared that the matter was so important that he must first communicate with Pekin. He suggested, however, that a settlement be left to the National Assembly, but made no counter propositions.

Thus neither side presented a well-defined scheme and the conference was again indefinitely adjourned.

In the meantime, it is announced, the armistice has been extended to Dec. 30. A telegram from Premier Yuan Shi Kai stated that he had issued an order to the generals commanding the Imperial forces to suspend hostilities.

Russia Not Interested.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 21.—The Russian newspapers are giving small attention to the Russo-American relations. About the only article published on this subject is an interview with M. Timiriazeff, who was Minister of Commerce in the Witte Cabinet and has taken a leading part in developing Anglo-Russian commercial relations.

The former Minister of Commerce says that the treaty of 1832 is old fashioned and primitive, the principle of the most favored nations being obscurely formulated therein. Commercial treaties, however, he adds, pursue solely economic objects, never political objects. If the Jewish question served as the reason for the abrogation of the treaty, the United States, he declares, will scarcely gain its point in a new treaty.

The Moscow newspapers ignore the subject completely. A few despatches from London and one or two mail letters from occasional correspondents in America represent the sum total in the treaty question.

Indians on War Path.

Montreal, Dec. 21.—Oka reservation is to-day the scene of strife between railway workers and Indians.

"Chief" Gabriel Kennatosse, famous for his struggle with the seminarians and appeals to Ottawa and King Edward, is the leader of a malcontent band of red men some forty strong who bar the way of Canadian Northern track layers, preventing the linking up of the Ontario and St. Eustace branches over a strip of land little more than 400 yards wide.

Kennatosse, who claims the chieftainship, declares that the land is owned by himself and his followers, and declares that the Indians will not allow the railway to be laid over their land without a forcible attempt to prevent it.

The band is armed with guns, pistols and clubs, and has adopted a very defiant attitude. The railway workers are also becoming restless, and a clash is feared.

The authorities are rushing deputies to the scene.

DOG SAVES LIVES.

New York Animal Goes to Rescue of Lost Firemen.

New York, Dec. 21.—To the already long list of life-saving heroes of the fire department another new name was added last night. It was that of a dog—"Happy"—a Dalmation, which follows the apparatus to every fire.

Three firemen were saved from a burning furniture warehouse in Harlem last night through the sagacity of "Happy," which climbed a ladder three storeys to effect their rescue. The three firemen, one of them "Happy's" master, had been caught at the rear of the third floor in that dread of all firemen, the back draught, and forced to flee. The smoke was so dense that they lost their way in their search for the window, at which their ladder had been run up.

Standing near the hose cart "Happy" heard his master's cry for help, jumped for the ladder and began climbing it. Thousands of spectators watched the black and white spotted animal as he mounted rung after rung, and several firemen who had seen the dog start up the ladder and knew something must be wrong, began climbing after him. "Happy" reached the third floor window first and, poking his nose inside, he began barking. The nearly-suffocated firemen inside the building heard their company's pet and, guided by the barks, made their way through the smoke to the window.

"Happy's" master picked the dog up in his arms and tenderly carried him down to the street. Then he tied the animal to the hose cart, saying he would take no more chances of having him hurt by climbing ladders.

Steamer Companies Turned Down.

New York, Dec. 21.—The full bench of the U. S. Circuit Court yesterday overruled the demurrers interposed by the Hamburg-American Steamship Co. and other transatlantic lines, which form the "Atlantic Conference," against the Government's suit for their dissolution. The Government's contention is that the conference is by reason of an alleged pooling agreement on passenger rates, a trust in restraint of trade, and an injunction is asked to restrain the companies from further execution of the agreement.

The demurrers alleged want of equity in the Government's petition and followed closely the petitions in the Tobacco and Standard Oil cases sustained by the U. S. Supreme Court in the "light of reason" and under the "rule of reason."

Judge Noyes, who read the opinion of the full court, said the transportation of passengers between the United States and Europe form a part of the commerce of the United States with foreign nations and that Congress had the power to prohibit all contracts.

Big Cotton Strike Feared.

Liverpool, Dec. 21.—The weavers of the Helene mill at Accrington went on strike last night because of the employment of non-union labor. The strike threatens to spread to other mills in Lancashire unless the employers meet the demands of the men. On their part the mill owners threaten to retaliate by a general lockout, which will affect 100,000 cotton operatives.

WOOL IS TOO DEAR

President Taft Recommends Reduction in Tariff

FINE QUALITIES EXCLUDED

Washington, Dec. 21.—President Taft sent to Congress yesterday the long-awaited report of the tariff board on schedule K, of the Payne Tariff Act, and with it a message recommending that the rates on wool and woollens be materially reduced. The duties now are so arranged as to keep out of the United States entirely wools of finer qualities which, if imported, might be used to displace the cheaper substitutes now employed.

On raw wool, the board finds the duties higher than the difference in cost of production in the United States as compared with the cost abroad.

On tops, from which yarn is made, the present rate of duty is found to be prohibitory. On yarn, from which cloth is woven, the present duty is found to be prohibitory because it keeps out all except the finer grades.

On cloth, the present rate of duty is pronounced prohibitory on heavyweight, cheap and medium grade cloths, principally because of the specific compensatory duty which fixes a certain charge per pound before the ad valorem rate begins. It costs 100 per cent. more to make cloth from yarn in the United States than it does in England or France. The present system of fixing the same ad valorem rates of duty on different grades of fabric is condemned as unfair.

The board's figures would seem to show that the "prohibitory duties" do not affect the American consumer so much as would be inferred by the use of those words, for while the duties on sixteen samples of foreign cloth selected by the board averages 184 per cent., the actual excess of the domestic price over the foreign price was found to be 67 per cent., as the result of domestic competition.

"At the present time the industry in general is on a competitive basis," says the report.

Revision of U. S. Tariff.

Washington, Dec. 21.—Congress will actively begin consideration of tariff legislation in the committees of the two Houses immediately after the holiday recess. The committees must decide just what rates should be fixed after thoroughly scrutinizing the data with facts submitted by the tariff board in the report which President Taft submitted yesterday to both Houses of Congress.

Senator Penrose announced that he hoped the Republican Senators would be able to formulate a bill to comply with the tariff board's views. Representative Underwood said the President's message really pointed out the necessity of a great reduction in wool rates and that he had no doubt the House would carry out the suggestions made.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED
—BY—
J. W. BROWETT
Optometrist
Q. Why is it that glasses are worn so much more now than years ago?
A. Years ago the science of optics or correcting errors of sight was not understood as it is to-day; only old persons or those near-sighted wore glasses. Now we correct with lenses all errors of sight.
Q. Why is it that cheap glasses do not give satisfaction?
A. Cheap glasses are so faulty in construction and are of such poor quality that they distort the vision and cause pain in the eyes. The optical glass used by us is brilliant, clear and perfect, insuring comfort and ease to the wearer.
Q. Can my headaches be relieved with glasses?
A. A personal visit will be necessary. Let us talk it over.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 21.—In broken English, with choking sobs, Jacob Klenovic, Russian Jew, said in the police court: "I never could believe they would do anything like this in America." Klenovic had been rejected at Bridgeburg by Officer Thomas, Canadian immigration department, coming to Niagara Falls and attempted to enter the country on the G.T.R. train passing over the lower bridge. Magistrate Fraser find him $50 and costs, which was paid. He was then deported.

A CHRISTMAS BLOSSOM

A Short Story.

By Mrs. C. A. Dobbs.

It was Christmas Eve. Two ladies sat in the comfortable, old-fashioned sitting room of Blanchard Hall, a rambling ancient looking manor house in the north of England. The room which they occupied was heavily and richly furnished, and over the fireplace hung a life sized oil painting of a young man of eight-and-twenty perhaps, whose handsome, manly features bore an expression of pride, and clearly bespoke the unconquerable will of the man. But these exceptional qualities were in part atoned for by the expression of humour betrayed by the mouth and the depth of affection that looked out from the warm grey eyes. Altogether it was a face that could not be seen without awakening an interest, and one not to be easily forgotten.

The lamp on the table burned dimly, but the fire on the wide open hearth rendered every object in the room distinctly visible, while its warm glow was particularly grateful in contrast with the storm of snow and sleet that was raging without. And a pretty picture these two ladies made as the ruddy light enveloped them. The elder lady sat in a crimson arm-chair, and while her hands rested lovingly on the golden hair of the maiden, who sat at her feet on a footstool, it was evident that her thoughts were far away. The chastened expression of the delicate features framed by the silver wavelets of the hair, told powerfully of an intensity of human suffering, which words could never have described.

And thus these two sat silently listening to the fitful gusts of the wind. At length Mrs. Blanchard, with a deep sigh turned to her niece, saying, "How drearily the wind moans, dearest! It seems to make a more pitiful lament than usual. Does it not?"

"Yes, but it seems to make a fitting background for the Christmas merriment. The fury of the elements always suggests a great many thoughts to me of life and a future state. Next to His revealed Word, I think it is in nature that we can trace the character of God. It must be His severe justice that is displayed in the storm."

"As usual, Edna, puzzling over the attributes of God and revelation. I am afraid you think too much, but of two evils I suppose it is better to think too much than too little. Solitary thought strengthens the mind more than anything else, and it is this mental strength which, after religion, fits us for the battle of life. I trust you may come off more than conqueror, my child." Mrs. Blanchard leaned back and relapsed once more into her sad reverie. Edna was quite used to her habitual sadness, so she sat silently watching her, and fancied there was a deeper shade of melancholy on the gentle face than she had ever seen there before. But soon she was startled by seeing two large teardrops fall into Mrs. Blanchard's lap, followed by others in quick succession. Edna sprang to her feet. "My dear, dear Aunt," she murmured, as she wound her arms lovingly around her, "are you ill, or has anything happened to distress you?" This gentle sympathy only increased her agitation, and she leaned her head on the young girl's shoulder, sobbing hysterically as she answered, "No, darling, it is no new sorrow, but the old, old grief that has caused years of bitter suffering. I thought I had learned to control myself, but Oh!" she moaned, "this was his birth-night. This night twenty years ago my precious Harold was given to me, a Christmas gift, only to be taken from me again and cause these tears of lonely anguish." Her frame trembled with uncontrollable weeping, while Edna strove to comfort her.

"Dearest Auntie," she said, "you know all things work together for good, and our bitterest trials are sent to us in love."

"Yes, yes," interposed Mrs. Blanchard, "that may comfort others, but there is no consolation in it for me, for my sorrows are only the consequences of my own folly. There is no comfort for sorrow like mine. Oh! if I could only lie down and be at rest. I am so weary of this aching heart."

"But, Auntie dear, what should I do without you? Ever since mamma died you have been as kind to me, and dear papa left us so poor. What would have become of me, but for your generosity and love? And I know that many others love and value you. The tenants and all the poor in the village would deeply miss 'their lady,' and well they might, for you have been ministering to their wants and planning their welfare for years. When you were leaving Mrs. Moore's yesterday, it being the twentieth cottage to receive your generous Christmas package, I heard her say, 'God bless our dear lady and comfort her broken heart, and may He spare her to us for many a day.' Yours is a very useful life and you ought to wish it to be prolonged for the sake of others rather than be shortened."

"I don't do more than my duty toward them, and perhaps if I had other cares I wouldn't have given them so much of my time, besides I found that by entering into their interests I learned to dwell less on my own great loss. I think I could not live through this season of festivity were it not for the joy I were able to bring to these people. But oh! how the wind shrieks!" she continued with a shudder as the wind with an unearthly wail swept round that corner of the mansion. "I feel strangely nervous to-night. I hope my loved ones are not in danger or trouble. I wonder if both are living. I cannot but think they are." She spoke in a low tone as if to herself.

"You refer to my Uncle George and Cousin Harold, do you not?" asked Edna.

"Yes, dear, it is for my husband and son that I grieve," she answered. "You have heard all about them, Edna, have you not?"

"Mamma told me long ago that my uncle and cousin had left you soon after your marriage, but I never heard the particulars. I dreaded speaking of it to you, because any mention of them made you so unhappy, but I often wished to know."

"Strange I never told you before."

"Well, tell me about it now, dear auntie," said Edna, thinking it might do her good to confide in someone.

"Well, dear, I will tell you, for you ought to know, and I may not be with you much longer. I leave you all I possess. It will be plenty for you. Of course you have a right to know its history." She paused and looked up at the picture over the fireplace. Edna's eyes followed hers. After a minute, she said, "How handsome and fascinating he must have been, auntie, and yet somehow I feel afraid of him. You must have loved him intensely, and I am sure he was an unchanging lover."

"I thought so once, and indeed I cannot help thinking so still, in spite of what has happened, but no," she mused. "I am not necessary to his happiness as, he once said I was. He couldn't have loved me when he has done without me so long. Edna, it was his terrible pride which could not bear the slightest insult and his iron will was not to be thwarted. I am sure he must have suffered, too, for his loving heart could not forget his 'dear Winnie' so easily. He used to say he was never at rest unless I was by his side, and though he was so haughty he was ever deferential and tender to me, except on that fearful day when I was doomed to this miserable existence. But we had a quarrel before that. We were engaged at the time and were to be married in three months. An aunt of George's gave a garden party. Of course I was invited, also my cousin Harry, who was visiting us at the time. George had gone to London on business and would be away for some days. I thought it better for Harry's sake that he wouldn't be home for the party, for otherwise he would not get much of my company, and I loved him as dearly as if he were my brother. He was a dear, pleasant fellow, full of life and fun, and I had not seen him for more than a year. He had just graduated B.A. and stood first on the list of prize men, and was not only an amusing, but also an instructive companion, so I looked forward to spending a very happy day, although George was absent. When we arrived at Mrs. Stafford's you may imagine how surprised I was to meet George himself. He had never seen Harry before, and as soon as he had answered my inquiries as to his sudden appearance, I said, "Allow me to introduce to you my friend, Mr. Carlton," then turning to Harry, "Harry, Mr. Blanchard."

"George made a very slight bow, which Harry returned by a pleasant smile, bowing as he said, "I am always glad to be introduced to any of Winnie's friends, for Madcap as she is, she has good taste."

"I saw he was piqued at Harry's assumed patronage of me, and he said stiffly, "Well, as Miss Harding displays such good taste in the selection of her friends, I trust she will find you no exception to the rule, and as my aunt sent me for her shawl, I shall leave her in your care. Good morning."

"He touched his hat and turned away. 'Wait,' cried I, as I hurried to detain him, 'I want to speak to you.' He stopped and I whispered, 'I am ashamed of you for being so disagreeable, and I wanted you to be so nice to him.'

"'You are so nice to him that it will suffice for both. "Winnie," indeed,' he added with a frown. 'So he has permission to call you Winnie?' 'Of course he has,' I answered, 'Do you think no one but your august self has the right to call me Winnie?'

"'I must go,' he said, not heeding what I was saying, 'au revoir,' and he was gone.

"I turned to look for Harry, and soon saw him a short distance off, talking to Helen Stafford. 'I was just asking Miss Stafford who your stiff-loking friend is,' said he, as I joined them, 'and I am surprised to hear he is her cousin. He's a fine looking fellow, though, but abominably starchy.'

"'Take care, Mr. Carlton,' said Helen, laughing, 'you must be particularly careful when you speak of my cousin in Winnifred's presence.'

"'Yes?' queried Harry, 'does she admire him so much then?'

"'Ah!' laughed Helen, 'I see you don't know everything, Mr. Carlton, though you are so clever; as to her admiration of him, you can sound her on that point yourself, but here comes Lilian Hartford; she wants me, I know, so I must leave you.'

"'Want you? I should think I do want you,' exclaimed Lilian. 'You promised to play a game of croquet with us half an hour ago, and we have been waiting for you ever since.' Then turning to me, 'Why, where have you been, Winnifred? I didn't see you before.' I replied that we had not long arrived. 'It is so selfish of you to keep Mr. Carlton all to yourself,' she whispered. Then aloud to Harry, 'You are so devoted to your charming cousin, Mr. Carlton, that you have neither eyes nor ears for anyone else.'

"'I plead guilty,' he answered, 'but I have not been here long, and have plenty of time to redeem myself yet.'

"'See that you make good use of it, then. But come,' she said to Helen, 'they are waiting to begin the game. I will see you again when this game is finished,' she said as they left us.

"'So you admire him, Winnie?' asked Harry when we were alone, but seeing my crimson face, he added, 'I need not ask, your face answers my question fully. Well, well, Winnie, he looks capable of winning any woman's heart, but I wish for your own sake, little sister, that he were of a less haughty disposition.'

"'But he is so good and so very clever. Wait till you know him better and then you will like him,' said I.

"'Very likely I shall,' he answered, 'but he isn't what I would choose for you. But surely you are not engaged,' he added quickly, 'you are so young.'

"'It is likely I shall be married in September,' I answered as courageously as I could. 'I shall be seventeen then.'

"'Seventeen!' he repeated. 'A great age certainly. But tell me, who is this lucky fellow to whom you will so soon commit your life's happiness?'

"I told him that he was George Blanchard, the master of Blanchard Hall. I said I had often spoken to him of my dear cousin Harry, but perhaps he had forgotten the surname.

Harry laughed, and said:

"'So your liberty is gone now, Miss Winnifred; you must be careful of your actions.'

"The next morning I received a note from George reproaching me for flirting so shamefully with that 'pretty-faced boy.' I answered it immediately, telling him that he might call it flirting or any name he chose, but if it was flirting I intended flirting while I lived, and I was my own mistress, at least at present. I would not satisfy his exacting temper with explanations or apologies, and that

Tells of the Wonderful Benefits Obtained From

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Like many another Newfoundlander living far from doctors, Mr. Stone feels unbounded gratitude for the benefits obtained from the use of Dr Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

For years he had suffered from a congested condition of the liver and kidneys, with headaches, backaches, pains in limbs and body. Words fail to describe his sufferings as well as the gratitude he wants to express for the cure.

Mr. Alex. J. Stone, West Point, Nfld., writes: "I suppose you thought I had forgotten all about you when I got Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, but I haven't. You must excuse mistakes, for like many Newfoundland men, I have not much education, but I want to thank you many times for your medicine.

"I cannot tell you what I suffered from liver and kidney derangements, indigestion and constipation, nor can I find words to express how much good this medicine has done me. I feel better than I have for ve years and have given some of these pills to friends, who tell me they have done them a wonderful lot of good. I want to express my heartfelt gratitude for the benefit derived from the great medicine."

was the last I heard of him for more than a week.

"One evening, ten days after, Mrs. Stafford's party, I sat in the garden thinking. It was a lovely June twilight, but my heart was heavy. I had not seen or heard from George, and felt sad and dispirited. I thought my beautiful dream of happiness was over, and that henceforth I must go through life alone. I bowed my head on my hands and sobbed aloud. 'Oh, I thought he had more confidence in me than to suspect my constancy, but I will not offer a single word of explanation. Not if I were to die. I will not humble myself. He doubts me. I will never explain.'

"'My darling, all is explained,' said a low voice close to me. I looked up, and George was standing beside me. He looked pale and sad. This sudden appearance had startled me, but I drew myself up, and though my heart was beating with delight at meeting him, I brushed the tears from my eyes and with an assumed coldness asked haughtily, 'What is explained?'

"He fixed his deep gray eyes on me for an instant; then, taking my hands in each of his, said, 'My own Winnie, we have both suffered enough. Will you forgive my hastiness, and try to forget the mistake I made? I only heard half an hour ago that he was your cousin, the "dear Harry" you so often spoke of. I don't remember having heard the surname. Winnie, I am ashamed of myself for having doubted you. But it wasn't that so much as the reply you sent that annoyed me. I asked you to explain. You refused to do so, and told me that you "intended to flirt all your life or do anything else you liked, without asking anyone's permission." My Winnie, what could I do?'

"'Stay away and never come near me again,' I answered, bitterly, trying to withdraw my hands, but he held them firmly as he said:

"'My poor darling, I can never forgive myself for having given you pain; nay, do not deny having suffered,' he continued, when I began to say that perhaps I had suffered less than he thought. 'I felt the separation too keenly myself to believe that statement, even if I hadn't been an accidental listener to your soliloquy. But, Winnie, say you will forgive me. I can never know happiness till you tell me you do.'

"Of course I could not resist any longer, but sobbed and wept, and the next minute I was smiling through the tears for our peace was made, and once more I was happy. He offered me his arm, and as we walked toward the house he said:

"'Winnie, I want you to promise me that if ever I allow myself to be blinded again by temper or pride, you will not oppose or defy me, but that you will explain or yield to me, and remember that the slightest concession on your part, no matter what may come between us, will bring me to your feet, but I must not be opposed or defied. I ask you to promise this, because I fear my own temper. My whole heart is yours—my love cannot change—but my pride cannot brook defiance and my will is unbending. Will you promise? And I solimnly declare that the offence, real or unreal, whatever it may be, will be instantly forgiven, and I will be ready to lay down my life for you.'

"I promised earnestly that I would try and not allow my wilfulness to give any more trouble.

"'The slightest word will be sufficient to win the day for you,' said he, 'but try to bear with me!'

"'It is dreadful that you were born with such a hateful, proud temper,' I said. 'It is my misfortune,' was his answer, 'but you have the cure in your own hands.'

"Yes, Edna," continued Mrs. Blanchard, "I had the cure in my own hands and could have done anything I liked with him, but I didn't exercise my power for good and am now reaping the bitter consequences of my folly. When I think of those happy days of my girlhood I cannot realize that they have passed away forever. You see me now, an old woman; my face once so fair, deeply wrinkled with the lines grief has left; my once golden brown hair, white as snow, and you cannot think that I was once a happy, light-hearted girl, gayer far than you Edna. And yet, I was only thirty-eight my last birthday. Twenty-one years ago he brought me here. We were married in September on my seventeenth birthday. How bright the world looked to me then! I well remember the first time I saw this rambling old mansion. As we drove up the avenue, lined on each side with those grim poplars, I whispered, nestling close to him, 'It is so gloomy looking.'

"'It looks more so in the autumn than at any other time,' he answered, 'but no place could ever appear gloomy to me while you are with me.' I felt the reproach his words conveyed, and answered quickly, 'And, no matter how dull it may be I cannot but be joyful while I am with you.'

"When we entered we found the servants ranged on either side of the entrance hall to receive us, and as George said, 'Mrs. Blanchard, your future mistress,' the women courtesied and the men bowed, while a murmur of welcome ran along the lines. Many of them came forward, and, as I shook hands with them, some of them raised my hand to their lips. Then we went to dinner, and afterwards George took me all over the building to show me my 'new kingdom' as he said. After we had made the survey, he threw open the door of the large drawing-room, which was brilliantly lighted, and had been furnished in the most modern style. 'Now, all that you have seen is yours and you are mine, my very, very own,' he said, kissing me again and again.

"We spent the evening very happily. He had purchased a beautiful new piano for me, and I played, and we sang duets together. He was a very fine singer and a good musician. We played duets on the piano, or I would accompany his rare violin. Sometimes he read aloud to me, and the most barren wilderness could not be dull with such a companion. The next evening we had a large dinner party, and so the days passed quickly and pleasantly by. We received company now and then and sometimes went out, but were oftenest alone. I do not say that I had no annoyances, but when I met with any vexation I went straight to my lover husband, sure of his tender sympathy, and he always smoothed the rough places and made life seem so like a beautiful dream that I almost forgot it was only a weary pilgrimage to the promised Rest. And so the blissful days flew by and again the bleak winter winds whistled round our home, but no thought of gloom entered my heart. My precious Harold was welcomed with the 'Holly berries and mistletoe boughs.' He was the sunlight of this house. The touch of his waxen fingers and his merry prattle was all the pleasure we seemed to require. Not a cloud marred our horizon. George could not be more tender, more considerate, more loving. Harold grew lovelier and more interesting every day; but the darkness that turned my day of joy into the blackness of despair was coming swiftly.

"How shall I tell you of the slight quarrel which has caused nearly eighteen years of bitter sorrow. Our beautiful boy was nearly three years old. George was devoted as ever, but the evil could not long be delayed.

"One morning when Harold was out for his morning walk, and George and I were in the sitting-room, he reading aloud from the morning paper while I was engaged with some sewing, a servant entered with a letter for me. It was from Lilian Hartford, telling me of her intended marriage, and asking my opinion upon several matters connected with it. When I finished reading it, George said:

"'How is it that letter didn't come with the others this morning?' I replied that I didn't know, but it had been delayed. 'Who is your correspondent?' he asked.

"'Oh, it is from a friend,' I answered carelessly.

"'Who is your friend, then?' he asked rather impatiently.

"'I saw that he thought I was trying to evade him, which, of course, I was not. So, wishing to tease him, I said: 'It is a secret and you mustn't be so prying.'

"'You may as well tell me at once, Winnie, for I will know the name of your correspondent.'

"'You may as well make up your mind not to know, for I will not tell you.'

"'Don't say that you will not,' he said quietly, but firmly, 'for I have said that you shall.'

"'And I have told you that I will not,' I answered, my temper roused by his authoritative tone.

"'Winnie, don't say that to me,' said he commandingly.

"'But I do say it to you.' I was crimson with vexation at his assumption of authority.

"'Hand me that letter,' he demanded, extending his hand.

"'I will do no such thing,' I returned hotly.

"'Do you dare to refuse me?' he exclaimed, white with anger. 'Hand me that letter instantly.'

"'Indeed, you will never see it,' I answered in a contemptuous tone, at the same time putting the letter into my pocket, and placing my hand over it.

"'Do you intend to defy me?' he asked in a husky voice. 'Once more, give me that letter.'

"'I tell you once for all that I will not give it to you.' I turned towards the window, and he walked over to the fireplace and stood looking into the fire with his elbow resting on the mantel, his brow dark and his lips firmly set.

"Just then the door opened and in bounded Harold, fresh from his morning walk. I seem to see him now as he stood in the doorway, his hat thrown back and his golden curls falling carelessly round his face. The early autumn wind had brightened the glow of his cheeks, and his blue eyes sparkled with merriment. It was indeed a beautiful picture.

"'Harold,' I said, taking his hand, 'look at Papa, how naughty he is. He is in a temper and ought to be ashamed of himself.' At that George crossed the room and laying his hand on my arm said in a voice trembling with suppressed passion:

"'You will rue the day on which you insulted me in the presence of my child,' and taking Harold with him he left the room.

"When they were gone I tried to occupy myself with my work, but it was of no use. I could not fix my mind on anything. Then I began to think of our quarrel. 'I didn't think he could be so hateful,' I mused, 'but he'll be sorry enough before long, and I won't forgive him very easily. He must apologize first, anyway. I suppose he is sorry by this time, but indeed I won't let him know I care.'

"At luncheon he never spoke a word to me. He brought Harold in by the hand and sat him beside himself. I glanced towards him once or twice, but he didn't notice me. He looked pale and determined, and when the meal was over he took Harold with him to the library and remained there till dinner time. I went back to the sitting room and tried to read, but could not keep my mind on the book. I could do nothing but think over the events of the morning. The expression of his face troubled me. I couldn't tell why. 'It is time he was over his ill humour,' I thought, 'but I suppose he will ask me to forgive him soon,' but I was greatly mistaken. And the hours slipped by; still he didn't come. Then I remembered what he had said long ago—that a single word of mine would bring him to his feet at once. 'I will wait a little longer,' I said, 'and see if he won't make the first advance,' and so the long hours dragged themselves on. I dressed for dinner, and when I entered the dining-room I started when I saw him (he was already there with Harold); he looked so pale and haggard. 'He has suffered enough,' I thought; 'I will forgive him now as soon as he says he is sorry.'

"Not a word was spoken by either of us, and except when Harold spoke the silence was unbroken. Once he leaned over for me to kiss him; then he put his dear little arms about my neck, murmuring 'Dear mamma.' After dinner I turned to leave the room. 'Stay,' said George, 'I wish to speak to you.' Then opening the door, he said, 'I want you in the library.'

"He passed on and I followed, thinking he was about to make the necessary apologies, and determining how I should receive them.

"When we reached the library, as he held the door for us to enter, the light fell full upon his face, and his expression showed me the mistake I had made in thinking he would attempt reconciliation. There was no sign of relenting there — his aspect was severe, if not cruel.

"He walked quickly to his secretary, and taking from it some papers handed them to me, saying:

"'You will find there all the directions you will require when I am gone.' Then he spoke of several things to be attended to, and gave a few directions about the management of affairs in his absence. How I wished he would tell me how long he intended to be away, but my pride would not let me ask him.

"When he had finished speaking he opened the door for me to go. Then he closed it behind me. I rushed along the hall and upstairs to my dressing room.

"The Bible lay open on the table and my eye fell on the words I had read that morning, 'Be ye clothed with humility.' Was I so clothed? Oh, no! and in an instant I was on my knees sobbing out my misery and seeking forgiveness. I remained there for some time, then arose refreshed and strengthened. My proud will was broken, but I felt happier than I had done since morning.

"'I will go now and ask him to forgive me and tell him how sorry I am,' I said, wiping away the tears as I left the room. I ran along the corridor and downstairs. When I reached the lower hall I met Stewart, George's valet. 'Where is your master?' I asked.

"'He is gone, ma'am,' he replied, 'and Master Harold with him. They left by the night express.'

"'Gone!' I exclaimed, as a glimmering of the truth flashed on me. Then a sudden weakness seized me and I fell to the ground. For twenty-four hours I lay quite insensible. On my return to consciousness I found Miss Clarkson, our clergyman's daughter, sitting beside me. 'We are so glad you know us once more,' she said. 'We have been watching you for hours.'

"My strength returned slowly, but days passed before I could leave my room, and even then it was only by a great effort that I did so, but I was in a fever of anxiety to visit the study to see if he had left a note or word of farewell for me. I spent an hour looking over his papers, and besides some legal documents, among them a deed which made the whole of this property unconditionally mine, I found a small paper addressed to me. On opening it I found it to be written in Latin, of which the meaning was in English. 'A wife who defies and insults her husband neither respects or loves him, and could not prove a good guardian for his child. Separation is preferable.'

"I realized the terrible truth, and the objects in the room swam before my eyes. I sat as in a stupor all night, but did not sleep. Day after day passed and I took no interest in anything. Gradually my hair whitened. I became feebler every day, and I seemed suddenly to have grown old.

"But soon I saw the selfishness of my grief, and praying earnestly for strength I fought against my sorrow and roused myself to care for others. I taught the children of the tenantry, nursed them when they were sick, and did my best to sympathise with their joys and sorrows. My prayer was answered; I was enabled to rise from my lethargy and though at times I was prostrated by my great affliction, still I was enabled to live a useful life. To-night my memory goes back to the past, my heart seems breaking. Oh, when will rest come? How long, how long?

She ceased speaking and heavy sobs convulsed her frame. Edna strove in vain to comfort her; her anguish was uncontrollable.

"Auntie, dear, for my sake calm yourself," she cried, as she threw her arms about her.

At that moment a loud knocking at the front entrance resounded through the building. They listened intently.

"Who can it possibly be so late? It is after ten o'clock," said Edna. There was a sound of heavy footsteps in the entrance hall, and in another instant the door was thrown open and two gentlemen entered. The elder, handsome and commanding looking, the younger, tall and slight, with fair hair and dark blue eyes, with features of the Grecian type, though not lacking character.

"Mrs. Blanchard sprang tremblingly to her feet, murmuring faintly, "Harold! George!" She tottered, but was caught in the strong arms of her husband.

Christmas morning dawned calm and bright. The storm had spent itself and a fairy frostwork gleamed white on every branch and shrub. Edna rose early and tiptoed into her beloved aunt's dressing room with the gifts that were the tributes of her reverential affection, and were intended to bring gladness and loving smiles even to this chastened one on the blessed Christ Day. The morning sun struggled through the half open blinds and fell on a kneeling figure, resting lovingly on the bowed head. There was no movement. Edna drew near with a strange awe, and looked at her. She gazed on the face of the dead. The tired spirit had entered into rest, the weary heart had ceased to beat.

"So He giveth His beloved sleep."

It was early summer. The bright rays of the setting sun were fading in the west. The silent stars peeped out one by one. Soon the moon arose slowly, and her silvery radiance lighted up the front of Blanchard Hall, and lingering on the balcony where two persons were standing. The one was a fair, fragile girl, dressed in deep mourning, the other a noble-looking youth. Her head was bowed and her cheeks flushed to a bright pink. She was leaning against one of the pillars and he held her hand. "Cousin Edna," he was saying, "say darling that we may be more than cousins. No one can ever be half so dear to me as you are. Tell me that you will be mine for ever. Do say yes, love."

"Yes," she whispered softly.

"And this shall seal it," he answered, kissing her on the lips. Then taking a ring from off his hand, placed it on her finger, saying as he did so, "My mother's engagement ring. God grant our future may be brighter than hers."

"Amen," was the low response.

"All that devoted love can do to make it bright I will do," said he.

"I love you better than pride or self, Edna, and I owe you a debt I can never repay for your devotion to my poor dear mother. I was at school and college all my life and knew nothing of her. My father never spoke of her. So you were the daughter of her cousin, and consequently my second cousin. But you called her aunt."

"She was more than aunt; she was a mother to me," she replied through her tears.

The door leading on the balcony opened, and a gentleman stepped out.

"Papa," said Harold, "will you accept my Edna as your daughter?"

"Harold," he answered, "my wish for you is realized." Then drawing Edna towards him, he kissed her fondly and said, "God bless you my children. May you be spared to comfort a heart-broken man. You were her ministering angel, Edna. My life shall be spent in trying to show you my gratitude. My punishment is very heavy, my haughty pride is brought low. Pray for me, my children, that my sin may be pardoned, and that I may join her in the land where there shall be no more sin, neither sorrow nor crying."

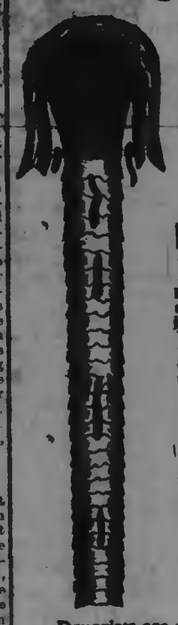
HUMAN HAIR ROOT

Showing Dandruff Germs At Work



WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR REMEDY

Kills the Dandruff Germs and Makes the Hair Grow

Restores Gray Hair to Natural Color

FEW people are aware of the number of Dandruff Germs that infest the human hair and scalp. The germs which locate themselves in the follicle or sack which envelopes the root of the hair, spend a lazy existence in sucking up the juices which should go to keep life and strength in the hair. These germs cannot be seen by the naked eye, but with a magnifying glass of from 300 to 400 diameters the species of this hair destroyer may be seen in masses, clinging to the hair.

DANDRUFF, ITCHING OF THE SCALP AND FALLING HAIR ARE A SURE SIGN OF DESTRUCTIVE GERMS.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy not only kills the dandruff germs and prevents baldness, but it also restores faded and gray hair to natural color.

Don't Experiment With Old Fashioned Hair Dyes

but save your hair and restore it to natural color and luxuriance by using Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy.

Druggists are authorized to sell Sage and Sulphur under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

TREACHERY of the LITTLE BLACK MAN'S TRIBESMEN

After Viewing a Wild Religious Orgy in the African Wild, the White Trader and His Faithful Retainer Found Themselves in a Trap. Out of Which They Had to Fight Their Way

PERILOUS ADVENTURES TOLD BY AND OF LIVING PERSONS

HARRY W. HARTIN, at present in this country, who relates the following story, is an African trader and adventurer of twenty-five years' experience. From the Cape to the southern edge of the Desert of Sahara Mr. Martin is familiar with the jungle and its customers. In that territory there is scarcely a native or a white man who does not know him either personally or by name.

N the monotonously rolling Kafue River country in Northwestern Rhodesia I was trading for grain and otter skins about three years ago. Incidentally I was picking up a few nuggets of gold when the opportunity afforded, but that is beside the story. At Broken Hill I had purchased calico, salt, toys and other trinkets which tempt and delight the hearts of the black men, and I expected to exchange them in the forest country for things the savages consider baubles, but for which civilized folk will sell their lives and souls.

Late one evening when the sun was beginning to pink the distant mountains, which always draws me as a magnet draws a bit of iron filing, we followed the river round a bend into the fresh, cool forest. The pleasant dampness refreshed us and the blacks, trekking in single file, started crooning one of their wild, myth-old songs.

Forest signs led me to believe that there was a kraal, or village, not far distant, and, although it was darkening, we pushed on. All day we had skirted the Kafue River, which is dirty and not at all pretty. The hills round which it winds are low and what vegetation they exhibit is burned and dried. Sometimes there are villages, but they are poor and unclean, the inhabitants living mostly by means of a few scrawny cattle, starving almost to death on the yellow, parched meadows that roll monotonously for miles to the under edge of the great blue mountains.

It is wonderful how quickly the aspect of a country will change. In an hour we had passed from a parched, thirsty semi-desert into a luxuriant tangle of not overlarge trees, palms, and all the coarse, heavy undergrowth that goes to make the jungle all but impenetrable.

The region was new to me, but one of my black boys told me that there were many "bad" savages there. To my mind all savages were bad savages, but I had found in years of trading that when he believes he will be the gainer by it the savage is as eager to be friendly as is the civilized man in the same circumstances.

So I didn't worry when we came upon a little island lying midway of the stream where it widened into a sort of lagoon and saw that it was inhabited. Making a trumpet of my hands I called to an old man sitting on a stump gazing into the water as though it was not too muddy to see the bottom and the queer hoglike fish that swam there.

With unblinking eyes the old man turned and stared at me where I stood on the river bank. I don't know what it was about the eyes that even at that distance I did not like, but my impulse was to give him the contents of my four-bore rifle in the vitals. It is strange the animal instinct a man develops after years in the forest. Had I been unfettered by the shackles of civilization I would have killed the old man on the spot, throttled him with my own hands or ploughed into his chest with an assegai. That might have been barbaric, but it would have saved much trouble later and would probably have prevented further bloodshed.

After regarding me stolidly for a time the old man on the stump made a conventional sign which means, "What do you want?"

I was not familiar with the dialect of this tribe, the Mashujulumbi, but with the help of others which were similar and the sign language, which is almost universal among savages, I told him that I had many things which would please his chief, that I carried presents for the tribe and magical contrivances, all inhabited by good spirits, and that I wished to trade them for skins and grain.

The old man said never a word. He slid off the stump and disappeared into the tall grass, leaving a wriggly, rustling wake behind him. He was short and bent with age and the grass hid him completely from view.

For a long time I waited his return. Just as I was becoming impatient one of my boys—Jack I called him, because his real name took seconds to pronounce—pointed out a live, advancing motion in the grass. It looked as if many men were approaching and I cocked my four-bore ready for necessity. Like a lot of snakes the natives were wriggling along under cover, and not until the very edge of the island was reached did they make an appearance. The chief was there and twelve of his warriors. Sliding out from the reeds, they stalked down to the water's edge and I told the chief that I wished to be transported to the island to trade with him.

"We cannot trade to-night," he said in the dialect. "We make a feast."

"Then I have come at a good time," I replied, "for I may have the honor of presenting you a few small gifts before the great feast."

"That is all very well," said the chief. "I may accept your gifts, but I cannot trade to-night."

I assured his majesty that I was in no hurry to do business and that if he would send canoes to take me and my black men to the island we would be content to rest until the morning after paying our respects to him.

The chief growled some kind of a command and his warriors disappeared again into the long grass. Half an hour later fifteen canoes glided noiselessly round the extremity of the island and were beached near the spot where we had set down our stock.

The men paddling the canoes were taciturn on the way to the island, but once there the chief received us with ostentatious hospitality. He he embraced with oily, tattooed arms, and though it disgusted me there was nothing to do but to endure. In return I fastened a great string of many colored beads about his neck. That pleased him and he led me to his hut, where he offered me a gourd of twala, which is native wine. I thanked him, but declined the vile stuff, forestalling offence on his part by saying that I would not suffer myself to touch the wine of hospitality until the night, when the ceremony had begun.

This pleased him even more, and he asked to see the presents I had brought him. Jack brought them into the hut and spread before him a number of almost valueless trinkets, which made his eyes bulge with cupidity.

Meanwhile my carriers had pitched camp some little distance from the village and I went there for supper. It required delicacy to decline the chief's importunate requests that I dine with him, but again I saved his vanity by saying that I would wait until the great feast.

At about ten o'clock the chief sent for me. Between two gaunt, knotted savages I walked to a clearing in the heart of the island and took my place beside him on a great rock, whence we could look over the heads of the tribe assembled there and watch the fire in the centre of the circle.

Great halves of sheep and goats were roasting there and black, shining, wet bodies were scurrying around the fire, turning the meat and preparing the feast. My blacks eyed the meat hungrily and ate until they were well nigh gorged. I was not afraid of that, but I had cautioned them not to touch the terrible twala, and I saw that they lived up to the letter of my instructions. They did not need over much urging, as they were thoroughly afraid of the savages and had repeatedly warned me against surprise. The Mashujulumbi had an unsavory reputation. That a man was a stranger was enough to incur enmity, and blacks and whites alike were liable to attack from them unless, as in our case, they wished to trade.

There was a bright full moon shining, but from time to time heavy, swirling clouds passed over it, plunging the scene into darkness except for the lurid glow of the smoking fire. Round the clearing tall, tufted trees reared skyward and framed the picture in black, bowl-like walls.

When they had filled themselves with meat the savages set up a low, guttural singing, which sounded to my ears like groaning from pain. Then an old woman, bent, haggard and decrepit looking, swerved out from the mass of natives and began half gliding, half hobbling round and round the fire. Almost imperceptibly the tempo of the groaning song became faster, and as it did so the old hag increased the speed of her evolutions. For perhaps five minutes she sidled and danced about the blaze.

Then some one in the crowd handed her a large gourd filled with twala. She put it to her lips and swallowed enough to kill a white man. The chanting grew louder and wilder, and as the liquor reached the woman's brain she forgot her lameness, her debility vanished, and with her arms waving wildly, the gourd swinging from her left hand, she prowled and ran round and round the fire. From time to time, with a weird gesture, she raised the gourd and drank. Wilder and wilder grew the chant, and wilder and wilder became the woman, until at last, with a scream that pierced the heavy, low pitched singing, she hurled the remainder of the liquor, gourd and all, into the fire.

That was the signal for the release of pandemonium. Shrieks and hoots filled the air. All produced gourds of their own, and men carried great skin sacks of the deadly twala into the clearing, where all could help themselves.

The Glaring Old Man.

The chief pressed me to drink, and out of courtesy I was obliged to, but the liquor almost turned my stomach. Twala does not take long to act, and the savages soon began to feel the first heaviness of stupor. I knew what these orgies sometimes developed into and I hoped that drunkenness would put an end to this one, but an interest began to tug an old man, the same whom I had first encountered sitting on the stump, detached himself from the black seething mass and stood near the fire, so near that it seemed to me he must be consumed. Waving his arms and raising his hands for silence, he yelled and cried at the savages, driving them into silence. The effects of the twala aided him, and men and women soon fell back, forming a circle.

There in the midst of it all stood the old man of the Mashujulumbi. The same terrible eyes which had so strangely stirred me when I first encountered him sitting on the stump, glared and blinked horrifyingly, weirdly in the firelight.

I felt that evil was brewing. Something within me, some reflex, urged me and tormented me to go down into that mob of half drunk men and women and kill the old man. My suspicions, my vague fears of what was to come were as yet half formed, but those eyes were enough to madden me. I was conscious only of a tremendous, primate passion to close them, close them forever.

The red flare from the fire wrapped him about and smoke swirled him in black. I wished with all my heart that the flames themselves would reach out and lunch him where he stood.

Without warning there came a wild, unhuman cry from some woman in the crowd. In answer the old man gestured strangely, meaningly, with his arms and began to chant a low, harmonic slogan. There was something about the rhythm and the savage harmony that made it different from the chant the crowd had sung or the wild song of the woman.

There was something which seemed in some unexplainable way connected with the look in those eyes. It expressed the same things as did the eyes, and they were not pretty things.

I decided it, and my black boys did, too. They herded together like sheep and worked their way close to me.

As the old man began to chant those watching seemed to become alert. The stupor of the twala fell from them. With a restless, insistent motion they began to sway on their widely spread feet. Then the old man began a queer, birdlike dance, and the black, shining bodies, leaning toward the centre of the circle, swayed in a wider and wider arc. With suppressed voices two or three joined in the chant, then others began to sing, and voices were raised louder and louder. I could not understand the words, but my experience with savages was such that I recognized it at once as a war chanty.

I turned to the chief, or headman, to ask why, in times of peace, the war dance should be performed. Before I could address him he had slipped from my side and joined the old man in the weird dance. That was the signal for every man of the tribe to run into the circle and spin and leap about the fire, which was supplied with wood by old women, drunk with twala. The young women, forming a circle about the dancers, sang and swayed, their all but naked bodies gleaming and swinging in the strange lurid red light.

And ever the twala was used freely, the girls running in among the men and holding gourds to their lips as they danced. The excitement caused a different effect from the fiery liquid than had been shown earlier in the evening. As the men became drunker, instead of growing stupid they became wilder and wilder and danced faster and more furiously. At times some fell exhausted, but women ran to them and beat them with the flat sides of their own weapons until they leaped to their feet and plunged again into the whirl of bodies.

"Master," said Jack, sidling close to me, "there will be trouble. This I know to be the dance of the great war god, and to-night he will speak to his people, telling them what they should do to gain his favor."

I had expected some such ramarole, but I had no intention of leaving the island until the trading was done. I calmed the fears of my men by promising extra presents at the end of the trip, and we sneaked away to our own camp in a different part of the island.

My nerves are good and I slept soundly, waking early, as I was anxious to trade and travel further. Rousing the men I sent Jack to the kraal to make preparations. He returned hurrying, almost breathless.

"No men!" he ejaculated.

"No men?" I repeated, not grasping his meaning.

"No," he said. "Only women. Men are all gone."

What devilment could this mean? I wished again that I had killed the old man there on the stump, for it was he who had stirred the savages into the war dance after they were all but stupefied.

"Gone where?" I demanded.

"I can't tell you," said Jack.

I went with him back to the kraal. Naked children were playing in the filth and women squatted before the entrances to some of the miserable huts. But there was not a sign of the men. Even the old men had disappeared.

This condition of affairs was not at all reassuring. I knew that had the men drunk themselves into a stupor they would have been lying about the clearing where we had left them performing their wild dance. With several of my black boys I hurried to the spot, but there was not a sign of humanity there. When I returned to the village I found Jack conversing with the same old man who had seemed at the root of trouble all along.

"Where are all the tribe?" I asked brusquely, longing to empty my four-bore into him.

"Gone," he replied.

"Gone where?" I demanded.

The fellow only stared at me insolently. Suddenly, before I could have stopped him, Jack raised a heavy club he carried and swung at the old man's head. The latter was spry for his years and ducked so cleverly that the momentum of the blow carried Jack almost off his feet. Before he had regained his equilibrium the old man had fled, wriggling away in the tall grass like a serpent.

I upbraided Jack for his ferocity.

"Master," he explained, "the old man is a snake. He try make me and other black boys steal all your wealth to give tribe. We no savages. We stay with you."

That reassured me of the faithfulness of my servants, and I thanked Jack in terms he could appreciate. He had been unable to learn from the old man where the men of the tribe had gone.

Seeking the Tribesmen.

Taking possession of one of the huts where we could be somewhat protected if necessity arose, I sent fifteen of the boys to look for the missing tribesmen. They returned in about half an hour to say that the Mashujulumbi were hiding in the long grass down near the place where the canoes were kept. The boys told them that we were ready to trade and that I was anxious to leave the island, but the chief had sent back word that I would have to make additional presents to him if I wished to do business. This was in the nature of extortion, and I could not submit to it, so I told Jack and several other boys to bring the chief to me if he could be induced to come peacefully.

In a few minutes they returned with him, still half drunk from the twala.

"I must trade or leave the island," I told him.

The chief blinked at me.

"The best thing for the white men and his servants, who are old women, is that they should leave the island and their wealth behind them."

"I cannot leave the island," I replied, "for I have no canoes."

"My warriors will set you on the shore," he replied, "if you will leave all the calico, salt and other things behind."

At that I knew what his game was and decided to fight him by his own methods. I whispered to Jack to take some of my men and slip round behind him while I engaged him in an argument. If I could capture him I would be able to reach a satisfactory agreement with the natives.

Jack understood and was trying to execute my orders when I noticed that same live, wriggling motion in the grass which I had seen the day before. I was trapped and I knew it. Keeping my eyes on the wavering grass I hissed a warning to Jack and the other men.

"What shall we do?" I asked.

Jack's advice coincided with my own inclinations.

"These bad savages," he said, "will rush us and kill us if we do not rush them first."

It takes time to tell about it, but it took no time then to pass the word to all my servants to load the rifles which six of my men carried and to leap forward at that snaky ripple in the grass. How many were there we did not know, but the emergency called for action. There was less chance of being annihilated if we took the offensive than if we stood there and waited for the attack. The African is not fond of fighting the white man if the latter gets the jump on him.

With a yell that must have startled the forest, my boys leaped without warning from where they stood, and, brandishing small, round shields which they carried, hurled their assegais into the grass. Those who had guns used them, and I think that some of the islanders were killed.

Fast and furious as had been our attack, the chief, who had stood not more than forty feet from me, escaped unscathed and joined his men. The instant after my men had sprung to the attack, a line of dusky, lithe bodies wriggled out of the grass and catapulted at us. Assegais spun by us and a few bullets from old bell shaped muskets hurtled past our ears, but not one of us was struck. We expected a hot fight, but it was over in seconds. The natives ran before us as soon as we took the initiative. Had we waited a second longer their attack would have come first and we would have been wiped out of existence.

As fast as we could, we pressed after the enemy in their flight, but they were able to wriggle through thickets and negotiate the fields of long, stiff grass much faster than we, and by the time we reached the canoes they were gathered about them. There seemed to be hundreds of them, and there were only forty-one of us, so I thought it best not to attack.

Holding my gun in readiness, I walked out in front of my own men, and asked the chief if he would now do business. He refused absolutely and warned me again to leave the island. I did not see how our little band was to hold out against so many, and decided that it would be best to swim the river and return with help for my property.

When I explained this to Jack, he turned green with fright.

"Master, look!" he said hoarsely, and pointed to what appeared to be a log lying half way up the river bank some fifty yards away. "You shoot him," he said.

I knew what he meant immediately, but at that distance my eyes could not be sure whether it was a log or a crocodile, so I fired.

A great brown beast rolled and scrambled into the water. It was a crocodile. No sooner had the carcass splashed under the surface than the water foamed and swirled with the surging bodies of the great brute tearing at the dead of their own kind. That finished me. I have faced death in many forms but I am afraid of crocodiles.

I did not lose another second. With a shout to my boys, I emptied my four-bore into the midst of the savages, aiming at the old man whom I blamed for all my trouble. I missed him, but hit others. Then, seizing an assegai from one of my men, I led the attack on the natives.

They stood for a moment hurling spears which whistled and whizzed by our ears, but of the first volley none struck us. The old man had been in the front rank of the natives and I had aimed directly at him as had Jack and several of the others, but, as though he bore a charmed life, he was uninjured.

With the assegai I had snatched I lunged at him and grazed his arm, but before I could repeat the blow two savages were upon me. One grappled with me, having no spear, and threw me to the ground. The other would have finished me with his assegai but as we rolled and pummelled there Jack ran in and used his short, wicked knife. The man whose arm were crushing my ribs shuddered and slipped away from me.

We had killed several of the islanders without sustaining any injuries to speak of ourselves, and and deuly the enemy broke, scampering into the tall grass around the canoes. From there they hurled assegai at us with alarming precision. We were in a tight place, but we had had time to reload the rifles.

I and seven others who carried firearms dropped back a little from our main force and, standing on stumps and stones, out of range of the assegais, we poured as rapid a fire as we could into the savages in the grass. Under cover of this our own men crawled along the ground toward the enemy. They could not see our men by reason of the very grass which the had hidden in themselves.

When our men were within a few yards of the enemy we ceased firing and, with a yell, my black boys darted into the grass, striking right and left with their assegais. The islanders were completely bewildered. Besides, they had lost many of their number from the rifle fire.

In no time we with the rifles had plunged into the fight, using the heavy stocks to batter in skulls and club down resistance. At last I spied the old man who had persistently eluded me. Clubbing, kicking, stabbing, I fought my way to him. He was engaged with one of my boys. He did not see me and I raised the butt of my gun, gripping the barrel with both hands and smashed down with it. In the very act my foot was hurled against my legs, and I fell with a thud. As I sprang to my feet the islander broke and ran.

In the woods they disappeared and Jack and the others wanted to chase them. This I would not permit, for I knew that in the forest we would not have a chance.

Even now there was no time to be lost, so we hurried our goods into canoes and paddled to the mainland. Before we left the island we smashed and ripped all the canoes at the landing place, to delay the natives if they should try to follow us.

After that I made my way into the Congo country. I had had a similar experience there two years previously, but I managed to avoid the Belgian authorities. Trading was good, and without further adventure I finally made my way back to Cape Town and returned to England.

My one regret was that I had not captured the old man with the eyes.

FRISBEE

A Short Story

Frisbee came into the room with his usual quick, confident step. The half-dozen men the room contained, coatless and collarless, pushing their pencils with the desperate haste that only a newspaperman can quite understand, looked up for an instant, nodded or grunted, then fell to work again with renewed energy.

Every man of them knew, as well as did Frisbee, that he had "landed the beat!" he had gone after the day before. It was written on every feature of his tired but satisfied face. He had tramped innumerable miles, had not slept a wink the preceding night, but he had done what his chief had sent him to do, and the work that had made it possible was one of the pleasures of his life.

An inner door opened, and the city editor's boy jerked his thumb over his shoulder. "He wants you in there."

An understanding look passed over the faces of the men at the desks. One of them took time to say:

"You're up against it again, Frisbee. He's going to send you for something no one else can get!"

An approving grin touched each face. This tall, heady young westerner, with his dark, thin, clean-cut face, and hustling energy, had so charged them all with his own personal magnetism that there was never an envious thought toward him, even when he pulled success out of their defeat, as he very frequently did.

When Frisbee entered the city editor's sanctum that worthy gentlemtn turned to him with a quizzical smile.

"Got it?"

The answer was quite as laconic as the question.

"Of course." And Frisbee laid his copy down on the desk. The city editor's hand closed over it eagerly, but he must not even examine it till he put this man to work again.

"Frisbee, there is a very devil to pay—in the shape of a woman at the Scrantons' on Fifth Avenue who will not be interviewed. You know the magazines have had a lot to say lately about Kate Bristow, the author of the most popular novel of the season? She came to visit the Scrantons last week, and although they tried to keep it quiet, it got out yesterday, and part of the staff of every paper in the city have laid siege to the Scranton place ever since. I have sent three men today, but to no purpose. She will not even see a reporter."

"I don't know how you are going to manage it, Frisbee, but you are certainly going to bring me an interview from Miss Bristow—also her picture." He glanced at the clock over his desk. "It is only nine o'clock. I'll give you an hour."

As Frisbee again passed through the room where the busy men still sweated. Hawley, one of his own especial chums, called out:

"Bet you a tenner you don't get a word. I've been there twice to-day, and I might as well have been trying to make peace between Russia and Japan for all the attention I got. No," as Frisbee's hand went down into his pocket, "we'll each keep our own stake, and when you come back you can just hand me a ten-spot."

"Sure? Maybe not." And with the smile that was never chased from his face for very long, Frisbee swung out of the room.

When he rang the bell at the Scrantons' about twenty-five minutes later, the gas glinted down upon a very different looking Frisbee, refreshed with a bath and dress suit.

"Take my card to Miss Bristow," he said, authoritatively, when a girl answered his ring. "I am an old friend. I know she will see me." He told his lie with an air that compelled belief, and the girl obeyed him.

He went into the parlour to wait. It was familiar ground to him, for he knew the Scrantons well. The night was sultry and the doors and windows were open.

Suddenly one of the doors framed something so exquisite for him he went forward with outstretched hands.

Just a woman, but the one woman, and he had not seen her for five years—a tall, slender woman, gowned in white, with bronze hair and dark brown eyes—very luminous just now—and the colour of the wild Western roses they both used to love so well, glowing in her face.

"Is it really and truly you, Walter?" she asked, as he took both her hands in a glad clasp. "I was afraid to let myself believe it when your card was brought to me."

Every feature of her lovely face was radiating pure joy.

"When my card was brought to you?" Frisbee repeated, his eyes never leaving her face for an instant.

"Yes, I have it here. I was in such a hurry to see you I just tucked it in my dress and came on down."

She drew his card from the folds of her bodice. Beneath his name was written a line: "Please let me see you, if only for five minutes."

"But I sent that to Miss Bristow."

Considering he was star reporter for one of the largest papers in the city, Mr. Frisbee's mind was working very slowly.

Edna Winter laughed, and it seemed to the hungry-hearted man that he had not really lived since he last heard that laugh.

"How silly I am, Walter, not to explain. Of course, you do not know that Kate Bristow is only a name I have borrowed because it sounds more forceful than my own."

Frisbee was wide enough awake now.

"And I came here to-night to make you talk to me whether you wanted to or not." His gray eyes looked down into hers a little sternly. "Edna, the last time I saw you I tried that same thing and failed. I never had the remotest idea why you broke with me. Will you tell me now?"

"Because I wanted to develop the talent I knew I possessed, and Walter," her voice faltering for the first time, "I loved you so entirely I knew if we married I would be so completely happy I would not heed the small voice that said 'work,' and I also knew if I gave you my reason for breaking our engagement you would make it too hard for me to resist you. I have often wanted to ask you to forgive me, but I did not know where you were. I came East to see my publishers, and will start back to California to-morrow. I am so glad you came to-night, Walter. I will go back much happier if you can find it in your heart to say you forgive me."

"Forgive you? Edna, do you know what is going to happen to-morrow? We are going to get married. Yes, we are," as Miss Winter made a faint protest. "We love each other, and what else matters?"

When Frisbee went back to report to his chief, he would have seen at a glance, had his mind been in a normal condition, that the men he had left at home were waiting for him. They had handed in their copy, and were lounging about the room in luxurious idleness. Hawley came forward to meet him.

"What luck, Fris? Tell us all about it."

"I—I didn't get her picture, Hawley," Frisbee answered, as he put a $10 bill in Hawley's hands. Then, without another word, he opened the door and went into the city editor's presence.

"I wish I could look like that when I'm losing," exclaimed Hawley. "This is the first time he has ever come back defeated, and he looks as if he had come straight from heaven."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy Ever Used

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly—A Family Supply for 50c—Money Refunded if it Fails.

If someone in your family has an obstinate, deep-seated cough—even whooping cough—which has yielded slowly to treatment, buy a 50-cent bottle of Pinex and watch that cough vanish. If it fails, money back promptly, and without argument.

A 50-cent bottle of Pinex, when mixed with home-made sugar syrup, makes 16 ounces—a family supply—of the most effective cough remedy that money can buy, at a saving of $2. Gives instant relief and will usually wipe out a bad cough in 24 hours or less. Easily prepared in five minutes—directions in package.

Pinex Cough Syrup has a pleasant taste—children take it willingly. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative—both good features. Splendid for croup, hoarseness, throat tickle, incipient lung troubles, and a prompt, successful remedy for whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of Norway White Pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and other elements which are so healing to the membranes. Simply mix it with sugar syrup or strained honey, in a 16-oz. bottle, and it is ready for use. Used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex, or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

This tendency of modern days to label as a lie,
The tales of Cinderella and the blackbirds in the pie.
And thus to rob the childish mind of many a delight
Gets a romantic fellow's goat and makes him want to fight.
Come, tell us, Mr. So-and-So, who gave the right to you
To tell a child that rain is just an atmospheric brew;
That flowers in the garden simply happen to be there
Because some seeds were planted where they got the sun and air;
That birds pour out their souls in song because it is their way,
And that one has to use a pump to make an organ play?
Why tell your child the pretty doll she nightly puts to bed
Is stuffed with excelsior, and that its Titian red
Tresses are of dyestuffs that are poison to the touch?
Suppose that bonehead talk will help the baby much?
You've got to pass away some day, and at the pearly gate
Confront the good St. Peter, who will tell you of your fate.
"A seat in heaven," he will ask, "to which you would pass through?
"There is no heaven, So-and-So; at least there's none for you.

ANSWERS BY SANTA CLAUS EDITOR

During the last few weeks a large number of inquiries have come to the Santa Claus editor regarding the proper course to take in observing Christmas. Many of these correspondents have requested personal answers. It has been found impossible to grant these requests, owing to the fact that the editor is very busy wondering how he is going to remember Uncle John, who is generous, without slighting Aunt Kate, who broke the will. The questions, therefore, will have to be answered in this column.

Freddie: You don't dare to do it now. Had you started the row a month ago you might have gotten away with it.

Nettie: You are taking a long chance in buying a ready made for your aunt. Only those made to order fit well, and not everyone can eat hard candy with them.

Jakie. It is better to give a dog than jewelry. A dog will die in time, or, in an emergency, you can slip around some dark night and poison it. Jewelry lasts forever and is very difficult to get back. Since you say that you are not certain of her constancy, you had better purchase live stock.

Sweet Sixteen: That all depends. Why not have a friend ask him whether he prefers one of the horsehair or the Indian bead kind? Much depends, too, on the weight of the watch.

Matron: His heart is weak, but you do not like to break a custom of 15 years by paying more than $1.25 per ton of fifty. Why not cut the number down to twenty-five and add a bottle of heart stimulant?

Honeybunch: Poor girl, my heart bleeds for you. Nothing is so discouraging as to find that the price is marked on the box in an indelible pencil, and that you have none of the same colour. Change boxes.

Country Boy: She may find it if you leave it on her father's doorstep. Be sure that the family does not keep a dog, if you intend to deliver the present in person.

Sweet Irene: Sure, whip across that "each stitch a loving thought of you," even though you bought it at a department store. The chances are that he doesn't know the stitch on Battenberg work from that used on indestructible hose.

Bennie: It is always best to start to attend at least four weeks before. The candy bag lists are made up usually about three weeks in advance. There have been times when a few sacks were left and they were handed out to new scholars but this has happened too infrequently to warrant taking a chance that it will ever occur again.

Distressed: Lay off the Christmas present and spend the money having a conservator appointed for yourself. You've gone with her three years and have no idea whether she wears a six or a ten! If you do buy, get a pair with but four fingers and a thumb on each. Most women have this number of digits.

Handsome: You fear to trust your kitchen scales and don't wish to have the package weighed at the post office. Take no chances; plaster it well with stamps. Nothing is so bad as having them come 'Collect.'

Bright Eyes: No, indeed. A gold-mounted toothpick is no present for a lady. Besides such utensils are very difficult to find now.

Anxious Mother: What presents will keep your ten year old son from running away from home to snowball in the winter time and play scrub in the summer? A strong leather halter is one.

Forlorn: Yes, buy a big bunch. A sprig about the size of a rose bush, suspended from a chandelier, should attract his attention, if you stand under it any length of time. Remember, Christmas comes but once a year, and although next year is leap year he may think of that before you do. Get him now.

Downcast: Be of good cheer; nobody gets what he wants.

NOTES AND NOVELTIES

THE CHRISTMAS GIFTS TO A MAN

When you rack your brains to think ofsomething acceptable for Uncle John or Cousin Charlie, why not decide on a collapsible drinking cup in a neat leather case which may be tucked into a vest pocket. Men are even more fastidious than women about drinking out of public glasses and cups and often the desire for a cooling drink sends a man into a saloon, where at least his beverage is provided in a clean glass. Collapsible cups may be had now in silver and if desired, the owner's monogram or name may be engraved on one side. The little leather case is not more than half an inch high. Another acceptable gift for a man is a pair of folding vest pocket scissors which also fit into a little leather case. These are not manicure scissors, but a handy little implement which may be put to a score of uses during the day.

WITH THE WITS

From the Washington Evening Star

"You can take that ax and get up an appetite for a little dinner," said the farmer's wife.

"Lady," replied Meandering Mike, "what I was applyin' fur was food; not physical culture."

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS
Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This routs the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders thus disappear.

AFTER THE COIN

The kid gets busy as a B
And strikes his father for a V,
Whereat his sister takes the Q,
Insisting she must have 1—2;
While even though it might perplex
Mamma, also, must have an X.
By signs like these it's very clear
They know Xmas is drawing near.

Deputies Ratify Treaty.

Paris, Dec. 21.—The Chamber of Deputies last evening ratified the Franco-German accord on the question of Morocco. The ratification was adopted by 383 against 36 votes.

M. Jaures, Socialist leader in the Chamber, after a lengthy speech, announced that he would vote for the treaty because it would put France in a position to intervene and bring Great Britain and Germany closer together, although he did not believe that an economic conflict between England and Germany would lead to war. He declared that the greatest peace forces were international organizations of the proletariat and the renaissance of the old Puritan Liberalism in Anglo-Saxon countries.

M. Jaurez raised applause by referring to millionaires, who, with no further material wants to satisfy, turn their aspirations towards idealism. This recrudescence of idealism had led Great Britain, the United States and Japan to conclude arbitration treaties and was an excellent omen for peace.

Most of the deputies from Lorraine departments abstained from voting. They declared that, while they realized the advantages of the treaty for France, and were unwilling to embarrass the Government, the representatives of a part of Lorraine which was still French, they could not give their consent to a treaty detaching a portion of the national territory to give to Germany.

Shuster Must Go.

Teheran, Dec. 21.—The Cabinet has won an important victory over the National Council, which foreshadows the acceptance of Russia's demand for the dismissal of W. Morgan Shuster, the American treasurer-general of Persia, unless public opinion proves too strong.

The National Council, in a session which lasted from eight o'clock Tuesday night until after midnight, finally accepted the proposal to appoint a commission of five deputies with plenary powers to deal with the Russian ultimatum.

New York's Busy Subway.

New York, Dec. 21.—Figures available to-day show that last Monday's travel on the subway and elevated railroads of Manhattan set a new high record. The number of tickets sold was 2,460,000, the subway carrying 1,400,000 and the elevated 1,060,000.

The total exceeds even the tremendously heavy traffic recorded during the Hudson-Fulton celebration. The great increase in travel was due to Christmas shopping.

Big Fruit Convention.

Ottawa, Dec. 21.—Arrangements are being completed by Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture, for the holding of a fruit convention in Ottawa early in the New Year. The gathering will be a large one and will be representative of the fruit-growing interests of all Canada, the various associations and administrative bu reaus.

The convention will be held some time in February.

Better Inspection Wanted.

St. Catharines, Dec. 21.—The fruit growers of Niagara district at a meeting yesterday afternoon decided to tender a banquet to Hon. Martin Burrell, Dominion Minister of Agriculture, who was for some years a prominent grower in Louth Township, close to the city, and who will be here for the Christmas holidays. It was also decided to extend an invitation to Hon. J. S. Duff.

The principal subject of discussion was the growth and spread of little peach and yellows, which are becoming a great menace to growers. A resolution unanimously adopted provides for a memorial to the Provincial Government asking the appointment of an inspector to take charge of all inspection, that he have power to appoint or dismiss local inspectors, and to assess half the cost to townships.

Wants Packers Discharged.

Chicago, Dec. 21.—Formal notice that the defence will present a motion in the case of the U. S. to have Judge Carpenter instruct the jury to return a verdict finding the ten Chicago meat packers, charged with criminal violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, not guilty, for the reason that U. S. District Attorney Wilkerson failed to make out a case in his opening statement to the jury, was given yesterday by Attorney Levi Mayer at the opening of the afternoon session of the trial.

The action of the defence came as a surprise to the Government and caused Judge Carpenter to adjourn court until this morning, when he will rule on the motions.

Sentenced For Murder.

Riviere du Loup, Que., Dec. 21.—Jules Plourde and his brother Ovide were sentenced yesterday morning for the murder of Louis Dion, who was shot by the former while mixed up in a quarrel.

The death sentence was passed on Jules, while his brother, who gave him the cartridges with which the deed was committed, got ten years.

The men had nothing to say before sentence was passed. They are both young fellows under 25 years of age, and unmarried.

Another Steamboat Merger?

Montreal, Dec. 21.—The Herald says: "It is understood, upon good authority, that the directors of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Co. are discussing with the directors of the Quebec Steamship Co., certain plans which may later be embodied in proposals looking towards the amalgamation of the two companies.

Liquor Fight In Waterloo.

Berlin, Ont., Dec. 21.—Waterloo Township Council are submitting a local option bylaw at New Year's. Eight hotels are affected, but they are organized and reports to hand tell of a very keen contest going on in that municipality. A private meeting of hotelmen of the township, at which the hotelmen of Berlin were present, was held here, and while they had nothing for publication it is known it was held largely for organization purposes. The outcome is being watched with interest.

Aid For Independent 'Phones.

New York, Dec. 21.—Minor M. Davis, who was recently appointed superintendent of telephones of the Postal Telegraph Cable Co., announced yesterday that his company has issued instructions to its construction department to proceed with the erection of additional heavy copper wires between all important points on the system of the company, for the purpose of extending the telephonic use of the same to independent telephone companies.

Want Canadian Hay In Britain.

Ottawa, Dec. 21.—The demand for Canadian hay is growing in England, where the shortage in last season's crop was very great.

Marjory Clouston Married.

London, Eng., Dec. 21.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—At Paris the marriage of Miss Marjory Clouston, daughter of Sir E. Clouston, president of the Bank of Montreal, to Dr. John Todd of McGill University, was celebrated very quietly here yesterday. The civil ceremony was celebrated at the British consulate by Percy Inglis, the consul-general, at noon, and the religious ceremony was celebrated a few minutes later by Bishop Ormsby, in the presence of members of the family and some intimate friends, no invitations having been issued.

Banker Cughan Released.

Ottawa, Dec. 21.—After serving a year of his sentence, R. E. Cughan, formerly manager of the Farmers' Bank branch at Athens, has been released from the penitentiary on parole. He was sentenced to three years for forgery. W. R. Travers, general manager of the bank, on the eve of his own downfall, took an active part in the proceedings against the Athens branch manager. Travers will spend Christmas in the penitentiary.

Murdered by Bandits.

Los Angeles, Dec. 21.—Frank Gillette, a former business man of Cleveland, Ohio, was murdered by Mexican bandits Dec. 10 on his coffee plantation near Rosa Morda, territory of Tepic, Mexico, according to advices received here.

The marauders entered the house, bound and gagged Mrs. Gillette, stabbed her husband to death and rifled the house, taking away $10,000 in money and silverware.

Brockville Rector Resigns.

Brockville, Dec. 21.—Rev. R. B. Patterson, rector of the Anglican Church at Athens for the last seven years, has tendered his resignation, to accept a charge at Stellarton, N.S.

The death is reported from Edmonton, Alta., of Dr. I. J. Lone, a native of Williamsburg, Dundas County. Deceased was 55 years of age, and a graduate of Queen's University, Kingston. He also took a post graduate course in Edinburgh.

Strangely Interesting.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Dec. 21.—Good business continues to be done in all grades of Manitoba spring wheat over the cable, there being a good demand from both the United Kingdom and the continent, and the prices bid showed no change. The local market for coarse grains remains steady, with a fair amount of trade doing. There was a good inquiry from European sources for spring wheat flour, but, as the prices bid to-day were not satisfactory, the volume of business done was small. The local trade is fair and prices rule steady. Demand for millfeed is good. Cheese remains quiet, but firm, while butter and eggs are in good demand.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Dec. 21.—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market the offerings this morning were 700 cattle, 600 sheep and lambs, 1,000 hogs and 300 calves.

The feature of the trade was the display of some extra choice cattle for the Christmas market, and, as these were first lots to come forward this week, they met with a good demand, and sales of steers were made at $6.50 to $6.75 and $6 per 100 pounds.

There was also a good demand for ordinary choice steers, and on the whole a fairly active trade was done, and, as the supply was not in excess of the requirements, a firm feeling prevailed in the market. The offerings of common stock were much smaller than usual, for which the demand was limited, as buyers of such are well supplied for the present.

A feature of the small-meat trade was the stronger feeling in the market for sheep, and prices scored an advance of 25c per 100 pounds. The demand was good, and sales were made at $4 to $4.25 per 100 pounds.

The market for lambs showed no further change, but the undertone was firm at the recent advance in prices, with a good trade passing. Calves were scarce and in good demand, but buyers found it impossible to fill their wants, altho they were willing to pay good prices for choice stock.

The undertone to the market for hogs continues strong, and prices have made a further advance of 25c to 35c per 100 lbs., which is attributed to the continued good demand from packers for supplies and the small offerings, and sales of selected lots were made at $7 to $7.25 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $6.35 to $6.75; do., medium, $6 to $6.50; do., common, $5.50 to $5.75; canners, $5.25 to $5.50; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $5.25 to $5.50; do., medium, $4.50 to $5; do., bulls, $4.50 to $5.50; milkers, choice, each, $75; do., common and medium, each, $50 to $60; springers, $50 to $60.

CASES WERE ADJOURNED

A. G. Lawless, of Lakefield, Charged With Selling Liquor Without a License

HEARD NEXT WEEK

A. G. Lawless, of Lakefield, was arraigned in the County Police Court this morning, charged with selling liquor without the proper license. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the defence, while Mr. R. Ruddy appeared for the prosecution. Mr. Gordon stated that he had only been advised of the facts of the case about an hour previous to the trial and was not prepared to go on.

The case of Northey and Kennedy, of Lakefield, charged with having 36 bottles of liquor in their possession, intended for sale, was brought up, and Mr. Ruddy was not prepared to go on, so both cases had to be adjourned to Lakefield, where they will be tried at one o'clock Dec. 27th.

Several witnesses were present, and in the latter case, everything was in readiness to proceed, but Mr. Ruddy offered an objection and the witnesses, not wishing to have to again come to the city to the trial, it was arranged to try it in Lakefield.

Christmas Cheer At Gordon's Meat Market

Fine Show of Prime Beef and Other Choice Meats and Poultry From Best Feeders

Alex. Gordon, of the Arcade Meat Market, is bound to do a tremendous business this season—judging from his sumptuous preparations for the festive occasion. In meats, the fastidious will find a bill of fare that will tickle their fancy. Everything has been provided by the good judgment of this practical cattle buyer. The display of carefully selected beef from the best feeders, affords ample choice in prime sirloin and porterhouse roasts and steaks, as well as in rump and rib roasts, such as will grace the Christmas table. It will be well worth a visit, also, to feast your eyes on the big fatted calf and the luscious pork and lamb. There is a great showing of poultry, and fine, plump turkeys, geese, ducks and chickens from the best feeding pens are in abundance. Dont' forget a pound or two of Gordon's own special make of sausage, as toothsome, as wholesome and as well made as you you ever sampled. Telephone 253, Market Building. 2d-145.

WILL FREE 18 CONVICTS

Examiner Special:

SARNIA, ONT., DEC. 21.—The announcement this morning that the Governor of Michigan intends to make Christmas notable by the liberation of eighteen State convicts, including several murderers. It may become a question of international rights. It is feared here, and all along the frontier adjoining the State of Michigan, that these men, being most unwelcome in their own State, will immediately track for Canadian points. There is a movement on foot here to submit the matter to the Dominion Government.

THE EXTENSION OF THE RADIAL RAILWAY LINE

Ratepayers of North Monaghan Will Vote on the Question of Giving Company Permission to Use Monaghan Road —Will Mean a Big Thing for the Township is General Opinion.

The ratepayers of North Monaghan are being asked on January 1st at the coming municipal elections to vote on the question of whether or not the Peterborough Radial Railway Company shall be given permission to extend its Park street line as far south as the corner of Romaine street and Monaghan Road. It is anticipated that the measure, which has already been passed and approved by the Council of the township will be carried by the ratepayers, as it seems to be universally recognised that the extension of the line as desired, will bring people living in that section of the township in much closer connection with the business section of Peterborough, and will result in real estate in the township becoming correspondingly greater in value. This indeed is indicated by the fact that the mere announcement of the proposal to extend the line into that section has resulted in increased real estate values and activity. Building sites in the neighbourhood of the line will come into immediate demand.

The Peterborough Radial Railway Company evidently have great faith in the possibilities of that section, as in an interview with the Examiner today, Mr. W. H. Munro, the manager, said that further extensions will be necessary in the course of a couple of years and that an application had already been made to the township for the use of the road for that purpose.

Mr. Munro also gave the information that if the by-law passed, the company expects to have its cars running over the new line by June 1st of next year. Work will be commenced just as soon as the weather permits in the spring and the material is already here and available.

Asked as to other probable extensions, Mr. Munro stated that his company has two more new suburban lines in view, one of which he expects to have in operation by the autumn of 1912.

"Inquirer" Quotes The Law In Regard To The Hydro-Electric By-law

Says That Such a Measure Would Authorize the Council to Make a Binding Contract Which Would Make the Property Owners of Peterborough Liable.

Peterborough, Dec. 21, 1911.

Sir,—A by-law is being submitted to the electors, the important part of which reads as follows:

"1. That the following question be "submitted to the ratepayers of the "Municipal Corporation of the City of "Peterborough entitled to vote on "money by-laws, 'Are you in favour of "obtaining from the Hydro-Electric "Power Commission of Ontario a sup"ply of electric power?' "

It will be observed that only the ratepayers who are entitled to vote on "Money By-laws" are entitled to vote, because they are the only class of ratepayers in the city who are interested in by-laws which involve the placing of a mortgage upon the people's property.

This question looks innocent. To find the real meaning of it you must look at the Statutes of Ontario, 1909. Chap. 19, Section 11, which reads as follows:

"11. Where a municipal corpora"tion not a party to the contract set "forth in Schedule A as varied by "this Act applies for a supply of pow"er and a question has been hereto"fore, or is hereafter submitted to the "vote of the electors of the munici"pality pursuant to paragraph 1a of "section 583 of the Consolidated Mun"icipal Act, 1903, and the amendments "thereto, including the amendment "made during the present session as "to a supply of electric power from "the Commission and the electors "have voted in favour of a supply "from the Commission, the Council "of the corporation of such "munici"pality may authorize the entering in"to and such corperation may enter "into a contract with the Commission "in the form set forth in the said "schedule or with such variations "thereof as may be approved by the "Lieutenant Governor in Council "without submitting a by-law ap"proving the same for the assent of "the electors as provided by sub-sec"tion 1 of Section 13 of the Power "Commission Act, and when executed "such contract shall be legal, valid "and binding."

This means that the ratepayers of the City of Peterborough are authorizing the City Council, not only for this year, but for every succeeding year, to enter into a binding contract whereby the property owners of the City of Peterborough may be made liable for $100,000.00, $200,000.00 or $500,000, or any amount that the Council may see fit to bind the city to, and to use the words of the section, "such contract shall be "legal, valid and binding," and again to use the words of the section, "without submitting the "by-law approving of the same for the "assent of the electors."

The contract also provides that money can be borrowed upon the debentures of the town for any amount without having to submit a new money by-law to the ratepayers.

Still another worse feature, the electors having once voted upon this by-law, can never repeal it.

The ratepayers of Peterborough are anxious to get cheap electric light and power, but the ratepayers are entitled to know the amount that the city is being mortgaged for and the terms and conditions upon which such power may be obtained.

Yours truly,
ENQUIRER.

A JUDGE'S COMMENDATION OF CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

A lad of fifteen was brought before the County Judge at Brockville on a charge of stealing a pair of trousers because his own were worn. The lad's predicament appealed strongly to the Judge, from the fact that his mother was dead and his father had deserted him. After consultation with the officials, His Honour remarked that the Children's Aid Society, through Mr. Traill, the active ,fearless officer, had undertaken to procure the boy a situation and thereby give him a fresh start in life. The intervention of the Society held out the hope of saving the youth from ruin. He would be pleased if the jury would make known in their presentment the splendid work being carried on by the Children's Aid movement, which was deserving of the heartiest public support.

FIGHTING IN PERSIA RUSSIANS ARE OPPOSED

Examiner Special.

TEHERAN, DEC. 21.—The Russian troops sent to enforce a demand for the dismissal of Morgan Shuster, the American Treasurer-General, have had a serious clash with the Persian irregulars forces, 30 miles from here. It is stated that several were killed on both sides, and the Russian Cossacks are now ravaging the country, preparatory to a general advance on Teheran, as soon as the supporting troops arrive. Foreigners here have taken refuge in the foreign consulates, fearing the revenge of the Cossacks on the inhabitants of the city.

TERRIBLY INJURED

LONDON, DEC. 21.—John Reid of Copenhagen, was terribly injured when he was killing beef cattle. An infuriated animal forced him against a pulley. All the fingers of his left hand were torn off, and he also received internal injuries. He is now in a critical condition.

NOT COMING VERY FAST

Public Not Responding to the Call for Christmas Gifts for Children as Readily as Usual

CAN YOU NOT HELP?

The people of Peterborough are not responding with their usual alacrity to the call from the Children's Aid Society for donations to the Christmas tree, which is being arranged for the children on Christmas afternoon. So far, the Examiner has only received a few parcels, while other years at this season the office had taken on the appearance of the post office during the rush season, so numerous were the bundles and boxes for the children. Seven youngsters will have a rather barren Christmas if the good people of Peterborough do not lend their assistance as in other years. Just look around the house and see if they are not so perfectly good toys or books that your own children do not want any longer. Books, games, dolls, toys of all kinds, sleighs, skates, hockey sticks, candies—anything that the children take delight in will be appreciated. Remember this for a Christmas treat for the children—it is not an appeal for funds to carry on the ordinary work of the Society. The Examiner will undertake to look after all parcels left at this office or they may be sent to the Children's Shelter.

ASQUITH HAS LOST A BYE-ELECTION

Examiner Special:

LONDON, ENG., DEC. 21.—Asquith's Government to-day lost another seat in the bye-election in North Aymhire, where A. M. Anderson, the newly-appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland, was defeated by D. F. Campbell. This is taken to indicate Scotland's dissatisfaction with the proposed Home Rule for Ireland bill.

Mexico to Lake Superior By Chain of Canals

WHERE CIVIC NOMINATIONS TAKE PLACE TO-MORROW

No Opposition in Sight for Alderman Bradburn—Four Members of This Year's Council Will Not Have to Stand for Re-election—Municipal Gossip.

For Mayor—
City Council Chamber, 10 to 11 a.m.
For Board of Education—
City Council Chamber, 10 to 11 a.m.
For Water Commissioner—
City Council Chamber, 10 to 11 a.m.
For Aldrman—
South Ward— L. Spry's shop, 210 Stewart street, 12 to 1 noon.
Centre Ward—City Council Chamber, 12 to 1 noon.
West Ward—N. Routley's store, 293 Brock street, 12 to 1 noon.
North Ward—Mrs. Lee's shop, Smith street, 12 to 1 noon.
East Ward—Former Village Hall, 12 to 1 noon.

Nominations for the different municipal offices will be held at the places indicated above, to-morrow (Friday), and polling will take place on Monday, January 1st.

From present indications, there will be no contest for the Mayoralty. Ald. William Bradburn is the only candidate to announce himself, and others who have been named as prospective seekers after the chief magistrateship have announced that they will not run. Mr. R. J. Soden was among those mentioned, but to the Examiner yesterday afternoon, he said that he had no intention of presenting himself.

Four members of the present council will continue to hold office for another term, Ald. Morgan in the East Ward, Ald. Duncan in the South Ward, Ald. Brown in the West Ward, and Ald. Graham in the North Ward, so that in these four wards the rate payers will only elect one alderman on New Year's Day, and their choice will have a two year term. In the Centre Ward, Ald. Bradburn, who headed the poll last year, is a candidate for the Mayoralty, and there will therefore be two aldermen to be elected in this section of the city.

It is thought that Ald. Kerneghan, Anderson, Metheral and Edgar, one-year term members of this year's council, will stand for re-election, but Ald. Buller has intimated that he will not be a candidate.

It looks as if Ald. Anderson will be returned in East City by acclamation —at least the Examiner has learned of no opposition to him. In some of the other wards, however, there will be a fight. A number of candidates have already announced themselves. Mr. Geo. N. Gordon will run in the Centre Ward and Mr. Cyril Hill, insurance broker in the West Ward. Ex-Ald. W. J. Johnston is a possibility in the North Ward and Mr. R. N. Jones is spoken of in connection with the West Ward contest. Other persons mentioned are those of Mr. William Kempt in the South Ward, Mr. Joseph Wolstenholme in the Centre Ward and ex-Ald. Joseph Batten.

Board of Education.

Five members of the Board of Education will have to seek re-election as their two year term expires at the end of the year. These are Messrs. John Crane, chairman, W. H. Hill, T. H. Adams, Dr. Burnham and Col. Miller. Four members remain in office for 1912, in Messrs. B. F. Ackerman, Robt Fair, Vincent Eastwood and Dr .M. A. Morrison. The term of Mr. L. M. Hayes, who is the appointee of the Separate School Board on the Board, has also expired. It is not anticipated that there will be an exciting contest for the Board of Education, as no new names have been mentioned. Nomination Day, tomorrow, however, may bring some surprises.

Mr. T. F. Matthews, the chairman of the Water Commission, is the retiring member this year, and so far there has been no name mentioned as a prospective opponent to Mr. Matthews.

ARGUMENT IN POWERS CASE IS BEING HEARD

TORONTO, ONT., DEC. 21.—Hon. A. B. Morine, chairman of the newly appointed Royal Commission, to investigate Government Departments at Ottawa, and civil service conditions, generally, states this morning that the Commission has an unusual and extraordinary power of appointing sub-commissions with full powers of investigating and taking evidence. That means that while the main Commission may be sitting in Toronto, sub-commissions may be examining post offices, or other government offices in Kingston, Woodstock, Stratford, Peterborough, St. Catharines and Windsor simultaneously.

Get Those Packages Sent Off. Mails Are Crowded

A ROW IN RESTAURANT

Man Who Kicked Waiter on the Shins is Fined by the Magistrate This Morning

TO-DAY'S POLICE COURT

A young man named Isaac Watson was fined $2.00 and costs, amounting to $4.35, at the police court this morning, for assaulting Tom Jacks, of the Chinese restaurant, and $2.00 and costs, amounting to $5.75 for being drunk and disorderly in a public place. He paid the fine.

The Dominion Chinese Cafe was the scene of assault. Mr. Tom Him, the proprietor of the cafe, gave evidence as follows: "Watson came into the restaurant last night, and ordered a meal. I went to get it, and when I brought it, he was asleep at the table. I woke him up, and he said to wait. I brought it to him three times, and each time he refused it. He at last went to eat, and I asked him to pay for it then, thinking perhaps that he might refuse afterward. He then paid for it, but got up and said he would not eat it. We asked him to get out, and he went, but as he was going, Tom Jacks was standing at the door, and Watson gave him a kick on the leg."

"It seems to be a habit of those fellows to go there and kick up a quarrel." said Chief Thompson. "Mr. Him keeps a very respectable place and runs it on good clean principles, but there seems to be a drunken class of fellows come around there, and bother them, at times".

Watson asked to be put in the box He stated that he had been drinking pretty heavily, so that he did not exactly know what did happen. He remembered however, that when the waiter woke him up at the table, he turned sick and did not want the meal, but he did not remember kicking the other fellow on the leg, as he was going out. He stated that when he got up to go, the other fellow ran outside, and he thought he was going to call a police officer and he ran to stop him.

"On the charge of drunk and disorderly you are fined $2.00 and costs, $5.75," said his Worship, and on the charge of assault you are fined $2.00 and costs, $4.35. If you will get drunk and kick up a disturbance you must pay for it." he concluded.

Nelson Nurse ,a North Monaghan farmer, was fined $2.00 for being drunk, while in charge of a team of horses. He was given ten days in which to pay the fine.

FINDING PLACES FOR THE FAITHFUL.

The Bourassa-Borden government cannot, it seems, find offices fast enough for the famishing faithful, even if every Grit head goes into the basket. To secure this end, a commission has been appointed, which incidentally furnishes more offices, with power to create more offices in the performance of the work of creating vacancies in existing offices. Hon. A. B Morine, chairman of the newly appointed head-severing royal commission, to make places for the place hunters, says that this means that the original commission has power to constitute sub-commissions, to forage for places for the faithful. This will expedite the work. While the sub-commissioners are beating up the game, furnishing ammunition, in the outlying districts, the main commission, sitting in Toronto, wil fire it, or rather fire the office holders. And thus the heaven-born to office will come sooner into their own.

UNPROGRESSING ONTARIO.

In seven counties of the province of Ontario the census returns show a decrease in population of 30,980 in ten years—since 1901. These are seven of the best counties of the province, Bruce, Huron, Grey, Frontenac, Middlesex ,Norfolk and Prince Edward. There is something much awry when this can happen. To the neglect of the Provincial government to help the farmers to realize upon the highest productivity of soil, is added the absence of convenient and profitable markets for what is produced. Ontario, according to the census returns, produces less food stuffs than it did ten years ago. The Globe thus sums up the situation: "By yelling "treason" at the men who sought to find new and profitable markets for farm products and thus stimulate the growth of rural population, the Tory Press may win elections and the applause of the thoughtless, but it will not restore to the land Ontario's lost legion." It's no wonder that neglected New Ontario, wants to withdraw from this province and escape the blight of official incapacity and stolid, unprogressiveness.

WHAT ABOUT THE POWER BY-LAW.

At the coming municipal elections an answer will be invited to the following abstract and rather indefinite question:

"Are you in favour of obtaining from the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario a supply of electric power?

At first thought, this is a question to which every ratepayer can answer "yes". But there are considerations that should cause the ratepayer to hesitate before committing the city to an expenditure that will, probably, involve an indebtedness of something like half a million dollars.

While Peterborough is anxious to secure electric power for civic purposes, and to aid in the establishment of the new industries she needs, it seems, to be wise to consider the situation, and to reflect whether or not we can get as cheap power from some other source without such large expenditure, and without mortgaging the city for something like half a million dollars. The present debenture, practically, mortgage, indebtedness of Peterborough is, as many who do not know, will be startled to learn, nearly a million and a half dollars—$1,426,711.28—and if to this we were to add, say, $500,000, for power development, we should have, in round numbers, a mortgage indebtedness of two million dollars. This, at 4 per cent., in addition to the sinking fund, would mean an addition to our annual tax levy of $40,000, and swell our yearly burden of taxes from about $225,000 to over $265,000 per year. Under these circumstances the ratepayers should consider carefully the answer they are to give to the above question.

The Examiner has no prejudice either for, or against, the Hydro-Electric Commission. In some favoured parts of Ontario it has done excellent work in supplying power to municipalities that were not otherwise favourably situated for obtaining power. But with Peterborough, the case is different. We have within obtainable distance, a power supply, at a low rate, and the question seems to be, can, everything considered, the Hydro-Electric Commission supply us with any cheaper power?

Whatever power we may have developed under the Hydro-Electric, would have to be done on the credit of Peterborough, and the expense would become a fixed annual charge upon the city, and this we should have to pay whether we could, or did, use the power or not.

At present there is no demand for surplus power. We have no prospect of any immediate demand for additional power; and if we developed, pledged our credit to develop, a large additional block of power, we should have no use for it, and the question is, can we afford to incur large expenditure for power to keep in cold storage, lying idle, while we should have to meet the large over-head charges that would be involved.

If power should be developed by the Commission, say at No. 8 dam, we should be spending our good money to help our rivals gain new industries. The Commission would use any surplus power beyond our needs for the benefit of other municipalities who would be thus equipped—at our expense—to become our successful rivals in the attainment of new industries, for which they could not otherwise bid.

If the City Council had ever made any real attempt to secure power from the Seymour Power Company, power which would involve no expenditure, beyond paying for what we used, then it would have been time to consider the Hydro-Electric proposal, which may, and may not, give us cheaper power, and, in any event, will be handicapped by the condition that we should have to pay—directly and indirectly—for the whole amount of power developed, whether we had use for it, or not. But our money would not be wasted. We would be helping, at our own charge, other towns to the south to get cheap power, and make them rivals in the race for new industries.

When, however, as is the case, we can get power from the Seymour people, as we need it, to the extent of 3,000 or 4,000 horse power, we should carefully consider before committing ourselves to the Hydro scheme—consider whether or not we are making a good bargain; doing good business for ourselves.

Suppose, by the use of the credit—at the cost—of the city, we secured, say, 4,000 horse power by tying together No. 4 and No. 5 dams, and working them together, this and the expropriation of No. 5 dam would cost something close to $300,000; for this was about the price proposed for the Electric Light and Power plant at Lindsay, which turned down the Hydro-Electric proposal, in favour of the Seymour Power Company. from which that town considered it got better terms, should we, is the question, get any cheaper power from No. 4 and No. 5 under the proposed scheme than we can now get otherwise, without preliminary cost? We might have the power, but would have no use for it, and manufactories desiring location would be disposed to trade on the situation. Would they not be disposed to "beat down" the power the city could supply them to prices at and below cost, and might not the city, in its anxiety to get new industries, yield to the temptation, without any too closely counting the cost?

Power, alone, will not bring industries; other inducements are necessary. It is a fair question to consider it would not be better to get available power to be used as needed, from those willing and able to supply it, and have the city devote its attention to getting new industries to use it?

The Seymour Power Company, where it has been established, has aided and encouraged the establishment of new industries, not from philanthrophy, but as good business; to create a market for its power; and it stands to reason that if Peterborough wanted new industries, and was on business terms with the Seymour Company, the latter would use its best influence to help establish a new industry that would buy the power it had to sell.

It is known that the Seymour Company has a contract made for the erection of power house and machinery at Healey's Falls; and the power thus developed, if it finds a market at all, will naturally come to Peterborough; capable, with its splendid railway service and canal transportation, and, with proper enterprise in securing new industries, of using a large supply of power.

The arrangement of the Seymour Company with the late Dominion Government involves the development of power within three years to hold the franchise. Peterborough would be the best market for the reasons named, and the Company would not find it to its interests to drive too hard a bargain with its best prospective customer. Besides, the Hydro-Electric Commission, itself, and the Railway and Municipal Board would see, as they have the power to do, that the price was reasonable. The Hydro-Electric Commission is in competition with no private enterprise. Its chief desire is to see that the public gets power in the interests of public utilities, at as low a rate as possible.

The question, therefore, comes to this. As Peterborough is situated, in regard to available and, possibly, available power at reasonable rates, and without any preliminary expenditure, is it best, in the interest of the ratepayers, that the passing of the by-law should empower the Council to enter into a contract, that we have have no certainty would secure cheaper power, while it would involve a large expenditure of the people's money, and greatly increase our indebtedness? If we get fairly cheap power by allowing "the other fellow" to do the expenditure and the mortgaging, is it wise to take the costlier way?

It is held that the passing of the by-law will empower the City Council to enter into any contract they choose to do without submitting the matter to the people. The Council may assert that they will submit any such contract to the people, but no ratepayer should assent to the by-law unless he has in the terms of the by-law to be voted on January 1st, the explicit proviso that if the by-law is carried, any contract based upon it, must—not may—be submitted for approval, or rejection. That would be the business way; that would be the only way. Unless the City Council pledges itself, officially—through the medium of a condition in the by-law, itself—to submit a contract authorized by the by-law, if carried, any unofficial assurance they may give might not be carried out by the Council of the next, or succeeding years.

The failure to have this point specified in the by-law will subject it to a condemnation, which, on its merits, would not be so inevitable. The ratepayers, before voting "yea" on the by-law, should have the official and definite assurance that the Council of any year should not be in a position to tie up the people without their consent, to a possibly extravagant and inordinately expensive contract. The people have to pay and the people should have the say, as to how great, or small, financial obligation they are prepared to commit themselves to.

The by-law, as at present presented, does not guarantee the people the right to decide upon any contract, but, if passed, would empower the City Council to enter into any contract they choose, without consulting the ratepayers.

The Political Complexion Of British Columbia's Yellow Peril

The Sikhs, it appears, are to be allowed to bring in their wives. The Dominion of Canada, which a few years ago was threatening to have nothing to do with Sikhs of both sexes; and the men who have fought the battles of the British Crown in another part of the Empire, are to be recognised as fit to live in Canada and bring up young Canadians.

Probably few Canadians will feel any deep enthusiasm over the settlement of these Indian soldiers, admirable men that they are, for they are not of our colour and they are hardly likely to mix very well with ourselves. But their moral character and their devotion to British institutions are unimpeachable, and we have plenty of immigrants of whom as much cannot be said. The real ground for gratification in the arrangement between the Sikhs and the Government is the improvement in the mind and disposition of British Columbia. A few years ago we used to be informed that British Columbia even then, for she was in an the Dominion and out of the Empire if necessary, in order to maintain the principle that none but white men with high ideas of wages should land upon her soil. There was room for some sympathy with British Columbia even then, for she was in an exposed position and the Yellow Peril scare was on in full force. But there was always a suspicion that her scare was not wholly genuine, that it was artfully intensified by such interests as the Western Federation of Miners on the one hand, and the opponents of the Liberal party then in power at Ottawa on the other. Significantly enough, British Columbia's scare began to decline with the decline in reputation of the Western Federation; and it has now reached its lowest ebb with the disappearance from power of the Liberals at Ottawa. In fact, so happy for the moment are the Conservatives, and so disgusted the friends of "aggressive" and Socialistic trade-unionism of the Moyer-Haywood order, that Mr. Borden could probably abolish the Esquimault dockyard, and hand over the defence of the Pacific Coast to the Japanese navy without too much protest, if that course should happen to suit his friends of the Province of Quebec.

The Conservatives of British Columbia have enjoyed for many years a condition of sublime irresponsibility. They could pass exclusion acts and leave to the Federal Government the painful duty of disallowing them. They could attend conference with the Dominion for the adjustment of subsidies and then prance off to London to oppose the settlement agreed upon at those conferences. They could gratify their own labour element by discouraging immigration as heavily as possible, and then tell the employers and the general public that it was all the fault of the people at Ottawa. There are enormous advantages for the party in power in a remote province in being opposed to the party in power in the Dominion, and it is safe betting that the gentlemen who most enjoyed the White British Columbia agitation are now beginning to find them out.

BANKS OF CANADA

On the third of November, this year, the Bank of Montreal completed its ninety-fourth year. This brings it within striking distance of its centennial. The total assets of the bank amount to $250,000,000, and if Canada continues in her prosperous way it is quite probable that the big bank will have assets of $300,000,000 or more when the time for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary arrives.

A glance at the names of the institutions reporting to the finance department at Ottawa reveals the fact that Canada has a goodly number of banks which are "rising in years." In point of age, the Quebec Bank is a close second to the Bank of Montreal, and a centennial celebration is due in the ancient capital in 1918—seven years hence.

THE THREE NONAGENARIANS.

Two years after that, in 1920, there will be a centennial due in St. John, New Brunswick. The Bank of New Brunswick opened its doors in 1820. Thus there are three banks out of twenty-seven going institutions in the nineties as regards age.

Outside these three there is no bank in Canada as old as eighty years. However, the Bank of Nova Scotia will attain that distinction next year, as it commenced business in 1832. The Bank of British North America appeared upon the scene in 1836. It did not obtain its enviable royal charter until four years later. The British is the only bank in Canada to which the double-liability clause of the Bank Act does not apply. This makes five banks over seventy years of age. Had the St. Stephen's Bank been able to keep its doors open, there would have been another.

This small New Brunswick bank commenced in 1836, the year in which the British Bank started. When it failed in 1910, it had therefore reached the age of seventy-four years.

SOME MIDDLE-AGED BANKS.

The five banks first named constitute what might be called the eldest group in Canada. At the head of the next group are three banks which obtained charters in 1855. Of these the Molson's was the first to begin business. Its doors were opened in 1855, the same year in which the charter was secured. The Bank of Toronto opened next year, in 1856, and the Eastern Townships made its debut in 1857, which was a dark and gloomy panic year. This trio of banks has, therefore, just passed the half-century mark. The Molson's is fifty-six, the Toronto fifty-five, and the Eastern Townships fifty-four, years of age Next comes a French-Canadian bank—the Nationale—which got a charter in 1859 and commenced business in 1860. Its semi-centennial was celebrated last year.

The charter of the Merchants' Bank was obtained in 1861; the bank began in 1864.

Its acquisition of the Commercial Bank of Canada, which caused much trouble and loss, was effected in 1868. The semi-centenary of the Merchants' is due in three years' time. The Union Bank of Canada, originally known as the Union Bank of Lower Canada, started in 1866. It was followed by the Canadian Bank of Commerce. It is interesting to note that the Commerce was incorporated originally in 1858 under the name Bank of Canada. The charter was amended and the name changed to Canadian Bank of Commerce in 1866. This circumstance should console the Hon. Mr. Forget, who endeavoured unsuccessfully to get the name Bank of Canada for his new bank which has just opened its doors. The rise of the Commerce into importance was expedited by its acquisition of the Gore Bank in 1870.

The large institution now known as the Royal Bank of Canada was incorporated in Halifax under the name Merchants' Bank of Halifax in 1869. Its business had been carried on as a copartnership with title, Merchants' Bank, since 1864.

In 1900 an act was passed changing the name of the bank to Royal Bank of Canada, the new name coming into operation in January, 1901. These banks comprise a group of eight, all within a few years of the half-century mark. Half of them have just passed it, and the other half will reach it within a few years, barring accidents. But for its absorption a short while ago by the Royal Bank, the Union Bank of Halifax would have been well toward the head of this group of banks. It began in 1856, and was absorbed last year.

FAT AND FORTY

In the third group are seven banks, six of which are in the neighbourhood of forty years. The oldest is the Dominion, which was incorporated in 1870 and commenced business in 1871. Next year the Bank of Hamilton started, and in 1873 the Standard Banque d'Hochelaga was incorporated in 1873 and entered the field of active banking in 1874; the Bank of Ottawa also started in 1874. Then came the Imperial, which secured a charter in 1873 and began in 1875, taking over the business of the Niagara District Bank. Finally, ten years after the Imperial opened its doors, the Traders commenced. It should be mentioned that La Banque Provinciale, which was incorporated in 1900, took over the business of Banque Jacques Cartier, which was founded in the sixties.

THRIVING INFANTS

The last and youngest group is that known as new banks. Had it not gone into liquidation, the Sovereign would have headed this group. As it is, the Metro[illegible]e first place. It was chartered and started in 1902, the year in which the Sovereign started. The Home Bank had a long and prosperous career as a savings and loan institution prior to its incorporation as a chartered bank in 1903. It started business in the new form in 1906. The Northern-Crown is a combination of the Crown Bank, which began in June, 1904, and the Northern Bank, which started at the end of 1905.

The Sterling began in 1906, the Vancouver and the Weyburn Security in 1910, and the Banque Internationale, the youngest of the Canadian banks, has just opened its doors.

Nearly all these banks can boast of having kept their doors open every business day since they began, and of having honoured all obligations as they matured. Considering the respectable age which many of them have attained, this is something of which they have good reason to be prioud.

MORE MALES THAN FEMALES IN CANADA'S POPULATION

Census Report Shows Stronger Sex is Stronger Numerically by One Half a Million.

MORE WOMEN IN ONTARIO

OTTAWA, DEC. 20.—The census report issued by Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture, shows that males preponderate in Canada by nearly half a million. The figures are: males, 3,895,350; females, 3,376,937.

In the separate totals of each province the same phenomenon is noticeable. In the West this is especially emphasized, of course, due to the newness of the country, and its concomitant hardships, and also to the fact that so many new citizens of the Prairie Provinces have not yet sent to the Old Country for the feminine portion of their families.

Ontario Figures.

In Ontario the gentler sex are in the minority by 65,448, the respective figures being: Males, 1,299,403, and females, 1,223,955. In Toronto, however, a fair percentage of the ladies will never obtain husbands unless they seek them elsewhere, for there are not enough men to go around. The figures show a total of only 161,968 males compared with 165,968 females in the five divisions of the city, a difference of just about four thousand. In Hamilton, there are 39,640 males and 47,437 females, but the ladies get the short end of it again in London, where they number 24,403, with only 21,902 males in the community. In Ottawa the condition is the same, males numbering 34,836 and females 38,353.

In Quebec.

The excess of males is also notable in the Province of Quebec, where they are in the majority by 19,707. They number 1,012,506, while the total of females is 922,799. The eight Montreal ridings also show more males than females, with totals of 267,710 males and 259,918 females. But in Quebec's city and county divisions the females are again present in the biggest numbers, with the figures showing 39,687 males and 43,213 of the other sex.

Even in the long-settled Maritime Provinces the refrain of the old song, "three women to every man," proves to be a fallacy. In New Brunswick the women number 172,023, and the men 179,865. At the same time the ladies have a majority in St. John city and county. They are 27,489, while the men total 26,082. There are ten thousand more males than females in Nova Scotia, the figures showing 251,019 of the former and 241,320 of the latter. In Halifax the two sexes are almost equal in number, 40,061 men and 40,197 women. Prince Edward Island has a population of 47,065 males and 46,657 females.

Men Lead in the West.

As one travels westward the bachelor becomes a more and more noticeable feature of the country. In Manitoba the sexes are divided, 250,196 males and 206,673 females, and in the City of Winnipeg the men number 70,017 and the women only 57,971. In Saskatchewan there are 389,114 men, while the women are but 198,778; in Alberta the men preponderate to a still greater extent. There are 224,417 of them, and only 151,017 of the gentler sex. There are 108,883 more men than women in British Columbia, the population being divided into 243,835 males and 136,952 females. In Vancouver the figures are 74,390 men and 49,512 women, and in Victoria 19,077 men and 12,571 women.

OVERHEARD IN A DEPARTMENT STORE

(By Caroline Wells)

"So hard to find things for a man"—
"I do believe I've lost ten dollars!"
"Maude's crazy for a point-lace fan."
"I'm awful tired of sailor collars."

"I MUST meet Emmeline at two"—
"But haven't you a MAUVE kimono?"
"Oh, that's just elegant for Sue!"
"Who wrote 'The Merchant of Verona?'"

"It isn't only buying GIFTS,
But holly ribbon—tissue paper—"
"I WON'T go in those crowded lifts!"
"Have you a hammered-brass crumb-scraper?"

"The thing you WANT you NEVER find—"
"Yes, but I s'pose she has a dozen—"
"My DEAR, I've simply LOST my MIND—"
"What SHALL I get for William's cousin?"

"Don't you keep crewels any more?"
"She won' have records that ain't classic—"
"I've tried in every single store—
I can't get grandma that green hassock!"

Each year the scene comes round again,
With all its care, expense and worry;
But "Peace on earth, goodwill to men"
Prompts all this blessed Christmas flurry!

CHRISTMAS RECIPES

Genuine English Plum Pudding.—Soak one-half pound stale breadcrumbs in one cup hot, scalded milk. When cool, add one-half cup sugar and the yolks of four eggs beaten until thick and lemon-coloured; then add one half pound of raisins (seeded and cut in pieces), and one-fourth pound of currants dredged with two tablespoons flour, one-fourht pound of figs finely chopped, two ounces of citron cut in thin strips, and one half cup English walnut meats broken in pieces. Cream one half cup suet, using the hand, and add half a nutmeg grated, three-fourths teaspoon cinnamon, one-third teaspoon clove, one-third teaspoon mace and one and one-half teaspoons salt. Combine mixtures, and when thoroughly blended add one-fourh cup brandy and the whites of four eggs beaten until stiff. Turn into a buttered mould, cover closely, and steam six hours, never allowing the water to fall below the boiling point.

Boiled Plum Pudding.—One pound of butter, one pound of suet freed from strings and chopped fine, one pound of sugar, two and one-half pounds of flour, two pounds of currants, two pounds of raisins, seeded, chopped and dredged with flour, one quarter of a pound of citron shredded fine, twelve eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, one pint of milk, one ounce of cloves, one half ounce butter and sugar, beat in the yolks of eggs, two grated nutmegs, cream when whipped smooth and light; next put in the milk, then the flour alternately with the beaten whites; brandy and spices; lastly the fruit, well dredged with flour. Mix all thoroughly, wring out the pudding cloth in hot water, flour well inside, pour in the mixture, and boil five hours.

Baked Plum Pudding.—One and a half pounds soda crackers, buttered and soaked in sweet milk over night Mash fine, add four beaten eggs, one and a half pounds seeded raisins, a cupful of good molasses, one half teaspoonful ground cinnamon, one half a nutmeg grated, one-eighth teaspoonful of ground cloves. The mixture must be as thick as pancake batter. Put a layer of the batter in the bottom of the baking dish, then a layer of raisins sprinkled with flour, and continue until all material is used, with a layer of batter on the top. Bake two and a half to three hours in a rather slow oven and serve either hot or cold. Sauce for the same is made as follows: One cupful of butter, two cupfuls of sugar beaten till light, then add four tablespoonfuls of thick, sweet cream. Flavour with vanilla.

Steamed Plum Pudding.—One pound of seeded raisins, three-quarters of a pound of stale breadcrumbs, one-quarter pound of flour, same brown sugar, one pound of currants, one-half pound of minced candied orange peel; one pound of chopped suet, a scant teaspoonful of salt, five eggs, one half a tumbler of coffee, one-half nutmeg, and the grated peel of a lemon. Mix flour, fruit and spices well, add crumbs and suet, beat the eggs, add to them the coffee, pour over the dry ingredients, and mix well. Pack into small greased moulds and steam eight hours at the time of making and two hours when wanted for use. Serve with any preferred sauce.

PELE IN A PAINT

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall to the floor. I could not sweep without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has so built up my system that I can wash and do my housework. Your medicine cured me when doctors had failed."

SUCCESSFUL CHILDREN

So often parents who are poor in the world's goods have cause to feel unhappy over the attitude their children take towards the humble home. "Oh, I wish we were rich like the Smiths," a boy or girl will say—or rather whine, for complaining children always "whine" about their lot in life. And the poor father will go from home to his place of business with a heavy heart, and the mother will go about her household duties with a feeling of heaviness in her breast, and wonder if, after all, her loving solicitude for her children is understood by them.

The fact is, too many boys and girls of to-day attach all importance to money. They think more about it and what it procures—than they think of their parents, home and future. Few poor children are halfway contented with their lot. This is very sad indeed. There is nothing in the world so sweet and so helpful as the contented mind and the ever cheerful disposition. If a boy or a girls finds love and sweet contentment at home all sufficient, he or she will succeed in his or her chosen walk of life. Why envy the rich child? It is the boy who struggles to gain the top that wins in the end, and wins through sheer force of his fine personality and determination. The child of the rich parents has nothing to struggle for, and rarely becomes more than a wild money-spender, regardless of the manner of his rearing. Is it not a fact noted every day that most capable fathers, who had to pave their own way in life, handicapped by poverty, have worthless sons and daughters, mere society money-spenders?

But the right kind of boy, and the right kind of girl, will help to make the poor home richer by their presence in it. They will pursue their studies diligently, knowing that it is hard for Father to earn the money necessary for their education, and just as hard for Mother to keep their clothes and their home presentable. When each member of a household tries to "help along" things will be sure to "turn out right."

When boys and girls are discontented with their home because it is poor, let them turn to the biographical libraries and read of men and women who have attained high and honourable places in literature, art, science, statesmanship, business and the professions, and for the most part they will find they were the children of poor but honest parents, coming from real obscurity. Money cannot develop the child, except just so much of it as is necessary to defray the expenses of his simple living and his education.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

REPORT OF LOCAL COW TESTING ASSOCIATION

An encouraging feature of the cow testing work this year is the fact that very few men have started to keep records and then neglected to carry on he work, which shows that a great deal of interest is being taken, and judging from the number of inquiries received and the number of people who have stated that they intend to test their cows nex year, the Peterborough Dairy Record Centre should be one of the largest in the province.

However there are a few men every year who drop out for one or two months, or before they have found out what their cows are doing or will do in the milking period, and will then declare that "there is nothing in cow testing." It might be well to explain that it was never claimed that weighing a cow's milk would cause her to give more milk or that the testing of samples would cause her to give richer milk, but it is claimed, and has been proven many times in this county, that any farmer who will use the information that he has obtained by weighing and sampling each cow's milk, can by disposing of this cow which only produced 3700 lbs. of milk in the year, and by keeping the heifer calf from that cow that gave 6000 lbs., and by giving the other cow a little more feed, which you have found that she can profitably use, because you were weighing the milk, and by feeding the cow in the corner a little less, you obtained more profit from her because she was getting more grain than she could profitably consume, will in the course of two or three years raise the average production of the herd and materially increase the profits.

Every observant farmer has noticed cows in his herd which, while not producing a large quantity of milk at any time, will continue to produce a fair amount of milk after th other animals in the herd have fallen very low. On the other hand some cows will give a large amount of milk for a short time and then go dry, but the average man is inclined to boast of the large amount of milk his cow gave in the flow and to forget how long or how short a time she kept it up. An extreme case of the type of cow just referred to is reported by Professor Mitchell of he Manitoba Agricultural College. A certain cow gave 1400 lbs. in June but during the entire milking period only gave 3000 lbs.

It is therefore very plain that if the farmer wishes to know with any degree of certainty which cow is giving the most milk, he must use the scales throughout the milking period.

Mony people will argue that the cow producing the most milk is the most profitable, as owing to the large yield of milk she will produce a large number of lbs. of fat even if the milk does contain a low per cent. of fat, and while this is sometimes true we have in the October records two cows in a herd, one o which gave 376 lbs. milk and the other 775 lbs., and the cow which gave 375 lbs. produced 6 lbs. more fat than the larger milker.

For the month of October the records show that the highest erd average was 856 lbs. milk and 34 lbs. fat, which was produced by the herd of Mr. Louis Brown of Norwood. The herd of Mr. F. J. Grenebank of Norwood was a very close second.

The highest individual yield was 1,082 lbs. of milk and 43¾ lbs. of fat, which was produced by a four year old pure bred Holstein owned by Mr. Andrew Marks of Norwood.

Among the herds around Peterborough, which did exceptionally well was that of Mr. J. R. Mann of Trewern, which averaged 24.7 lbs. fat. The herd of Mr. John Elliott of Peterborough, averaged 23 lbs. of fat; the herd of Mr. J. O. Ball, also of Peterborough, 24.4 lbs. fat; the herd of Mr. W. J. Telford, of Ennismore, 27½ lbs. of fat and the herd of Mr. W. G. Henderson of Shearer, 28.4 lbs. of fat.

Church Has Flourished

Student Has Been Successful in Port Hope Charge

Rev. Dr. Marsh of Springville attended the annual Christmas entertainment in connection with the Mill Street (Port Hope) Presbyterian Church last night, and reports a very successful gathering. The church has been without a pastor for the past year, and Mr. Cecil Best, the student who has been preaching there, has proved most efficient and capable. During his term the congregation has increased and the Sunday School doubled while there has been a large increase in the donations. A feature of last night's entertainment was the presentation to Mr. Best of a purse of gold from the ladies of the congregation, the gift being accompanied by appropriate Christmastide wishes.

ANNUAL MEETING

Springville Young People's Society Elects Its Officers

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour of the Springville Presbyterian church, held their annual meeting on Tuesday night, when the following officers were elected:

President—Mr. Bruce Elliott.
Vice-President—Miss Mary Marsh.
Rec.-Sec.—Mr. Fred Elliott.
Cor.-Sec.—Miss B. Whitfield.
Treas.—Mr. Frank Whitfield.
Miss. Treasurer—Mr. Ira Robson.

The reports presented for the work during the year were most satisfactory The Society has a membership of 42 and the prospects for the coming year are of the brightest.

After the business had been transacted, the following impromptu programme was given:

Musical selection—Miss Olive Tully and Mr. Bert Sanderson.
Trio—Rev. Dr. Marsh and Messrs. James and John Marsh.
Violin selection—Rev. Dr. Marsh.

Bright speches were made by Messrs. Fred Wilson, Bert Sanderson, Bruce Elliott, Harry Clarke and Robt. Colin.

NEW STATIONS

With the new train service that went into effect recently on the Grand Trunk Railway, the announcement is made that 98 of the new stations, out of the 150 contracted for in the spring, have been opened, 27 are under construction, and the balance will be completed in the spring.

These stations on the Grand Trunk Pacific are an innovation as far as stations in Western Canada are concerned, for they provide, unlike stations built heretofore, for the looking after the flag stations all the year round. This means that stations called flag stations, points where trains only stop when there are passengers to get on or off, are in charge winter and summer by a capable employee and are kept heated day and night.

The arrangement has been made with section men to live in these stations, quarters having been provided for them, and in return for looking after the station and keeping it in shape for receiving passengers at all times, they have heat and rent free. The one stipulation that is put on by the company is that the agent or section man must be married, for in this way the company thinks they will receive better service.

OFFICERS ELECTED

The Bricklayers and Masons have elected the following officers for 1912

President—Thos. Marks.
Vice-President—Thos. Whiffin.
Rec.-Sec.—Wm. Stevens.
Fin.-Sec.—Chas. Jenkins.
Treasurer—John J. Hartley.
Tiler—A. Wells.

PRESENTED WITH WATCH

Mr. T. A. Kelly, Warden of the United Counties of Northumberland and Durahm, was last week presented with a beautiful solid gold watch by the members of the council at their closing session. Mr. Joseph Hickson, the popular reeve of Manvers, made the presentation on behalf of the members of the council. The watch is beautifully engraved, with an inscription on the inner case and his monogram on the outside. Mr. Kelly was a worthy official, and this token of respect is a slight recognition of his worth and esteem.

WEDDING BELLS

SHAW—PARRINGTON.

A quiet wedding was solemnized yesterday evening at 5.30 p.m. at St. Luke's church when Mr. William Shaw was united in marriage to Miss Ethel Parrington. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. J. Sawers in the presence of the immediate frends. Miss Lilian Green was bridesmaid, and Mr. J. P. Parrington, brother of the bride, acted as groomsman.

Mr. and Mrs. Shaw will reside at 816 Water street.

CONNELL—SWITZER.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Switzer 456 Weller street, at 2.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when their niece, Miss Eva Switzer, was married to Mr. Sidney Connell, of the Township of Cavan. The ceremony was performed by Rev. I. Couch, Pastor of George Street Methodist Church. Little Miss Margaret Storey made a charming flower girl. At the conclusion of the ceremony those present sat down to a most sumptuous repast. Mr. and Mrs. Connell left on the 4.28 C.P.R. train for a honeymoon trip to Toronto and western points.

BROCK STREET RINK

There will be roller skating at Brock Street Rink for the balance of this week and all day on Monday next—Christmas Day. Arrangements have been made for a band concert to-morrow (Friday) night. With the weather as it is at present the management do not consider it advisable to flood the rink for ice skating, as there is every possibility of injuring the roller skating floor. What will be the ice-skaters' loss will, therefore, be the roller skaters' gain, and the latter will no doubt take full advantage of the opportunity afforded them to get a few more nights on the wheels before they have to yield to the steel blades.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT FROM COUNCIL IN REGARD TO HYDRO-ELECTRIC BY-LAW

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—We, the members of the City Council, who are responsible for the submission to the electors of the question whether they desire to obtain power from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, desire to address the electors through your columns in regard to it.

The Council has had under consideration for several years, the matter of obtaining power for the city. In 1907 application was made to the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission for advice, and the Commission, after its engineers had enquired into the power situation here, reported in 1908 that Burleigh Falls would be the best power for the city's purpose. Negotiations were opened with the Central Ontario Power Co., and carried on for some time, but a price could not be obtained from the company, that the Council deemed low enough to make the project feasible. This year, again, the Council applied to the Commission, and a report was made, recommending the purchase of the Otonabee Power Co's. property, on certain terms, but the Otonabee Co. refused to sell to the city. The Council then procured an option on the Lakefield power property, and had reports made upon it, including one from the Commission, but were advised that the price asked was too high for acceptance by the city.

After having reached this stage, we were informed by the Chairman of the Commission that if the people of Peterborough so desired the Commission would obtain power for the city. The Commission has larger powers of expropriation than the city, and is in a better position to undertake, and carry out, the object in view, as power matters stand in this district at this time.

We believe it is in the interest of the City to have the Commission undertake this work for us, and have submitted to a vote of the ratepayers this work for us, and have submitted to a vote of the ratepayers the question: "Are you in favour of obtaining from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, a supply of electrical power."

If the ratepayers, by their votes, say that they are, the Commission will take steps to prepare a contract and an estimate of the sum the city will require to raise for a distribution system, etc., and if these are favourable, a by-law will be submitted to the ratepayers to raise the sum required.

The City Council cannot borrow money for this purpose without again submitting the matter to the ratepayers, and so far as those of us who will be in the Council next year are concerned, a contract binding on the city will not be entered into until the ratepayers sanction it.

We believe it will be in the interest of the city to have a majority vote in favour of obtaining power from the Commission. The city will then have all the great powers of the Commission and the wealth of the Province to assist in obtaining municipal power. With water powers in and near the city, as we have, electric power and light should be as cheap here as any place, and much cheaper than most places. We believe it will be cheaper if the ratepayers vote favourably on this question.

In addition, the revenue will be used to pay for the system so that the city will at the end of the borrowing term, have still lower rates.

If we do not do this, all the western cities, which use Niagara power from the Commission, and other places that take advantage of such an offer as we have now, will have much cheaper power when the first term is up and the initial debt paid off. The future of the city demands that this condition must not arise.

If a householder, by paying the same sum as a purchaser as he paid in rent, can become an owner, and in a term of years own the house, free of debt, it certainly would be good business for him to do so. And the city would be foolish to continue paying rent for power if it can purchase it in a similar way.

A favourable vote will give us the aid of the Commission to procure power owned and controlled by the municipality.

An unfavourable vote will reject that offered aid and tie the city up to the power monopoly.

We urge the ratepayers, in their own interests, to vote in favour of obtaining power from the Commission.

Brother Of Local Man Murdered In The West

A despatch to the Examiner states that Mr. Kenneth Kingston, a Civil Engineer of Ottawa, was murdered, or supposed to have been murdered, on a trail in Saskatchewan. We are informed that Mr. L. B. Kingston, Civil Engineer on the Auburn power construction work, is a brother of the deceased. The exact details of the affair are as yet not to hand, but it has been learned that for some time past the deceased had been in charge of construction work on the C.N.R., or G.T.P. in Saskatchewan, and when found, his body was lying in a mutilated condition on a trail between the location of his work and his home.

Mr. L. B. Kingston has been in communication with the authorities in the west, but has been unable to secure any information as to detasils other than those stated above.

Miss Ethel Robinson Guest of Honour on Eve of Her Marriage

Miss Ethel Robinson, niece of Mr. David Laurie, of Coldsprings, Otonabee, whose marriage to Mr. Ernest Mahood of the same township, took place last evening, was the guest of honour at a "variety shower" at the home of Miss Robertson, Coldsprings, on Monday evening last. About thirty-five of the bride's friends of the Coldsprings Sunday School assembled, to present her with various articles of usefulness and beauty, for her new home. A very pleasant evening was spent in games and music, and the numerous gifts were accompanied with the sincere good wishes of the donors. The bride is very popular in the neighbourhood and in the Sunday School, where she has been an earnest and indefatigable worker. At the conclusion of the evening dainty refreshments were served.

GRANTED HEARING

(Toronto News.)

The Electric Co. of Toronto, was yesterday granted a hearing by the Federal Government with reference to the rights of claim to dams Nos. 4 and 8 in the Trent Valley system. Hon. R. L. Borden and Hon. Frank Cochrane represented the Government. The Electric Company, represented by Messrs. Strachan Johnson, solicitor, A. B. Colwell, secretary of the company, and T. B. Macaulay of Montreal, one of the directors claimed a right to the two dams, according to a promise of the previous government.

Fear the Amalgamation.

The mayors and civic representatives of the interested towns, Lakefield and Peterborough, claimed no dissatisfaction when there were two companies, the Otonabee Power Company and the Electric Power Company, but since they have formed a merger the towns are afraid of the consequences.

Favour Hydro-Electric.

The civic representatives favoured the granting of the franchises to the Commission rather than to the company.

Hon. Adam Beck represented the Power Commisson at the hearing. No decision is announced.

RAILWAY NOTES

Cheap Christmas fares on the G.T.R. are now on issue. To-day one and one-third fare will cover the round journey, while on Saturday the price for the round journey will be single fare only. The same applies to the C.P.R.

About twenty-five shantymen arrived in the city this morning on the Lakefield train. They were typically attired in the regulation lumbermen's costume, and brought with them a miscellaneous collection of baggage. After spending a few hours in the city, they took their departure on the 11.35 train via C.P.R. for their respective homes, where they will spend Christmas. They all bore indications of having patronized the local hotels pretty freely, and as a result were inclined to be a little hilarious.

YULE-TIDE CHEER BEHIND PRISON BARS

BY ONE WHO SPENT LAST CHRISTMAS DAY IN THE CENTRAL PRISON.

Clang! Six o'clock of a cold Christmas morning, and at sound of the great brazen gong 400 men in Central Prison throw aside bed covers and turn out to don their suits of blue and brown. So it is every winter morning of the year—in summer half an hour earlier—but this morning its different. "Merry Christmas, You Fellows!" cries a youthful voice from the top gallery, and a moment later cherry greetings are being distributed from prisoner to prisoner with as much real fervor and heartiness as though fate had been kinder to them and they were at home surrounded by friends aplenty.

"Where you goin' this afternoon, 126?" anxiously queries a voice from the lower floor.

"Haven't quite decided yet," comes the nonchalant answer. "Probably drop in for luncheon at the King Eddie, and later on take the girl to the Majestic."

"All right. Meet me at the corner of King and Yonge at 2 o'clock."

And so it goes, for the old-time order of absolute silence inside the walls of the old prison has been rescinded, and the men are permitted to talk one to another practically to their hearts' content.

THE DOORS UNBARRED

Then comes the sound of the unlocking of the heavy iron doors preparatory to breakfast. I remember that last Christmas morning it was Guard J A Pyle's turn for duty, and his cherry "Good morning, laddie; a Merry Christmas," did a lot to give a fellow a comfortable start on the Day of Days.

"Wonder what there is on the bill of fare for breakfast?" anxiously queries a voice from far down the line. As if there was ever anything but porridge!

"Yes, that just reminds me," comes in petulant tones from another; "I must really speak to that cook of ours. My bacon was not crisp enough yesterday, and he actually turned my egg."

"It's lamb's chop and French fried for me this morning," comes from another direction.

"I ordered toast and poached eggs and marmalade," says another.

"Ah, you fellows gimme a pain," howls the inevitable grouchy one. "The only meal you're ever sure of is the one you get here. Outside it's a hand-me-out or a free lunch or"—but he's incontinently howled down and the banter proceeds until cut short by the clang of the breakfast gong.

A REAL BREAKFAST.

Automatically the bar from in front of every cell door raises, and from each little alcove issues a man carrying a tin mug. Every one is in as great a hurry as though he were going for a really good breakfast instead of the same old day-in-day-out porridge and dry bread and coffee. For haste is essential. Only so many minutes are allowed to walk from the cell door to the ground floor where you scoop up a pint of coffee from a big tin can, hurry over to the head of a long table where you grab an eighth of a small loaf of bread, slap it on top of a tin dish containing the oatmeal and dash up the stairs to your "room." Then "clang" goes the great gong again, the doors are automatically locked, and you are left to recover your breath and eat your "bran-mash" in peace.

"Dear, oh dear. I really will have to protest. This cutlet of mine is quite overdone." This is the tone of the Old Campaigner from the fifth gallery.

"What's the matter? Ain't you gettin' it cheap enough? Perhaps you'd like to work for it," insinuates someone well versed in the O. C.'s pet failing, and the only sound heard is the rattle of spoon on tin pannikin as the feast proceeds.

NO WORK ON CHRISTMAS.

There's no work in the shops at Central on Christmas, and after breakfast and a five-minute walk in the yard, the men return to straighten up their cells and wile away the couple of hours until church time. The banter starts all over again; arrangements are made for "hoisting a few" at the St. Charles, or for a run down to Hamilton, or for taking Muriel and Maud to the opera as though there were a chance of the plans being carried out.

The Roman Catholics and the Protestants at Central have their own church services; and for some time prior to Christmas the choirs had been practising diligently for the occasion. The Protestant chapel is furnished with both a pipe organ and a piano, one of the prisoners acting as organist and another as choirmaster. The choir of the prison is really quite an institution, consisting usually of about 35 voices, and with a choice from probably 200 men it is not difficult to keep it up to a fairly high standard. Warden Gilmour takes a keen interest in the musical exercises, and it is never difficult for the choirmaster to arrange for extra nights for practice—thus serving a trinity of good purposes, breaking up the monotony of cell life, keeping the choir in good shape and making the men who don't belong anxious to be chosen for the choir.

CONVICTS GOOD SINGERS.

You missed it by not being in Central Prison last Christmas—as a spectator, of course, I mean. The music was especially good. There were "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing," "While Shepherds Watched" and many other old favourites, and to listen to the whole-souled singing of that 200 men must have impressed one that there was still a lot of good among them even though they wore the uniform of stripes. While visiting the prison one day, Commissioner Reeves, of the Salvation Army, who has been in the great penal institutions of the world, told the boys he had never heard as good singing in any of them as he heard in Central.

Apart from the music, though, Christmas was a red-letter day. The Sunday school teachers all remembered their scholars, and provided neat little boxes containing candy, nuts and fruit. The prison contractors, Taylor and Scott, gave each man a box of figs and an orange; the ladies of one of the city missions sent handsome little sachet bags, Christmas cards and books. So the boys were fairly well looked after.

At the conclusion of the morning the warden made a little speech. He started off with: "Boys, I want first of all to wish you from my heart a very Merry Christmas." He didn't ment or two. As though it had been practised beforehand, the response, "The same to you, sir," came spontaneously from the hundreds of men before him. It touched the warden; anyone could see that—but, then, the boys think a lot of the warden, anyway. He had occasion to wipe his eye a little and clear an unbidden huskiness in his voice.

CHRISTMAS CHEER.

And then the applause that greeted his announcement of the Christmas dinner! He had told the cooks to do their level best, he said, and he'd been out in the cook-house to see for himself that everything was right—and it was right. There was real roast beef (cheers) and real plum pudding (continued cheers) and other things. ("Three cheers for the warden," cried an excited and enthusiastic youngster, and it was a real case of Christmas cheer then.)

And the dinner was just as good as the warden had promised. The helping of beef was generous, and the meat was cooked to a turn, with plenty of brown gravy and baked potatoes. None of your baked-in-the-jacket spuds, but baked right in with the roast, nicely browned on one side. And the plum pudding! It was well worth the while, this pudding. Stuffed with big raisins and currants, and covered with a rich white sauce, it was fit for anyone. There's plum-duff every Sunday for dinner, but this Christmas pudding was in an entirely different class. There is a rumour at Central that whenever the prison glazier runs short of putty he just grabs a chunk of plum-duff and goes right on with his work. This may be a gross libel for all I know, but that's the report anyway. Then there was good tea with milk and sugar in it, neither of which usually figure on the menu card. It was a good dinner, and, believe me, it's no mere figure of speech to say it was done full justice to.

SALVATION ARMY WORK.

In the afternoon the Territorial Headquarters Staff Band of the Salvation Army gave a splendid concert, and the glee club sang a number of jolly choruses which greatly pleased the men.

Right here is as good a place as any to say what I have to say about the Army prison work. The Salvation Army is doing a grand work for God and for good at Central Prison. Their frequent services are always bright and cheerful, and I have seen many a man turn to the better life through them. Lieutenant-Colonel Pugmire, who has charge of the Army prison work, is very popular, and always has a new song or story to sing or tell. I remember a little incident that I thought particularly funny at the time. The colonel had just sung a pretty little Salvation song entitled "Sunshine on the Hill," the boys joining in the chorus, and he told this little story:

"While I was out in Winnipeg recently, I sang that song before a great audience, among whom was Hon. T. Mayne Daly, the city's police magistrate. I met him a day or so later and he said to me: 'Colonel, that Sunshine on the Hill song of yours has had a marked effect upon me. Do you know that I find myself humming it on the bench. Why, this morning I let one fellow off scot-free who I believe should have had a couple of months in jail.'

"So you see, boys, a song may have a great influence for good," concluded the colonel.

SING IT TO DENISON.

Quick as a flash came the query from one of the striped brotherhood: "Why don't you sing it to Denison, colonel?"

Everybody roared with laughter, the colonel as heartily as the rest.

With the advent of the present government in Ontario, the lot of the prisoner has been improved greatly. He is now treated as a man, and not as being a trifle lower than a brute. And while I take off my hat to Hon. Dr. Hanna for all he has done to improve things, I'm going to bracket with his the name of Dr. J. T. Gilmour, warden of Central Prison, and true friend to every man who comes under his authority. Once upon a time the rule of absolute silence even when at work was rigidly enforced. Now the men are permitted to chat together at all times in reason. There's one thing at Central that in my humble opinion ought to be abolished from Central as a relic of barbarism, and that is the whipping machine. It's not an edifying spectacle to say the least, and not at all in keeping with the uplifting policy of the government or the humanitarian reputation of the warden.

While I was at Central, a report got about that the guard who usually officiated at the whipping post had met with an accident that bruised him up badly; and to tell the truth I fear that I must record that there was much unholy glee in the big prison.

THE EASTER CELEBRATION.

Like Christmas, Easter is celebrated royally. The choir prepares special music both for Good Friday and Easter Sunday, and the services are bright and interesting. The choir of All Saints' Church sang at the Good Friday morning service, and the Dovercourt band played in the afternoon.

I mustn't forget to tell you about the big concert we had last March. It was one of the finest ever—everybody said so. Every number was provided by the prisoners. There was a chorus of 50 voices, and it was simply inspiring to hear that well-trained body roll out the splendid tones of "O Canada." A lady visitor told me that she never before heard the hymn sung with such fervour and expression.

When a committee from the prisoners waited upon the warden to ask permission to arrange for a concert, consent was readily obtained, the only stipulation being that every number must be given by the men themselves, and no outside talent obtained. Then the committee got to work promptly. The general committee was sub-divided, one having charge of the music, another of the minstrels, and another of the specialties. Practice nights were set apart, and for several weeks there was plenty of work for all who took part. The hardest part of all was not to arrange for a concert, but how to reject the many good things that were offered.

A GREAT SHOW.

When the night for the concert arrived, the prison was agog with suppressed excitement. Despite all precautions, some of the jokes the minstrels were to crack had leaked out, and the boys were anxious to see how this guard or that one would "take it." The great convocation hall was crowded; many 'outside' guests were there, both ladies and gentlemen; the choir, all arrayed in new suits for the occasion, occupied a commanding position; the ushers, attired in new uniforms and wearing smiles and silk committee badges, handed each of the guests a nicely printed programme and showed them to reserved pews in front. The warden made a few felicitous remarks, and the show was on.

It was a great show, too. The minstrels had the first part, and put everybody in good humour. There was an abundance of end-men's jokes, solos, choruses and specialties. It was a real sure-enough black-face aggregation, for every coloured man in the prison had been asked to take part, and as most of them sang in the full rich tones of the untrained and naturally unspoiled voice of the "down south" darkey, the effect was melodious and highly appreciated.

A PRISON POET.

The programme was diversified, and ran the gamut from lightning chalk sketches to banjo solos. One of the cooks, a big good-natured Irishman, recited an original poem, "The Men Behind the Bars," that was a gem in its way. It began:

"Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage;
But they come all-fired near it
In this comprehensive age."

A real Ballyhoo-barker who had seen service at Coney Island, introduced a troupe of gymnasts and contortionists that would do credit to any show on earth; a soldier who had served in the American army in Cuba did wonderful exception on a banjo; a man who claimed to be "a reformed Christy minstrel" did some exceptionally clever clog dancing; there was a character sketch artist who had sold soap pills with a travelling medicine troupe and a lot more members of the "profresh," legitimate and otherwise. All in all, it was a great concert, and a credit to the clever men who provided the entertainment.

Some people have a general sort of idea that Central Prison population is composed almost wholly of thugs and "low-brows." There was never a greater mistake. The majority of them are young fellows of marked ability—in many cases their ability—wrongly directed, of course—accounts for their being in prison.

GREEN CHRISTMAS PLAYING HAVOC WITH THE TRADE

Unseasonable Weather Causes General Depression in Business Circles---Heavy Snowstorm Would Make Big Difference.

If the storekeeper had control of the calendar he would issue an order for Christmas to come around about the middle of next month. This unseasonable weather is certainly playing havoc with some of the merchants, especially those in the clothing trade. Some of them have been wearing long faces for the past month, but for the last two or three days they have been turning their eye heavenward and earnestly praying that some best manufactured flakes be sent down to earth in a hurry and to repeat the order every few hours until Yuletide is past.

Green Grass Unwanted.

Christmas and no snow! Never before and—never again, if the prayers of the retailers avail and they certainly should 'cause they're in dead earnest.

For warm clothing there is no call and as for sporting regalia, hockey sticks, skates and countless other articles of like nature there is practically no thought of them. In fact the season is so backward that the giving of a pair of skis or skates as a present would almost be looked upon as out of place. A fan, a panama hat or a pair of patent dust protectors for the eyes would be more in keeping with the general drift of things.

The tobacconist is not quite so bitter against the weather conditions as the rest of those who have Christmas wares to give unto the people. Cigars and tobacco are just about as good in September weather, even though it is Christmas time, and they make just as good yuletide presents despite the absence of snow.

Glistening jewelry is bright all the year around, but some how or other it has not been quite so easy to sell during the last fortnight as during the corresponding two weeks of 12 months ago.

Brain Racking.

There are lots of people downtown. That is not the trouble, but they are only wandering around with long slips in their hands, with a hundred names of relatives and friends who surely expect something at this time of the year. That's what is wrong. The people are not buying. They want something, but the weather, nasty stuff, is not just to order, and it would almost seem that everything else is in keeping. A good heavy snowstorm would make all the difference. The things that before seemed decidedly unsatisfactory would at once appear in an entirely different light and Christmas shopping would become a delight instead of a hardship.

Iron Arms In Outfield

One of the most spectacular feats on the ball grounds is a long throw from deep field which cuts off a run. The Boston American, in commenting on the present dearth of long-distance throwers, publishes the following interesting sketch:

"What has become of all the great throwers in the big leagues? Has the decrease in batting which has robbed us of the fun of ever seeing some of those marvellous catches that Curt Welch, Jimmy McAleer, Ed. Hanlon and a few others used to make also eliminate our throwing element?

"I recall the time when there were any number of men that could throw a ball the length of the grounds. But they are the exception instead of the rule nowadays.

"Take Charlie Jones, with the St. Paul team, and he seems to have it on any man playing baseball to-day for throwing accurately. A few years ago many a man was caught at the plate by some wonderful throw from the outfield that simply electrified the fans.

"Occasionally we get a dose of that kind now, but not very often. During the last few world's series Murphy threw from deep right field in the first game, getting the runner at the plate, and it was the prettiest play of the entire series.

"I remember when the Troy team, then a member of the National League, came to Chicago. Among its members were Buck Ewing, Dan Brouthers, Mickey Welsh and others, including Fred Pfeffer, who had just been secured from Louisville. Ewing belived Pfeffer to be the greatest thrower in the business and so told Anson.

"I've got a man on my team that can beat him throwing for a hundred dollars of my money,' came back the big captain.

"'I have a hundred that says he can't,' replied Ewing.

"The match was made and the next morning at 10 o'clock Pfeffer and the entire Troy team were collected at the Lake Front grounds ready for the contest. Anson then produced his man, who proved to be Ed. Williams.

"The men were each entitled to three throws. Pfeffer decided to rest after his second throw, Williamson just threw once, and let it go at that, beating Pfeffer by four feet. Pfeffer took his other throw, but did not beat his mark.

"If I remember rightly, for I was quite a boy then ,the throw was 132 yards and some feet. Williamson afterward went to Cincinnati and beat that throw.

"Jimmy Ryan, when a member of the Chicago team, was a wonderful thrower. He could not throw the distance that Williamson and Pfeffer did, but he could line them home so accurately that no runner took a chance of scoring from third unless Ryan had to run out to get the catch and turn and throw. Whenever he caught the ball standing still he always caught the runner who attempted to beat his throw to the plate.

"Tredway, who once wore a Denver uniform, and afterwards went to Brooklyn, was another boy that could throw a ball 'a mile.' But he didn't last long. He was a big strong fellow with plenty of speed behind the pellet when he sent it homeward; in fact, I don't believe any of them had it on 'Tred' when it came to speed."—Baseball Magazine.

President Comiskey of Chicago has given Manager Callahan permission to trade or release any White Sox pitcher except Pitcher Walsh. Callahan wants two pitchers, an infielder and a hard-hitting outfielder.

CORBETT COULD NOT HAVE KNOCKED OUT FITZSIMMONS

The assertion that Corbett could have knocked out Fitzsimmons at Carson City, but permitted Fitz to stay for the benefit of the moving pictures is the veriest rubbish, without a shadow of foundation. Although Fitzsimmons was 35 years old in 1897, when he met Corbett, yet the freckled fighter was in his prime, and no boxer in the world could afford to let him stay a second if the opportunity to stop him was presented. No one knew this better than Corbett, a man with an annoying jab, but no knockout punch. Had Corbett been a hard hitter, he would doubtless have wn from Fitz in the sixth round, for Fits was in sore distress and at one time during the run was on one knee, listening to the count of the referee, says an American writer.

Burt Corbett lacked the punch and Fitzsimmons' remarkable stamina and recuperative powers came to his aid. He weathered the storm of the sixth, and came back streng in the seventh, and from that time on gradually wore Corbett down till the fourteenth round, when with his famous left shift and solar plexus blow he knocked the champion out of time, although not unconscious. When Fitzsimmons had Corbett in distress in the final round, there was no failure of punching ability.

As between Corbett, the clever, shifty, showy, light-hitting boxer, and Fits., the crafty, rugged fighter, with a knock-out punch in either mitt, the question of superiority was definitely settled at Carson. Each man was at his best, and the puncher won. It was a triumph of heavy hitting, backed by shrewdness, over fancy boxing without a punch.

O.H.A. GROUPS MUST BE DECIDED BY FEBRUARY 3rd

With the exception of Group No. 10, junior, all the schedules of championship games have been received by the O. H. A., and will be revised immediately by the sub-committee.

Group No. 12 intermediate, in which five teams play on three rinks have extended their group schedule to February 12, owing to the fact that ice will not be available in the Welland and Niagara Falls rinks, until after the New Year. Notwithstanding this drawback this group will have to produce a winner at the same time as any other district, or be counted out of the running. The very latest date for group winner is February 3.

The schedule of Group No. 5, intermediate, has again been revised.

Orillia juniors disclaim any connection with the Orillia intermediates, who are a separate organization entirely from the junior runners-up of last year. The juniors are known as the Orillia Hockey Club.

GIANTS HAD SUCCESSFUL INVASION OF CUBA

NEW YORK, DEC. 20.—The Giants had one of the most successful trips a big league club ever made to Havana. Not since Detroit won the series two years ago has an invading team beaten the Cubans. The Giants have won nine games and lost three.

The Giants started to play ball when they first arrived in Cuba as other big league clubs have played it, in that "it doesnt' make any difference" spirit. But the team had traveling with it a young man, name of McGraw, who pointed out that these Cuban ball players were rapidly losing all sense of proportion because they had beaten club after club, even the Philadelphia Athletics, and it looked as if the task of changing the Cuban opinion of the United States ball players was going to fall on the shoulders of the Giants. The Giants have done the trick.

Mathewson started out and won his first three games, being beaten for the first time last Thursday by the score of 7 to 4.

The invasion of the Giants has revolutionized things in Cuba, a land o baseball, as far as playing the game goes. The first day that the club appeared they were greeted with a riot that held up the game one hour and a half and did a good deal toward getting the populace acquainted with John McGraw. Previously it had been the habit of the patrons to drape themselves about the outfield and interfere with the pastime whenever the opportunity offerd. But McGraw objcted to this and also to the language used by the Havana catcher.

Rigler sided with McGraw and ousted the catcher from the game. He came back like a famous cat and McGraw held up the game, asking Rigler: "Isnt' that the guy you put out a little while ago?"

As soon as the identity was proven the riot followed. The next day the Commissioner of Public Safety gave Rigler absolute authority on the field and put the police under his direction. These kept the crowd back off the diamond and maintained order.

It is customary for mounted police to attend these games and stand around the outfield. While the Phillies were in Havana one of the Cuban players drove the ball into the outfield and it rolled between the feet of one of the horses. The policeman promptly began to spur his horse, which responded by bucking, and Sherwood Magee was unable to get the ball, which resulted in the hitter making a home run. It was against such little eccentricities as this that McGraw protested.

Varsity's Good Year

Canadian Champions Cleaned Up $40,000 on the Season

TORONTO, DEC. 20.—Varsity had a good financial year so far as rugby was concerned this fall, the Blue and White quitting over $10,000 ahead on the season, and at this rate they will be able to go ahead and continue the concrete grandstand all around the field without bothering about the cost in the slightest.

Over 40,000 attended the games this fall, and there is not the slightest doubt that with more accommodation of the same kind as that which is offered on the west side of the field, the attendance would have been even larger.

Th receipts for the year amounted to $20,544.31, which includes the final intermediate and junior intercollegiate games and the Mulock Cup final The expenditures totalled $5,-686.94, which left a balance on the right side of $14,574.37. The final game, of course, was the most expensive, but that can be laid mainly to the cost of the new bleachers. The Montreal trip, as usual, was a costly affair, totalling $517.45. The expenses of the Dominion final were $2,955.63.

The intermediate and junior games brought in very little money. The time the two soldiers' teams from R. M. C. played at the stadium they brought in just $66.25, and the Mulock Cup final, between Junior Arts and Victoria, brought in another $65.70.

Nelson Claims Title

NEW YORK, DEC. 20.— Battling Nelson has taken advantage of the illness of Wolgast, the lightweight champion, to come out in the open with a renewal of his defi to all lightweights. Though it is against the law to post forfeits in this State, the Battler says he has deposited a cheque for $2,500 to clinch a match. He explains his wishes in the matter: Some one has to be the champion, and I am ready to meet all comers as fast as they can appear. I am back in my old championship form. I do not claim the title yet, but will defend it until Wolgast is sufficiently recovered to meet it."

CANADIAN LEAGUE

Toronto News: The Canadian League has not given up all hope of placing a team in Toronto. With Ottawa and Peterborough in the circuit in the east, the Queen City would fit in nicely in President Fitzgerald's circuit and there are any amount of local baseball men who would be only too willing to finance a local team. Though the matter was disposed of apparently for "keeps" at the International League meeting, it is thought that if President McCaffrey could be induced to see things in a more favourable light that President Barrow and his associates would consent to give the Ontario organization a trial at least. Personally, I do not favour the idea, but there is little doubt but that a good team would more than pay its way here, especially when it is considered that the Toronto club is on the road on many Wednesdays and Saturdays during the summer.

BASEBALL

Chicago admirers of Pat Dougherty, left fielder of the Chicago team, are discussing well-founded rumours that the veteran fielder is about to be released by President Comiskey.

The Detroit Club has signed an 18-year-old Detroit amateur pitcher named Mike Mauser, who has made a local record entitling him to a trial in President Navin's opinion.

Western baseball sharps have discovered that the Detroit Club has allowed many valuable players to slip out of its grasp. Among them are Thomas of the Athletics, Archer of the Cubs, Warhop and Cree of the Highlanders, Kirke of the Boston Nationals, Simmons of next year's Hillmen, Beecher and Suggs of the Cincinnatis and Schaefer of the Washingtons. Yet the Tigers have managed to play winning ball just the same.

Is Breaking Records

George Goulding, the lanky Canadian walking champion, is going to make a great mark for himself in the athletic world this year if his performances so far this season are any criterion, says the Buffalo Courier. This early in the year he has broken his own world's record for the mile walk, shattering the mark last Saturday night at the Seventy-Fourth regiment games. So good a judge of heel-and-toe walkers as Adam Gunn declares that Goulding stands out alone in the walking game, and his performances seem to prove it. Buffalo had a fair lot of walkers in Schmandt, Kopperman, Whitehead and others, but when Goulding showed against them they looked like a band of trailers following a sprinter. Goulding's performances have attracted attention down east, too, and he is demand as an attraction. Usually the heel-and-toe performers go along in a herky-jerky fashion, looking to the spectator as though every movement were painful and a great physical effrt, but Goulding swings along with perfect rhythm, and it is really a pleasure to see him annihilate space with his long stride. Goulding has put walking on a new footing in the athletic calendar.

A Few Words about your Watch. — "Why does your watch get dirty? You will find the answer in your vest pocket. Turn it out," said the jeweller. The inquirer turned out his watch pocket, sheepishly bringing forth a pinch of mud coloured dust, some lint, and a small bag of black fluff. "There is the reason," said the jeweller. "Watches get dirty because the pockets they are carried in are never clean. A watch pocket, my dear sir, should be cleaned out regularly once a week. Observe that rule and your watch works will not get clogged up again.. Another and a seasonable rule is never to lay your watch down on stone or marble. The cold deranges the delicate works. Wind your watch in the morning—never at night."

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

MAN never is, but always to be, old."

—With apologies to Pope.

A woman who must be between fifty and sixty years of age was speaking to me of a friend of hers—"She is a very jolly girl," she said, "but rather countrified and unpolished."

At the word "girl" there came into my mind the idea of a young person, perhaps nineteen or twenty—perhaps twenty-five or thirty.

"How old is she?" I chanced to ask, having for certain reasons a curiosity about this person.

"Oh about my own age," said the woman, "No, I think she may be a year or two older. She graduated from school in the class ahead of me."

And yet it was quite evident that she was conscious of no incongruity in referring to her friend as "a girl."

Surely you have noticed how very largely relative is this matter of age in the minds of the sons and daughters of men.

If you haven't, let me recommend this as an interesting and fertile direction for future observation.

Take your own case for example. Can't you remember when, as a little girl with pigtails down your back, or a little boy in short trousers, you regarded your cousin in college as the acme of grown-up-ness, and your aunt who was nearly thirty as middle-aged, and that neighbour of yours who may have been fifty-five as an old man?

But now that you are twenty, thirty, or fifty yourself, hasn't your scale of age measurements changed somewhat?

I well remember myself how I offended a dear aunt of mine by speaking of a mutual friend as "one of the best looking middle-aged women I knew."

"Middle-aged?" protested my aunt indignantly, "Why, Ruth, she is only thirty-five. You don't call that middle-aged, do you?"

My aunt was then thirty-seven and I was fifteen. Of course, I yielded the point outwardly, but inwardly I certainly did call that middle-aged, and regarded my aunt's contention that anyone under forty was young as most amusing.

Ah me, how times have changed! Just the other day I caught myself arguing that forty was the prime of life and no one should be called middle-aged until forty-five or fifty, or old until seventy.

Surely you have noticed how very much younger the high school children look nowadays than they did when YOU went to school. I believe the age average of high school graduates has gone down a year but not more than that, and in many places not that much. How do you account for the vast difference then? Ah, my friend, you don't need to account for it. It doesn't exist, except in your point of view. You are just giving yourself another example of the relativeness of age.

For most of the wrenches and jolts of life there are, happily, conditions which alleviate what would otherwise seem unbearable, conditions which soften and break the most cruel shocks. Death, for instance, the greatest shock of all, unless it is very sudden, seldom comes as an unbearable wrench, because weakness or suffering has prepared us for it.

But of all the alleviating conditions, it seems to me that none are more kindly and grateful than this fact of the relativeness of age.

How beautiful it is that, instead of painfully realizing the one's friends and one's self are "past numbers," to most of us except the very old, old age remains until the end merely an unwelcome, but pleasantly vague mirage that accommodatingly retreats as we approach.

May human nature never change in this! May we never grow foolishly wise for surely in this direction there can be no room for doubt that where ignorance, or rather, unrecognition, is bliss "'twere folly to be wise."

Ruth Cameron

POULTRY

The most important power in the management of poultry is the mental power of the manager. We sometimes are told that farm machinery will be developed to such a point that farmers will not need to do any manual labor. In fact, one paper has predicted in a joking way that all he will have to do is to sit in the shade and press keys while electricity will perform all the operations on the farm. We cannot just make out how even electricity can be harnessed so that it will run an incubator and keep the temperature right, keep chickens from smothering to death in the brooder. Even if it were possible, however, the greatest necessity of all would be the kind of machinery that the poultry man kept running in the upper part of his head.

The machinery of management is the power most needed in the running of the poultry business of to-day. Where this machinery is in running order we find the hens laying in winter when eggs are 35c and 40c a dozen. Sensible, sanitary, open air houses are used and disease is hardly ever known. Hopper feeding, which reduces the labor of feeding to a minimum and at the same time produces eggs and adds flesh most economically, will be practiced instead of the expensive system of wet mashes and frequent feeding. Eggs will be marketed guaranteed fresh. Four or five middle men will not be allowed to take a profit.

There are cramming machines, feed mixers, incubators, brooders and many other machines that tend to decrease the poultryman's work and increase his profits. But unless the machinery of management is running properly all other machinery in the poultry department will soon be useless. Mental power controls all other powers.

BIG PROPOSITION

From Farm and Dairy.

With a possible capitalization of $75,000, Dr. C. A. Publow is at present putting through the biggest proposition affecting dairy interests that Prince Edward county has ever known. It is the forming of the Farmers' Cooperative Dairy Company. It is aimed to include all the factories in the county. Already a large number of the cheese factories have joined with the proposed company, amongst the number being two of the largest in the county, Bloomfield and Cherry Valley. There will be no watered stock in the new company, all the profits will go to the people who are producing the milk, in proportion to the amount of milk sent.

This is the plan followed by the dairymen of Denmark, who are acknowledged to be leaders of the world in cooperative dairy work. The company is to be composed entirely of milk producers; no outside capital is to be connected with the company in any way. So far the plan has been accepted most favorably by all factories where meetings have been held.

BRITAIN FOR YUAN

He Stands for a Monarchical System in China

Hostilities Are Likely

Pekin, Dec. 22.—Premier Yuan Shi Kai yesterday gave his answer to those who are aiming to transform China into a republic. In an official statement, he declared, without qualification, that he refused to accept a republic.

At the Shanghai peace conference Wednesday, Wu Ting Fang, Foreign Minister in the revolutionary provisional cabinet, spoke strongly in favor of a republic and later Tang Shao Yi said that he was convinced that the abdication of the Emperor and the establishment of a republic was the only thing that would satisfy the people. At the same time he expressed doubts whether it would be possible to persuade Yuan Shi Kai to abandon his plan for a limited monarchy.

It is believed here that Yuan Shi Kai means what he says and will uphold the monarchy. A new situation has arisen. Great Britain, which has been supporting the Premier's monarchial program for several weeks, is now strengthened by the Japanese and is endeavoring to obtain the support of the United States and other countries. Great Britain believes that the action of the dependencies, Manchuria, Mongolia and Thibet, and the serious internal troubles of China would result far from the establishment of a republic, whereas the republicans have already obtained in a material way everything they desired. Only the name of the monarchy is left.

It is stated that the American group, if not the American state department, already supports the British idea and are ready with two, if not three of the others of the "four nation group" of financiers, to lend Yuan Shi Kai's Government money. Negotiations to this end have been proceeding for some days.

It was on Great Britain's initiative that the six powers urged the Shanghai peace conference to reach an agreement. Now Great Britain is endeavoring to persuade the rebels of the necessity to settle the revolution and come to terms.

It is stated out that British interference is not directed against China's interests, but against the sentimental idea in such cases where the practical interests of the entire nation are being jeopardized. The extension of the armistice for ten days to which the revolutionists have agreed, has given some hope, but unless the revolutionists accept Premier Yuan's offer the only alternative is continuation of the conflict, with possible division of the country, the dependencies rallying around the northern empire.

The Premier has sent 3,000 troops to Chinwangtao, on the coast of Chihli, with the object of preventing republican troops from assembling in the porth. Precautions are also being taken below Tientsin.

The revolutionary leader here positively assert that if Yuan Shi Kai persists in his refusal to accept a republic, the powers giving him their support would be regarded as the enemies of China and the lives of all foreigners in China would be jeopardized.

It is generally believed among the revolutionists that Great Britain is supporting the monarchy solely because of the dangerous example which would be set for India, should China become a republic.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the reform leader, is due to arrive here in a few days and it is believed that he will assume the leadership of the south. Large reinforcements of well-armed and well-trained troops are arriving from Canton.

BANK IS ABSORBED

Eastern Township Concern is Taken in by Commerce

ALL BRANCHES TO REMAIN

Toronto, Dec. 22.—A despatch from Montreal, announcing the amalgamation of the Canadian Bank of Commerce and the Eastern Townships Bank, does not come as a great surprise to the local financial world, as the sharp advance in the market quotations of each bank within the past few days foreshadowed important development. However, realization of expectations is causing more than a mere flutter, for the import of the news is that the biggest banking merger known in Canada has been effected. Moreover, the Bank of Commerce promises to press the Bank of Montreal hard for the distinction of being the biggest banking institution in the country.

At Montreal yesterday the directors of the Eastern Townships Bank ratified the terms of the agreement for the amalgamation, and the plans will be presented at a meeting of the shareholders shortly.

The united banks will operate under the title, "The Canadian Bank of Commerce," with which is incorporated the Eastern Townships Bank." The new bank's paid-up capital is $15,000,000. The reserve is $12,000,000; the aggregate assets are in excess of $210,000,000.

The basis of exchange is two $50 shares of Commerce stock for one $100 share of Eastern Townships.

The new bank's headquarters will be in Toronto. All the existing offices will be maintained.

Sir Edmund Walker, president of the Bank of Commerce, stated last night that the agreement had been pending for some time. The Eastern Townships Bank, he said, was strongly intrenched in the English-speaking parts of Quebec and in Nova Scotia, and the amalgamation was made for geographical reasons and not to eliminate competition.

When asked if the merger would have one significance to Toronto in the way of a new head office building, or a more extensive banking facility, Sir Edmund replied that it would not.

The Bank of Commerce, previous to the amalgamation, had a paid-up capital of $11,000,000, which figure is exceeded by the Bank of Montreal by nearly $4,000,000. The Bank of Commerce, however, has considerably more branches in Canada than its rival. The last statements give the Bank of Montreal 141 branches, and the Bank of Commerce 239.

The amalgamation will mean an aggregate of over $122,000,000 of deposits. This, however, is little below the deposits of around $170,000,000 which the Bank of Montreal can claim.

The news has been well concealed until the last few days, when rumors began to get about which forced a speedy decision of the directors. The climax came yesterday morning, when in consequence of the stories of the merger, which were floating around, Eastern Township stock took a jump on the local exchange of seventeen points, going up to 210.

The terms of amalgamation provide for the retention of all the Eastern Township and Commerce offices now in existence, and since the Eastern Townships Bank has a wide connection in the Maritime Provinces, while the Bank of Commerce branches cover the whole of the west to the Pacific coast and the Yukon, it will be seen that the amalgamation gives the new financial institution a very wide range.

The staff of both banks will be retained in full, and the Eastern Townships employes will be allowed to share the advantages offered by the Commerce pension scheme.

The new bank will have a total of some 330 branches, and will also have direct representation in London, New York, San Francisco and Mexico City.

One of the most important features of the amalgamation is in the arrangement of the directorate. The Eastern Townships directorate is retained as an advisory board, while a certain number of the directors will be placed as full directors on the new board to represent the Eastern Townships shareholders.

The directors of the amalgamated [illegible] ration are as follows:

Eastern Townships: William Farrell, president, Sherbrooke; S. H. Cowper, vice-president, Granby; Gardner Stevens, Waterloo; G. M. Kathan, Rock Island; J. S. Mitchell, Sherbrooke; A. C. Flumerfelt, Victoria, B.C.; O. A. Robertson, Minneapolis, Minn.; Geo. G. Foster, K.C., Montreal; B. C. Howard, Sherbrooke; F. H. McCrea, Sherbrooke; and Charles W. Colby, Ph. D., Montreal.

The Bank of Commerce: Sir B. E. Walker, C.V.O., LL.D., D.C.L., president; Z. A. Lash, K.C., LL.D., vice-president; Hon. Geo. A. Cox, John Hoskins, K.C., LL.D., Robert Kilgour, J. W. Flavelle, LL.D., A. Kingman, Hon. L. Melvin Jones, Hon. W. C. Edwards, E. R. Woods, Hon. J. M. Gibson, K.C., LL.D., William McMaster, Robert Stuart, G. F. Galt.

Endowed Theatre a Failure.

New York, Dec. 22.—"The New Theatre" idea, which was backed by several millionaires, headed by W. K. Vanderbilt, with the purpose of giving the country an endowed theatre with an established repertoire company of the first-class, is now announced to have been wholly abandoned.

When the founders of the project gave up the magnificent but unwieldy playhouse they had erected near Central Park, it was announced that the idea would not be abandoned, but that a smaller theatre would be erected further down town to house the stock company. At a meeting of the founders Wednesday night it was decided with reluctance to abandon the project altogether.

It was stated that the promoters had acted according to the advice of experts. It has been estimated that a fortune of several million dollars has been spent in the New Theatre cause, which commercial managers have continually berated.

Deadlock in New Zealand.

Christchurch, N.Z., Dec. 22—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The parties are evenly balanced after the elections, and the only possible way out of a deadlock seems to be to take a vote of confidence in the Ministry. Many members favor dissolution.

Violent Storm Sweeps France.

Paris, Dec. 22.—The eastern districts of France have been swept by a violent tempest of rain and wind. Yesterday much damage to property was caused. Many telegraph poles and trees in the forests were uprooted, while a score of fishing craft were cast ashore along the coast and a number of fishermen drowned.

Russians [and Persians Reported to Have Met

COUNCIL WILL SURRENDER

Teheran, Persia, Dec. 22.—That serious fighting has commenced between the Persian constitutionists and Russian troops is evidenced in despatches from Tabris, which state that the governor's palace has been bombarded. There were casualties on both sides, but their extent is not yet known. The British legation last night professed to have no details of the engagement.

There has been fighting also between the Russians and the Persians at Enseli, on the Caspian Sea, and at Resht, 16 miles northwest of Enseli. Conflicting versions are given as to the cause of the fighting. One says that the Russians seized the police headquarters at Resht.

It is feared that the news will have a deplorable effect upon public opinion in Teheran. The special commission of five deputies, which the National Council on Wednesday decided to appoint to deal with the Russian ultimatum, has not yet been formed, owing to the reluctance of the deputies to serve.

Attacked the Russians.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 22.—According to reports received from the town of Julfa, a suburb of Ispahan, Persia, the Persians yesterday attacked a Russian detachment. The firing lasted all day and the artillery took part in the engagement. Telegraphic communication with Persia has been interrupted.

A despatch from Tabris reports that a small body of Russians was attacked while engaged in repairing a telephone line. Two of the attacking party were killed.

Will Not Fight.

London, Eng., Dec. 22.—The Teheran correspondent of The Morning Post says that Russia on Wednesday presented to Persia a final ultimatum, demanding compliance with 24 hours, otherwise the Russian troops now stationed at Kasbin would advance on Teheran.

The National Council, says the correspondent, has now abandoned its policy of resistance and has voted the regent authority to settle in the best interests of the country. The acute stage of the crisis is believed to be ended.

McKenna is Gazette.

London, Dec. 22.—Admiral Lord Charles Beresford's recent speeches, in which he made statements against the administration of Reginald McKenna, former First Lord of the Admiralty, in relation to the alleged unreadiness of the British navy during the Anglo-German crisis in regard to Morocco last summer, have drawn a pointed reply from Mr. McKenna.

In a letter written for publication, Mr. McKenna, who in October changed the portfolio of the navy for that of Secretary of the Home Department, says: "Lord Charles Beresford's speeches did not disturb me in the slightest. Nobody attaches any importance to what he says, and it is common knowledge that I refused to employ him and also refused to recommend him as admiral of the fleet."

Can't Beat Niagara Peninsula.

St. Catharines, Dec. 22.—W. H. Bunting, appointed by the Laurier administration and continued by the Borden administration, to investigate the fruit conditions of Canada, is home for Christmas. He has completed his work in the eastern and western provinces.

All things considered, Mr. Bunting declares the Niagara district the most favored of all he has seen and declares it offers the best inducement as to growing of fruit and residence.

Serious Freight Wreck.

North Bay, Dec. 22.—A serious freight wreck occurred last night about seven o'clock on the C.P.R., 20 miles west of Pembroke. Two freight trains, which left North Bay about noon yesterday, eastbound, came together in a rear-end collision near Bass Lake. The leading train had stopped at the foot of a grade, and in the early evening darkness and by some mistake in flagging, the second train thundered down the grade and crashed into the standing train, wrecking the caboose and demolishing ten cars and the locomotive of the second train.

Engineer William Packer of North Bay was badly injured and Fireman Mackay of Chalk River is reported so seriously hurt that he may not live.

Fear Will Be Willing.

Winnipeg, Dec. 22.—Consternation has been created in civic circles by the possibility of the Privy Council's action against the city's contention that the Street Railway Co. has no authority to supply current for light, heat and power in Winnipeg.

While decision has not yet been rendered, the law lords it is felt have foreshadowed their decision by many direct questions, and by asking the solicitors for the city if they were willing to pay all costs, without contest, in the event that the decision went against them.

Six million dollars has been invested by Winnipeg in a municipal power plant, after the highest courts in Manitoba had decided that the Street Railway Co., which also furnishes light and power, had no legal status in the streets of the city.

A CHRISTMAS BRIDE

BY FRED. M. WHITE.

There was a glimpse of a ragged moon beyond the uncurtained windows—a cold, hard moon—with a thin drift of cloud lashing across it. The pines tossed and moaned, creaking in the intense cold. Inside, the atmosphere was unspeakable—a welter of stale, reeking humanity, kerosene, rye whisky and sawdust. The tobacco was mercifully strong, and perhaps played its part in the beneficent scheme of the Creator as a disinfectant. The spirit of Christmas should have been in the air—but it wasn't.

The saloon was packed to suffocation, though that was nothing new. But there was not a card to be seen, and this was a new and amazing precedent. Harold Oakshott stood with his back to the wall, dimly wondering what the Bachelors' club and what the Household brigade would say if they could see him now. At any rate, "the boys" were regarding him with marked hostility—that grave criticism that found vent always in rugged practical humour, beginning hilariously with tar and feather and working up the game to a noose in the end of a rope and the body of the unfortunate defendant filled with lead. Harold Oakshott, Lord St. Asym's case was very fast approaching the latter stage. Dick Montfort's sympathy was his, but then Montfort was a committee of one, and his inevitable gambling luck had taken the keen edge off his popularity.

"Old Glory" Sainton was summing up the evidence all against the prisoner. Sainton was the father of the camp—a great, loose-limbed giant, with a rugged face hidden under a mass of hair. His big voice boomed in the smoky rafters. St. Asym was a slip of a boy compared with him. But slip of a boy or no, he was a man of wire and whip-cord, and perhaps the finest "flying half" Oxford had ever turned out; also he could ride like a centaur, and the fear of no man had been put in his heart yet. Dick Montfort, the cool and collected gambler, looked a deal more perturbed.

"Sonny," Old Glory said, impressively, "you've had a fair run for your money. The hospitality of this yer camp 'as been yourn. You dropped in preminkus, and we let you stay. You was admitted into this saloon, and we won your money like gentlemen. We were not too proud to drink along with you. You came out to the land of glory to get a wife. Seein' as you'd got a considerable mortgage on the family wood pile, something had to be done. Your effete aristocracy has lifted some big dollars from the land of freedom lately."

"Pardon me, but your facts are not quite correct," St. Asym said, politely.

"Pass up the record, Pete," Old Glory commanded. A grimy hand holding a soiled newspaper cutting was thrust in the judge's direction. "Sonny, here it is. From the New York Messenger. I'll read it."

He spelt out the words with some difficulty from behind a pair of horn-rimmed spectacles;

"Lord St. Asym landed yesterday. He is a pretty boy, well set up, and cleaner in the eye than most of the gilded effeminates who come here gunning for our dollar princesses and incidentally the boodle to set the ancestral home on a dividend paying footing once more. He didn't say much, but it was easy to gather what class of game brought him here. His title is an old one, and royal blood runs in the young man's veins. He has the right to wear white spats in the presence of his sovereign. These privileges come high, and doubtless there will be spirited biddings in New York amongst our gilt-edged darlings. St. Asym looks a white sort, and they might do worse."

A murmur ran round the bar. There was a good deal more of it mostly mendacious, but it was felt that Old Glory had said enough.

"Are that here true, sonny?" he asked, solemnly.

St. Asym coloured faintly. The paragraph was certainly founded on fact. Some day or another he would have to marry for money; but he had no intention of selling himself. It was neither right nor tactful to plead that he certainly had had golden opportunities made for him in New York, and that he had moved west without a thought for the bright eyes he had left behind him. Besides, this might be constrained into a slight on the bright eyes of the many — on American womanhood as a whole.

"I came out here looking for sport," he said.

"And you found it," Old Glory proceeded. "What is the trouble? You found out little Chloe, and made love to her; and played with her feelings——"

"That, Mr. President, is not correct," St. Asym said, with a gleam in his blue eyes. "I certainly found Miss Chloe Western here, and certainly I made love to her. Since you force me to speak. I fell in love with her, and—well, she promised to marry me. She is going to be my wife."

A sudden hush fell upon the boys. The wind could be heard amongst the pines, the tapping of the frosty twigs came distinctly from the dark, rocking woods. Nothing happened to the young man standing there—no manifestation of Divine wrath or displeasure was vouchsafed.

"Not by a jugful you ain't," the president said, solemnly. "When little Chloe weds it'll be one of us. There ain't no man in the camp who wouldn't jump at the chance. Twenty-one years ago Hungry Bar didn't keep the soul and body of us hardly together. To-day there's no better paying silver reef in America. And twenty-one years ago there kim a man and a woman and a little girl in a cart. They came out from west of the hills, and they was done, sonny, absolutely, for want of food and water. And the man, he passed in his checks first, and the woman, she followed. And the little girl, she lived. Name of Western probably, but not sure even of that. And we adopted the kid. She was the child of the camp, the pet of us all. And when she got older we sent her to school. We made a lady of her. And we put aside 5 per cent of the reef, and it's all safe now in the hands of some great and good men in New York. One way and the other little Chloe's got four million dollars and more coming in. I don't rightly know how you found that out——"

"I didn't," the prisoner snapped. "All this is absolute news to me."

"I'd gamble my soul on that," Montfort hissed. "Who wants to dispute it?"

Nobody appeared to be particularly anxious. The president resumed with great gravity.

"We're going to give you the benefit of the doubt; but it don't make no morsel of difference. There ain't a man here who wouldn't give his life for little Chloe. She might have gone many years ago with her money, and had a lively time in the west. We couldn't have stopped her. She's the sweetest, sunniest thing that heaven ever made. She can shoot and swim and ride with the best of us. She don't know what the meaning of the word fear is. I'd rather have one smile from her than a week of sunshine. And when any of us are ill—well, ask a dozen of the boys. And yet with all the world before her she comes and stays nine months of every year here—the queen of the place. Course, we expected her to get married some day; but it's got to be one of us. There are a dozen boys here to-night that any woman might be proud to call a husband."

The prisoner suppressed a smile, which was discreet of him. He had learnt a good deal of history in the past half-hour. Chloe Western had been a dazzling mystery to him. Her dainty beauty had touched him from the first. What on earth was a gem like that doing in such a setting? It might have been the pose of some spoilt beauty; but the liquid clearness of the eye and the transparent whiteness of the skin belied that. And Chloe was as fine a sportsman as was St. Asym himself.

How had the whole thing come about? He hardly knew. He had fallen headlong in love with her; he had told her his real name and prospects, and what was expected of him. But that was all over. The family property and the family dignity must look after itself. He was going to remain in the states and marry Chloe and make a fortune. And Chloe was going to help. All might have been well, perhaps, had not Mustang Bob, or some other picturesque rival seen Chloe in St. Asym's arms.

St. Asym did not know that he had walked with his life in his hands for the next few hours. He guessed nothing till a couple of miners had come to his hut with drawn revolvers and escorted him to the saloon where the trial was already in progress. Even now he did not fully comprehend. He did not know that Chloe was going to be protected against himself. His admission had sealed his doom. The man who had touched Chloe's lips could not be shot like a dog, but he must have his lesson.

"You're young," the president said paternally. "You've good stuff in you, and you shall have your chance. You have got to clear, sonny. You've got to clear to-night. No, you ain't going to see Chloe again. We've already seen to that. The first man what spots you here after daybreak 'll shoot you on sight. So you're warned. It's twenty miles over the hills from here to Guilty Creek, and you may make it by morning. On the other hand, you may not, seeing the snow's due, and may start at any time. It's a race between you and the snow, my lord, and the betting's about even. If you get caught — well, we would not go into that. Take what you like, and borrow the first horse you can lay your hands on. And that's all."

As Old Glory stopped he pointed to the uncurtained window. A thin rift lay over the rugged moon—a rift that was all in motion. Something dry and powdery tinkled against the window panes. Some of the pines had lines of white along the branches.

The saloon hummed like a hive, glasses clinked behind the bar, and St. Asym heard the rattle of packs of cards in many grimy hands. He turned to find Montfort by his side.

"Am I awake or dreaming?" he asked.

"Call it the former," Montfort said, grimly. "Come across to my hut. No, I shan't play to-night. And remember you've no time to waste. Old Glory meant every word that he said, and these chaps are with him to a man. If you defy them your funeral is to-morrow certain. And don't imagine that you can drop quietly out of the place and whistle Chloe after you, because you can't. The snow's been in the air all day, and it's a week overdue. If it gets you in camp before daybreak I'd not give six to four on you getting to Guilty Creek. And that's the only way. And that's your punishment too, my lad. I'm telling you all this—well, because I used to like you, and my people live close to yours. Perhaps I'll tell you the name some day."

"I'll stay and face it out," St. Asym said.

"No, you won't," Montfort replied. "You're going to make a fight for it for the sake of the girl. If you do get through I'll see to the rest of it for you. And if you stay all that Chloe will get is a first class funeral. Come, every moment is precious."

St. Asym followed into the wild and whirling night. The snow was falling in a thin powder now; the rugged moon was getting more and more obscured. Montfort cocked his eye at it anxiously.

"I'll get you a horse," he said. "And food. Also a flask of brandy. Directly the moon goes down she'll fall in earnest. And if you don't win through you're done. And don't you blame these boys too much. They are a rough lot, and they love that girl sincerely. You've got a sporting chance, and that's about all. And if you fall——"

St. Asym shut his teeth together with a snap. "I'll not fall," he said. "I'll show them. And you can tell Chloe from me that I — well, she'll know without telling. I'll get her yet. And we'll come back after we're married, and she shall walk over the prostrate bodies of the lot of them."

It sounded all right, but Montfort made no reply. It was not for him to exaggerate the peril. So far as he could see, this was St. Asym's last Christmas; there would be no mingling of wedding and Yuletide bells for this young man and Chloe. He watched the exile as far as he could see him, then turned into the hut with a sigh. There was no help for it; absolutely nothing else to be done. The boys had meant what they said, and the solemn good humour of it all made the threat none the less grim. It was their way, and they knew no other.

And St. Asym pushed on in the teeth of it. The white powder sprinkled on his face, and the drift was over the fetlocks of his horse now. It seemed to him that he had been hours in the saddle; surely he must be past the Big Bear cutting by now. The warring battalions ceased for a moment, and he cleared his eyes. Here was the spot where only yesterday he had cut holly with Chloe. His heart beat just a trifle faster. At this rate it looked hopeless to expect the big cutting before daylight. And if he couldn't——

Well! He set his teeth together. Once snowed in, and he was done. He might reach the hut at the end of the cutting; but what was the good of that? There were no provisions there, and once cut off from assistance he would starve and perish miserably. After the snow would come the frost, and then escape would be possible. Yet the snow might last for days, and at least two nights' frost would be necessary before the deep drifts would bear. He began to realise the cruelty of the sentence those boys had passed on him.

Still, in his own dogged, determined way he struggled on. The storm grew deeper, the white fleecy tangle of the snow dazed and confused him. He longed to lie down and sleep. He came to himself presently with a start and a kind of half-consciousness that the hut was reached. At all hazards he would have to stay there for the night. He might find himself a close prisoner in the morning, but that was on the lap of the gods. The game horse struggled on, but Harold could feel his blown sides heaving. They might just as well perish in the hut as in the open. There was a stable by the side of the hut; the floor was littered with hay.

"You can lie there till daylight, old man," St. Asym muttered. "There is plenty of food for you for many a day to come. As for me——"

He closed the stable door and made for the hut. Did his eyes deceive him, or was this some new form of snow blindness? Surely that was a light gleaming behind the window of the hut. A lance of red flame turned the whirling powder to a brilliant crimson. With a trembling hand and a heart that beat fast, St. Asym opened the door.

The stove was burning freely—the room was full of a grateful heat. There was a lamp and a rough deal table set out with supper. A few sprigs of holly decorated the deal board. And here was a beautiful face, a pair of brown eyes filled with happy tears, and then a pair of warm arms about St. Asym's neck.

"Chloe!" he murmured. "I'm asleep. The snow has turned my brain, Chloe?"

She touched his lips with her warm red ones. He could feel his heart beating. There was the fragrance of her hair, the gleam of her white teeth. Chloe was in the flesh. Oh, this was the kind of thing you get at Christmastime, but only in books. She would vanish presently. But it was a delicious dream while it lasted.

"Pinch me," Harold said. "Kiss me again, darling! Is it really you?"

Chloe laughed and cried in a breath. "Are you all that glad to see me?" she asked.

"Glad!" St. Asym echoed. "I don't know what I am. I'm frightened, dear. By daylight we shall be shut in, cut off from the world. I don't mind dying, but when it comes to you—— But how did you get here? How did you find out? How did you know?"

"What the boys were going to do?" Chloe asked, demurely. "Oh, I was warned this morning. They are dears, good boys and they worship the ground I tread on. And they have got some silly idea in their heads that you are not good enough for me."

"They're right there," St. Asym said, simply. "I'm not."

"Harold! Well, I got to know. It was so use my putting my foot down there. I had to save you because the coming of the snow was a sure thing, and nobody could have won through to-night. There are half-breeds in the mines, and they are my friends, too. They came down to the hut here in the afternoon with a load of provisions and fuel. And I knew I could trust them. Then when you were all in the saloon I walked here. Oh, I did. What is a ten-mile walk to me? There is enough food and fuel here to last a week. And these boys think that I am safe in bed, and that I shall get over it all right. And when they find to-morrow that I have gone——"

Chloe broke off with a ripple of laughter. "Oh! they'll come after me," she said. "The whole camp. They'll cut their way through the snow, and they'll find us here some time to-morrow—Christmas day. And there's enough stuff here and in the stable to entertain them all to—to our wedding breakfast. I want them all to drink to the health of the Christmas Bride."

St. Asym gave it up. What a wonder she was; what grace and spirit and beauty! And she had done all this for his sake. No wonder the boys had been mad with him. He began to feel a certain righteous anger against himself. What right had he to come there and spirit the queen of the creek away in this fashion? Why should he take her from them and regild the tarnished honours of his house with the gold that the camp had given her? He dropped into a chair and regarded her with a deep, abiding love in his eyes.

"If they come here they'll hang me," he said. "And serve me right."

Chloe laughed again. She pointed to a case by the side of the stove.

"Browning pistols," she said. "Two of them and plenty of cartridges. But, my dear boy, there is going to be no occasion for that. Now sit down and have some supper, and you can smoke afterwards. Then you can sleep in the stable. I have plenty of furs here. Cold turkey and mince pies. And I have some champagne too. You must be hungry."

It was wonderful — wonderful. It was a page out of the Arabian Nights with the pine forest and the driving snow for a background. It was a cheerful meal too—one of the most cheerful that St. Asym had ever sat down to.

"What time do you expect the visitors?" he asked.

"Oh! they will be here all right," Chloe laughed. "It all depends upon the depth of the snow. I should say about 3 o'clock at the latest. Isn't it all delightfully romantic, dear old boy? What would your English girls say if they saw us now?"

St. Asym didn't know; he didn't care. They were going to win through—of that he felt certain. It would be a fine adventure to tell round the fireside at home in the days to come. He staggered off presently to the stable with his pile of furs, dazed and tired and drunk with fatigue. He came to himself in the daylight with the dazzle of sunshine in his eyes and a white cover all around. It was the typical Christmas day that England dreams of and England never sees. There was no sign of the road to be seen. A thick smoke curled up from the hut.

"A merry Christmas to you, my darling," St. Asym said.

She lay in his arms and kissed him tenderly. Then she turned to the stove where the bacon was frying. Her pink, plump arm showed to the dimpled elbow.

"See how useful I am," she laughed. "You will find me just as much at home in a London drawing room. There has not been as much snow as I had expected, Harold, boy. With any

Psoriasis Was Cured

After Five Years of Suffering —Three Doctors Failed and Said Case Was Incurable

Itching and Burning Was Terrible Until Relief and Cure Was Effected by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Psoriasis is another name for chronic eczema. It is the worst form of this dreadful itching skin disease. Once eczema has reached this stage it is usually considered incurable.

But here is a case which proves again the wonderful healing power of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Not only does relief come quickly, but the resulting benefits are thorough and lasting.

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon, Ont., writes: "I thought it my duty to write you telling you the great benefit I received from using Dr. Chase's Ointment. For five years I suffered with what three doctors called Psoriasis. I doctored with three different doctors, with no good results, and one of our noted doctors told me if any one offered to guarantee me a cure for $50.00 to keep my money in my pocket, as I could not be cured.

"The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head. The itching and burning was hard to bear. At last my brother read in the paper about Dr. Chase's Ointment as a healer. I got 8 boxes, and I am glad to say I am entirely cured, not a sign of a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise the ointment enough, and you are at liberty to use my testimony, as I hope thereby to induce other sufferers to try the same."

SUPPLY and DEMAND

By O. Henry

FROM keeps a hats-cleaned-by-electricity-while-you-wait establishment, nine feet by twelve, in Third avenue. Once a customer you are always his. I do not know his secret process, but every four days your hat needs to be cleaned again.

Finch is a leathern, sallow, slow footed man, between twenty and forty. You would say he had been brought up a bushelman in Essex street. When business is slack he likes to talk, so I had my hat cleaned even oftener than it deserved, hoping Finch might let me into some of the secrets of the sweatshops.

One afternoon I dropped in and found Finch alone. He began to anoint my headpiece de Panama with his mysterious fluid that attracted dust and dirt like a magnet.

"They say the Indians weave 'em under water," said I, for a leader.

"Don't you believe it," said Finch. "No Indian or white man could stay under water that long. Say, do you pay much attention to politics? I see in the paper something about a law they've passed called 'the law of supply and demand.'"

I explained to him as well as I could that the reference was to a politico-economical law, and not to a legislature.

"I didn't know," said Finch. "I heard a good deal about it a year or so ago, but in a one-sided way."

"Yes," said I, "political orators use it a great deal. In fact, they never give it a rest. I suppose you heard some of those cart tail fellows spouting on the subject over here on the east side."

"I heard it from a king," said Finch, "the white king of a tribe of Indians in South America."

I was interested but not surprised. The big city is like a mother's knee to many who have strayed far and found the roads rough beneath their uncertain feet. At dusk they come home and sit upon the doorstep. I know a piano player in a cheap café who has shot lions in Africa, a bellboy who fought in the British Army against the Zulus, an express driver whose left arm had been cracked like a lobster's claw for a stewpot of Patagonian cannibals when the boat of his rescuers hove in sight. So a hat cleaner who had been a friend of a king did not oppress me.

"Yes," said I, "and half an inch wider." I had had a [illegible] five days before.

"I met a man one night," said Finch, beginning [illegible] story, "a man brown as snuff, with money in every [illegible] selling schweinerknuckel in Schlagel's. That [illegible] two years ago, when I was a hose cart driver for [illegible] His discourse runs to the subject of gold. He [illegible] certain mountains in a country down south [illegible] calls Gaudymala is full of it. He says the [illegible] wash it out of the streams in plural quantities.

"'Oh, Geronimo!' says I. 'Indians! There's no Indians in the South.' I tell him, 'except Elks, Maccabees and the buyers for the fall dry goods trade. The Indians are all on the reservations,' says I.

"'I'm telling you this with reservations,' says he. 'These ain't Buffalo Bill Indians; they're squattier and [illegible] pedigreed. They call 'em Inkers and Aspics, and they was old inhabitants when Masuma was King of Yucatan. They wash the gold out of the mountain streams,' says the brown man, 'and fill quills with it; and then they empty 'em into red jars till they are full; and then they pack it in buckskin sacks of one arroba each—an arroba is twenty-five pounds—and store it in a stone house, with an engraving of a idol with marcelled hair, playing a flute, over the door.'

"'How do they work off this unearth increment?' I asks.

"'They don't,' says the man. 'It's a case of "Ill fares the land with the great deal of velocity where wealth accumulates and there ain't any reciprocity."'

"After this man and me got through our conversation, which left him dry of information, I shook hands with him and told him I was sorry I couldn't believe him. And a month afterward I landed on the coast of this Gaudymala with $1,300 that I had been saving up for five years. I thought I knew what Indians liked, and I fixed myself accordingly. I loaded down four pack mules with red woollen blankets, wrought iron pails, jewelled side combs for the ladies, glass necklaces and safety razors. I hired a black mozo, who was supposed to be a mule driver and an interpreter too. It turned out that he could interpret mules all right but he drove the English language much too hard. His name sounded like a Yale key when you push it in wrong side up, but I called him McClintock, which was close to the noise.

"Well, the gold village was forty miles up in the mountains and it took us nine days to find it. But one afternoon McClintock led the other mules and myself over a rawhide bridge stretched across a precipice five thousand feet deep, it seemed to me. The hoofs of the beasts drummed on it just like before George M. Cohan makes his first entrance on the stage.

"This village was built of mud and stone and had no streets. Some few yellow and brown persons popped their heads out of doors, looking about like Welsh rabbits with Worcester sauce on 'em. Out of the biggest house, that had a kind of a porch around it, steps a big white man, red as a beet in color, dressed in fine tanned deerskin clothes, with a gold chain around his neck, smoking a cigar. I've seen United States Senators of his style of features and build, also head waiters and cops.

"BUSINESS LOOKING UP ANY?" HE ASKED.

"He walks up and takes a look at us, while McClintock disembarks and begins to interpret to the lead mule while he smokes a cigarette.

"'Kello, Buttinsky,' says the fine man to me. 'How did you get in the game? I didn't see you buy any chips. Who gave you the keys of the city?'

"'I'm a poor traveller,' says I. 'Especially mule back. You'll excuse me. Do you run a hack line or only a bluff?'

"'Segregate yourself from your pseudo-equine quadruped,' says he, 'and come inside.'

"He raises a finger and a villager runs up.

"'This man will take care of your outfit,' says he, 'and I'll take care of you.'

"He leads me into the biggest house and sets out the chairs and a kind of a drink the color of milk. It was the finest room I ever saw. The stone walls was hung all over with silk shawls, and there was red and yellow rugs on the floor, and jars of red pottery and Angora goat skins, and enough bamboo furniture to misfurnish half a dozen seaside cottages.

"'In the first place,' says the man, 'you want to know who I am. I'm sole lessee and proprietor of this tribe of Indians. They call me the Grand Yacuma, which is to say King or Main Finger of the bunch. I've got more power here than a charge de affairs, a charge of dynamite and a charge account at Tiffany's combined. In fact, I'm the Big Stick, with as many extra knots on it as there is on the record run of the Lusitania. Oh, I read the papers now and then,' says he. 'Now, let's hear your entitlements,' he goes on, 'and the meeting will be open.'

"'Well,' says I, 'I am known as one W. D. Finch. Occupation, capitalist. Address, 541 East Thirty-second.'

"'New York,' chips in the Noble Grand. 'I know,' says he, grinning. 'It ain't the first time you've seen it go down on the blotter. I can tell by the way you hand it out. Well, explain "capitalist."'

"I tells this boss plain what I come for and how I come to came.

"'Gold dust?' says he, looking as puzzled as a baby that's got a feather stuck on its molasses finger. 'That's funny. This ain't a gold mining country. And you invested all your capital on a stranger's story? Well, well! These Indians of mine—they are the last of the tribe of Peches—are simple as children. They know nothing of the purchasing power of gold. I'm afraid you're been imposed on,' says he.

"'Maybe so,' says I, 'but it sounded pretty straight to me.'

"'W. D.,' says the King, all of a sudden, 'I'll give you a square deal. It ain't often I get to talk to a white man, and I'll give you a show for your money. It may be these constituents of mine have a few grains of gold dust hid away in their clothes. To-morrow you may get out these goods you've brought up and see if you can make any sales. Now, I'm going to introduce myself unofficially. My name is Shane—Patrick Shane. I own this tribe of Peche Indians by right of conquest—single handed and unafraid. I drifted up here four years ago and won 'em by my size and complexion and nerve. I learned their language in six weeks—it's easy; you simply emit a string of consonants as long as your breath holds out and then point at what you're asking for.

"'I conquered 'em spectacularly,' goes on King Shane, 'and then I went at 'em with economical politics, law, sleight of hand and a kind of New England ethics and parsimony. Every Sunday, or as near as I can guess at it, I preach to 'em in the council house (I'm the council) on the law of supply and demand. I praise supply and knock demand. I use the same text every time. You wouldn't think, W. D.,' says Shane, 'that I had poetry in me, would you?'

"'Well,' says I, 'I wouldn't know whether to call it poetry or not.'

"'Tennyson,' says Shane, 'furnishes the poetic gospel I preach. I always considered him the boss poet. Here's the way the text goes:—

For, not to admire, if a man could learn it, were more Than to walk all day like a Sultan of old in a garden of spice.

"'You see,' I teach 'em to cut out demand—that supply is the main thing. I teach 'em not to desire anything beyond their simplest needs. A little mutton, a little cocoa and a little fruit brought up from the coast—that's all they want to make 'em happy. I've got 'em well trained. They make their own clothes and hats out of a vegetable fibre and straw, and they're a contented lot. It's a great thing,' winds up Shane, 'to have made a people happy by the inculcation of such simple institutions.'

"Well, the next day, with the king's permission, I has the McClintock open up a couple sacks of my goods in the little plaza of the village. The Indians swarmed around by the hundred and looked the bargain counter over. I shook red blankets at 'em, flashed finger rings and ear bobs, tried pearl necklaces and side combs on the women and a line of red hosiery on the men. 'Twas no use. They looked on like hungry graven images, but I never made a sale. I asked McClintock what was the trouble. Mac yawned three or four times, rolled a cigarette, made one or two confidential side remarks to a mule, and then condescended to inform me that the people had no money.

"Just then up strolls King Patrick, big and red and royal as usual, with the gold chain over his chest and his cigar in front of him.

"'How's business, W. D.?' he asks.

"'Fine,' says I. 'It's a bargain day rush. I've got one more line of goods to offer before I shut up shop. I'll try 'em with safety razors. I've got two gross that I bought at a fire sale.'

"Shane laughs. 'I'll some kind of mameluke or private secretary he carries with him has to hold him up.

"'O say, ashcan Aunt Jerusha!' says he, 'ain't you one of the Babes in the Goods, W. D.? Don't you know that no Indians ever shave? They pull out their whiskers instead.'

"'Well,' says I, 'that's just what these razors would do for 'em—they wouldn't have any kick coming if they used 'em once.'

"Shane went away, and I could hear him laughing a block, if there had been any block.

"'Tell 'em,' says I to McClintock, 'it ain't money I want—tell 'em I'll take gold dust. Tell 'em I'll allow 'em sixteen dollars an ounce for it in trade. That's what I'm out for—the dust.'

"Mac interprets, and you'd have thought a squadron of cops had charged the crowd to disperse it. Every uncle's nephew and aunt's niece of 'em faded away inside of two minutes.

"At the royal palace that night me and the King talked it over.

"'They've got the dust hid out somewhere,' says I, 'or they wouldn't have been so sensitive about it.'

"'They haven't,' says Shane. 'What's this gag you've got about gold? You been reading Edward Allen Poe? They ain't got any gold.'

"'They put it in quills,' says I, 'and then they empty it in jars and then into sacks of twenty-five pounds each. I got it straight.'

"'W. D.,' says Shane, laughing and chewing his cigar, 'I don't often see a white man, and I feel like putting you on. I don't think you'll get away from here alive, anyhow, so I'm going to tell you. Come over here.'

"He draws aside a silk fibre curtain in a corner of the room and shows me a pile of buckskin sacks.

"'Forty of 'em,' says Shane. 'One arroba in each one. In round numbers $220,000 worth of gold dust you see there. It's all mine. It belongs to the Grand Yacums. They bring it all to me. Two hundred and twenty thousand dollars—think of that, you glass bead peddler,' says Shane, 'and all mine.'

"'Little good it does you,' says I, contemptuously and hatefully. 'And so you are the government depository of this gang of moneyless money makers. Don't you pay enough interest on it to enable one of your depositors to buy an Augusta (Maine) Pullman carbon diamond, worth $300, for $4.85?'

"'Listen,' says Patrick Shane, with the sweat coming out on his brow. 'I'm confident with you, as you have, somehow, enlisted my regards. Did you ever,' he says, 'feel the avoirdupois power of gold—not the troy weight of it, but the sixteen ounces to the pound force of it?'

"'Never,' says I. 'I never take in any bad money.'

"Shane drops down on the floor and throws his arms over the sacks of gold dust.

"'I love it,' says he. 'I want to feel the touch of it day and night. It's my pleasure in life. I come in this room and I'm a king and a rich man. I'll be a millionnaire in another year. The pile's getting bigger every month. I've got the whole tribe washing out the sands in the creeks. I'm the happiest man in the world, W. D. I just want to be near this gold and know it's mine and it's increasing every day. Now, you know,' says he, 'why my Indians wouldn't buy your goods. They can't. They bring all the dust to me. I'm their king. I've taught 'em not to desire or admire. You might as well shut up shop.'

"'I'll tell you what you are,' says I. 'You're a plain, contemptible miser. You preach supply and you forget demand. Now, supply.' I goes on, 'is never anything but supply. On the contrary,' says I, 'demand is a much broader syllogism and assertion. Demand includes the rights of our women and children and charity and friendship and even a little begging on the street corners. They've both got to harmonize equally. And I've got a few things up my commercial sleeve yet,' says I, 'that may jostle your preconceived ideas of politics and economy.'

"The next morning I had McClintock bring up another mule load of goods to the plaza and open it up. The people gathered around the same as before.

"I got out the finest line of necklaces, bracelets, haircombs and earrings that I carried, and had the women put 'em on. And then I played trumps.

"Out of my last pack I opened up a half gross of hand mirrors, with solid tinfoil backs, and passed 'em around among the ladies. That was the first introduction of looking glasses among the Peches Indians.

"Shane walks by, with his big laugh.

"'Business looking up any?' he asks.

"'It's looking at itself right now,' says I.

"By and by a kind of a murmur goes through the crowd. The women had looked into the magic crystal and seen that they was beautiful, and was confiding the secret to the men. The men seemed to be urging the lack of money and the hard times just before the election, but their excuses didn't go.

"Then was my time.

"I called McClintock away from an animated conversation with his mules and told him to do some interpreting.

"'Tell 'em,' says I, 'that gold dust will buy for them these befitting ornaments for kings and queens of the earth. Tell 'em the yellow sand they wash out of the waters for the High Sanctified Yacomay and Chop Suey of the tribe will buy the precious jewels and charms that will make them beautiful and preserve and pickle them from evil spirits. Tell 'em the Pittsburg banks are paying four per cent interest on deposits by mail, while this get-rich-frequently custodian of the public funds ain't even paying attention. Keep telling 'em, Mac,' says I, 'to let the gold dust family do their work. Talk to 'em like a born anti-Bryanite,' says I. 'Remind 'em that Tom Watson's gone back to Georgia,' says I.

"McClintock waves his hand affectionately at one of his mules and then hurls a few stickfuls of minion type at the mob of shoppers.

"A gutta percha Indian man, with a lady hanging on his arm, with three strings of my fish scale jewelry and imitation marble beads around her neck, stands up on a block of stone and makes a talk that sounds like a man shaking dice in a box to fill aces and sixes.

"'He say,' says McClintock, 'that the people not know that gold dust will buy their things. The women very mad. The Grand Yacuma tell them it no good but for keep to make bad spirits keep away.'

"'You can't keep bad spirits away from money,' says I.

"'They say,' goes on McClintock, 'the Yacuma feel them. They raise plenty row.'

"'Going! Going!' says I. 'Gold dust or cash takes the entire stock. The dust weighed before you, and taken at $16 the ounce—the highest price on the Gaudymala coast.'

"Then the crowd disperses all of a sudden, and I don't know what's up. Mac and me packs away the hand mirrors and jewelry they had handed back to us, and we had the mules back to the corral they had set apart for our garage.

"While we was there we hear great noises of shouting, and down across the plaza runs Patrick Shane, hot foot, with his clothes ripped half off, and scratches on his face like a cat had fought him hard for every one of its lives.

"'They're looting the treasury, W. D.,' he sings out. 'They're going to kill me and you, too. Unlimber a couple of mules at once. We'll have to make a get-away in a couple of minutes.'

"'They've found out,' says I, 'the truth about the law of supply and demand.'

"'It's the women, mostly,' says the King. 'And they used to admire me so!'

"'They hadn't seen looking glasses, then,' says I.

"'They've got knives and hatchets,' says Shane, 'hurry!'

"'Take that roan mule,' says I. 'You and your law of supply! I'll ride the dun, for he's two knots per hour the faster. The roan has a stiff knee, but he may make it,' says I. 'If you'd included reciprocity in your political platform I might have given you the dun,' says I.

"Shane and McClintock and me mounted our mules and rode across the rawhide bridge just as the Peches' reached the other side and begun firing stones and long knives at us. We cut the thongs that held up our end of the bridge and headed for the coast."

A tall, bulky policeman came into Finch's shop at that moment and leaned an elbow on the showcase. Finch nodded at him friendly.

"'I heard down at Casey's,' said the cop, in rumbling, husky tones, 'that there was going to be a picnic of the Hat Cleaners' Union over at Bergen Beach Sunday. Is that right?'

"'Sure,' said Finch. 'There'll be a dandy time.'

"'Gimme five tickets,' said the cop, throwing a five dollar bill on the showcase.

"'Why,' said Finch, 'ain't you going it a little too?'—

"'Go to h——,' said the cop. 'You get 'em to sell, ain't you? Somebody's got to buy 'em. Wish I could go along.'"

I was glad to see Finch so well thought of in his neighborhood.

And then in came a wee girl of seven, with dirty face and pure blue eyes and a smutched and insufficient dress.

"'Mama says,' she recited, shrilly, 'that you must give me eighty cents for the grocer and nineteen for the milkman and five cents for me to buy hokey pokey with'—but she didn't say that," the elf concluded, with a hopeful, but honest grin.

Finch shelled out the money, counting it twice, but I noticed that the total sum that the small girl received was one dollar and four cents.

"That's the right kind of a law," remarked Finch, as he carefully broke some of the stitches of my hatband so that it would assuredly come off within a few days, "the law of supply and demand. But they've both got to work together. I'll bet," he went on, with his dry smile, "she'll get jelly beans with that nickel—she likes 'em. What's supply if there's no demand for it?"

"What ever became of the King?" I asked curiously.

"Oh, I might have told you," said Finch. "That was Shane came in and bought the tickets. He came back with me and he's on the force now."

A CHRISTMAS BRIBE

luck our friends will be here to dinner. The goddess of fortune is on our side."

As a matter of fact it was just 2 o'clock when the van of the invaders arrived. Here was "Old Glory" and half a score more, together with a stranger to St. Gaym. Glory demanded admittance solemnly, with the air of a judge with a sentence to pronounce.

"Not yet," Chloe said. "Send Mr. Patterson in to me. And all of you go to the stable till I ask for you. I am ashamed of you all. How dare you send a man to his death like this simply because he loves me? Why shouldn't he love me as well as you do?"

"We ain't none of us ever kissed you," Old Glory said, harshly.

"I've kissed you hundreds of times," Chloe retorted. "No, I'm ready to make terms. But I'm going to make them with Mr. Patterson, because he is a clergyman and a man of peace. It was good of him to come and try to prevent—bloodshed. Send him in."

It was a fair proposition, and the posse behind Old Glory signified consent. The door of the hut was opened, and Mr. Patterson walked in. His clean-shaven face smiled, his lips twitched humourously.

"Well, young lady?" he said. "And what have you to say for yourself? I got your letter."

"Oh, that's all right," Chloe said, coolly. "You would not have come unless you had consented to do as I asked. And do get it over quickly, parson, dear. We can have a swell wedding later on in New York if Harold likes, but it won't be so sacred in my eyes as this."

Ten minutes later the door of the hut was thrown open and the flower of the gulch was invited in.

"Let me introduce," Patterson said grimly. "Mr. Glory and gentlemen, allow me to present to your notice Lord and Lady St. Gaym."

There was no more—there was, indeed, no more to be said. For quite a long time Old Glory pondered the matter with his beard in his hand. His face expanded, a grin appeared, then he broke into a roar of laughter that rang in the rafters of the hut.

"Boys," he said, "she's done us. She's planned the whole thing. Heaven knows how she found out, but she did find out, and Nature helped with the rest. No use making a fuss about it, and no use to try and harm the man the queen of the creek has married. It might have been one of us——"

"Never," Chloe smiled. "A queen can't marry a subject. If you are going to forgive me——"

"We've got to," Old Glory cried. "We can't help it. Lordy, give me your hand. You're a real white man, and you've got for a wife the sweetest, daintiest, bravest——"

His voice broke and he stopped. There was an awkward silence for a moment.

"Come to the wedding feast," Chloe cried. "Come and eat with me and forgive me, and wherever I may be, remember that my heart is ever with you and will be till I am an old woman, and I have almost forgotten the day when I was a Christmas Bride."

CHRISTMAS

A paper read before the Women's Institute, of Slate River, by Mrs. D. C. Garver:

Christmas is indeed a season of gifts and good wishes; but it is not always in the tokens of the day that we are to look for the truest expressions of its spirit. In this time of joy we cannot help thinking of all the extra work which befalls the mother, upon whose shoulders rest the conscientious responsibility of the Christmas spirit which she is to impart to the earnest little faces which look to her and to her alone for guidance at this time. Not alone to be sure, for most fathers, and I hope I may use the word "all"—fathers, are interested in household matters at this time; for how can anyone who is really human resist the Christmas spirit?

Why not forget ourselves at this one time of the whole year and become children again in all the pleasant anticipations of youth? I am sure if we do, many Christmas joys will be ours. There is lots of sunshine in our hearts if we would open the doors and let it out.

I like the German's way of celebrating the natal day of our Lord and Saviour. The lack of a full purse and a large bank account never keeps them from shedding abroad the true spirit of Yuletide. At no time of the year is a large family so enjoyable as at this, the holiday season. The happy faces and contented hearts are the happiness of the German parents. I think the German legends of the Christ-child are among the prettiest of all. They do not stop at one day, but from Christmas to New Year's Day the feast of happiness and blessings go on. I do not refer to the keeping of this holiday as observed by the rougher class, but the true German of culture. It is true that the imagination of the German children is trained so that the legends are true to them; and why not? For I do not believe that that part of the mind can be trained too much, provided that the other faculties are developed with it. Give the child with a vivid imagination and let that imagination be trained in the right manner and you have a happy child.

When asked if there was a Santa Claus, I would answer "Yes" and "No."

The one great essential fact about Christmas is this: That it is the celebration of a birthday. Hence we do well to have in remembrance Him for whom the day is named and in whose honour it is appointed to be kept.

In whatever way we choose to keep or celebrate the day, let us somewhere at the very beginning, either before breakfast, at breakfast, or immediately after the meal, keep a brief time in which someone may refer to the why of this holiday. No better explanation of the fact can be found than that given in the second chapters of St. Matthew and St. Luke. Then, if you choose, let Santa Claus come into the day, and do not think that the Bible story will be forgotten. It will only give additional happiness to the day's festivities. I am sincerely of the opinion that religion and fun are kept too much apart when they should go hand in hand. The most happy people in the world should be the religious people, if you will allow that term. Don't think that solemnity should take the place of merriment. There is a good wholesome combination of religion and fun. That is what we should have on Christ's birthday.

A children's day, then, let us make of our Christmas, whether in memory of the little ones we miss or those whom we can draw close to us; but let it be a children's day with the personal touch of love coming straight from our hearts.

Let us allow the shopkeeper to play the part of the mother, but embrace the sweetest privilege of the year by giving the little tokens that only the mother's love can give to the child. There is not the love in a purchased stocking, already filled with toys, that there is to be found in a home-made one that has the loving Christmas spirit woven into it by a mother or sister, and that is filled with the little gifts that mean so much of sacrifice and labour on the part of the giver. May our hearts be as light and our spirits fresh—fresh as childhood's own flower.

Kelly versus Kelly

(Short Story.)

BY DOROTHY DOUGLAS

Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.

Kelly entered his office briskly, hung up his coat and prepared to glance through the mail. Because Kelly was big and good to look at and in many other ways an attractive lure for feminine hearts, there were a number of small, scented missives lurking among looking documents and business.

These he put aside until the contents of the more important communications had been digested.

Kelly drew a cigar from his pocket. The day promised to be more or less dull. A young lawyer can only wait for clients. Kelly lit his cigar and when it was drawing well he elevated his feet to the desk and picked up the smaller envelopes.

As he glanced over his own name written in various feminine hands he smiled tenderly, cynically, reminiscently and finally questioningly. The writing on one neat, unscented envelope was not familiar to Kelly's eyes.

He opened it first, and read the contents:

"Dear Mr. Kelly,—Your fiancee, Helen Ware, has made me promise to look you up as soon as I reached New York. I arrived only yesterday from Omaha and have taken the first opportunity I had for communicating with you. Since I am to be Helen's bridesmaid it might make the wedding more sociable if some of us had met you. I am to be in New York for three wee' and hope you will find time to call me up in the near future, so that I may write Helen that I have had the pleasure of meeting her future husband. 'Phone, 009 River.—Sincerely yours,

"VIRGINIA TRACY."

A cynical smile was master over surprise in Kelly's face.

"Another bunco game!" he muttered. "Letter sounds jolly though,—guess I will see the game through."

Without a doubt in his mind as to the class of girl who had written him the letter, Kelly called the number, 009 River.

Garnish boiled mutton with beetroot cut in slices and a little chopped parsley on each slice.

The flavor of salad dressing is greatly improved by the addition of a very little chopped capers or pickles.

When peeling lemons for cooking purposes, be sure never to cut any of the white skin, as it has a bitter flavor.

If the oven does not brown, sprinkle a good handful of sugar on the bottom of the oven. It will then brown anything.

The flap of the sirloin should be cut off before it is cooked. It should be rubbed with salt for a few days, and then boiled very gently with herbs and spices in just enough water to cover. When done, press till cold. Garnish nicely before serving.

Egg shells should always be carefully saved, for they are useful for clearing soup and jelly, and, if crushed and mixed with salt, for cleaning enamelled pans.

Bread should always be kept in an earthenware pan with a wooden cover. Wash the pan out every week, and dry thoroughly before replacing the loaves.

A PROPOSAL BY PROXY

BY ANNIE HATHWAY.

(Short Story.)

To be the paid companion of a young, capricious heiress is not always an enviable position. And in Doris Bruce's case it was certainly no pleasant sinecure, for Miss Gwendoline Everitt kept her busily employed from morning till night, and seldom rewarded her efforts with a kind word.

One summer's morning her employer came into the room where the girl sat busily sewing. "Have you sewn those bows on my shoes?" she demanded impatiently. "Oh, do hurry up, or you'll never have time. And those invitations. Did you write them as I directed? Very well; then you'd better fill up the rest of the morning by putting fresh flowers in the vases." She was on her way to the door when Doris stopped her with a timid question.

"Did you wish me to accompany your picnic party into the woods today?"

"Good gracious, no! What an idea! But stay, didn't Mr. Floyd suggest a while ago that I should let you come? I seem to remember that he did, so to please him I'll take you along. But what will you wear? I suppose I shall have to lend you something."

"Oh, I have a simple cotton frock, which I think will do," the girl interposed, with a slight flush.

"Very well. Then it's settled you go. Perhaps it's just as well, for we should have been odd numbers, and you'll now be able to relieve me of the society of Aunt Susie. I had to ask her for propriety's sake, but she has a habit of never leaving me at picnics, which would have been boring, as I want to spend the time with Mr. Floyd, and not with her."

"You—you are not engaged to him?" The query escaped Doris involuntarily. She had spoken in a curiously constrained voice, but Gwen seemed unconscious of it.

"No, not yet; but I'm sure we soon shall be," she replied, with an easy satisfied smile. "Of course, he has hesitated to propose because I am so rich, but I've hinted quite plainly since he's been staying here that he's the man of my choice. I am not in love with him, for I don't go in for any such silly nonsense; but I covet the position in the county which his old family and titled relations give him. Also, since his recent book has brought him fame as well as position, he's the very one to be my husband."

"So you count it a lucky day when your motor startled his horse so that it threw him? From that accident you made his acquaintance?" Doris spoke drily, because there was a curious, dull pain at her heart. But Gwen was oblivious of everything because of her keen interest in her own matrimonial schemes.

"Yes, it was a lucky day," she brazenly agreed. "But I do wish he'd come to the point. I wonder if you could give him a hint, since he often exchanges a remark or two with you? Of course, I know he's in love with me, but I want the position defined between us."

"But I—I couldn't discuss it with him," Doris cried, in a panic.

"Yes, you could—in an impersonal way. Now, don't be selfish, Miss Bruce. Remember my happiness is at stake, and because of that, seize the first opportunity to encourage him."

Without waiting to hear the protest that trembled upon the girl's lips, she swept out of the room. Doris stared after her with troubled eyes and then, with a heavy sigh, she turned to the window. Down on the well kept lawn beneath her, a man was stretched in a basket chair reading the morning papers. From her point of vantage she could see how the sun glinted upon his fair, close cropped hair, in that short moment it came to her that he represented her ideal type of masculinity.

Yet he was already practically betrothed to another girl—and that girl one of the pampered, beautiful children of fortune, who only have to stretch out their hands to gratify all their desires. Oh, it was hard—cruelly hard. Gwen did not even love him—to her it was to be a mere marriage of convenience. How very different it was for her, for she Doris, had given him all her heart and had never had any hope of winning him, since she was a poor friendless girl, dependent upon an employer's bounty.

Yet how kind he had been to her. The tears came into her eyes as she remembered the courtesy of his words and manners when they had chanced upon one another. Carefully locked away was the rose he had once plucked for her, and in her heart were treasured all the little, uneventful happenings which had seemed to her so precious.

It was with a lagging step that she went up to her room to change into the dress which she had decided upon for the picnic. Of what use to take an interest in her appearance, since there was no one to notice it.

But despite her pessimistic mood, she looked very young and attractive when she went down to lunch garbed in the simple white frock which suited her slim, petite form. It was probably because he had never seen her so becomingly dressed that Brian Floyd's eyes rested upon her so frequently during the meal. It really seemed as if he enjoyed looking at her.

When the other guests had arrived at the house, they all set off in a merry party to the woods. Miss Everitt had appropriated Brian Floyd with a calm effrontery which she imagined was excused by her wealth and position, she walked along with him laughing and chatting gaily; and as the sound of their voices floated back to Doris, she found herself once or twice biting her lip with a sense of irritation.

Yet when, by a freak of fate, she found her alone with the man she loved, she was not entirely glad. The picnickers had been abruptly checked by a stream which had swollen with the rain, and when Gwen directed that Doris should jump across and go to a farm to ask permission for the party to traverse some fields Brian Floyd insisted upon accompanying her.

At first Gwen had demurred, but eventually agreed when she had contrived to whisper in Doris' ears that now was the opportunity to further the matrimonial purpose on which she had set her heart. Brian would not allow the girl to jump across the brook. He insisted that it was risky, and as an alternative he lifted her in his arms and waded across before she could protest. Doris was just turning over in her mind how she should start to fulfill her employer's instructions, when he saved her the trouble by an earnest inquiry.

"I wonder, Miss Bruce, if you've any idea why I have stayed on as Miss Everitt's guest for so long?"

"Yes, I think I do know," came her admission in a low voice.

"Oh, I'm so glad," he exclaimed earnestly. "Now, will you tell me frankly if you think there is any hope?"

Oh, it was terrible, this wooing on another's behalf. Doris shrank from the admission which must perforce encourage him to become engaged to Gwen, but duty was strong upon her. "Yes, I feel sure there is." She saw him open his mouth eagerly, but before he could speak she suddenly went on in a changed voice, which vibrated with eagerness. They had reached a little copice, and she now clung round on him, facing him with a seriousness that made her appear beautiful.

"Oh, have you thought what you are doing, where it is leading you?" she demanded vehemently. "Are you sure that you are in love, and that you have chosen rightly?" Remember that it is a wife you are seeking, and perhaps some—some other may care for you—may need you—and you have to think if money is of sufficient account."

"That is just what I have been thinking," was his quick reply; and then, to her amazement and alarm, he suddenly seized her in his arms and drew her close to him.

"Oh, can you doubt that I know my own mind?" she heard him whisper. "All along I have wanted you, hungered for you, my little dark eyes; and now that I have won you, I realize more how precious you are to me." She struggled free from him and stared up with a wonderful light warring with incredulity from within her eyes. "You want me—me—not Gwen?" she stammered.

"You, dear heart, only you," he cried passionately. "Miss Everitt's nothing to me, never has been—it's your darling little self that I love." But still she held back from his pleading outstretched arms. Her happiness had come to her so suddenly that she could not be sure of it. Brian's face clouded, for he could not understand her hesitation. "Of course, I'm not a rich man, and I know I'm not worthy of you, but—" A little cry broke from Doris, and she flew to his arms.

POWDERHALL MARATHON

The Powderhall Marathon Race, for which Tom Longboat, Hans Holmer, and Fred Cameron have gone to Edinburgh, Scotland, does not offer rich rewards in the way of prize-money, the entire sum to be divided being only £100, or less than $500. It costs only two shillings and sixpence to enter, and the list does not close until Christmas.

On the same grounds, on the holiday, is run a 13-yard handicap, in which is distributed the same amount of money, £100, that is given for competition among the men who run 26 miles 386 yards, writes Francis Nelson. Bombardier Wells, the heavyweight boxing champion, is one of the 148 entries in the sprint race, in which he is allotted 12 yards start. The handicap is framed from C. E. Holway, who is off two yards. Holway is now in Australia, and is a non-starter. At least two of the 148 though neither is likely to start, are Canadians. E. Eastman, who is 3½ yards, is a coloured man from New Brunswick, who has been in the first flight of British sprinters for several seasons. The other is Walter R. Knox, of Orillia, who is on the 7 yards mark. The limit is 17 yards. Knox, I believe, is the best all-round athlete in the world. That looks like a big order, but there is no professional of reputation, on either side of the Atlantic, that he has not already beaten, either under his own or another name. Had he not disqualified himself from amateur competition he would in that field achieved similar success, and vastly greater glory. It is a tragic thing that a man who might—even as Edward Hanlan—have made the whole world ring with the name of Canada failed to choose the better part.

ABOUT AIR

Dr. Ella S. Webb

A man may go for days without food and for hours without water, but deprive him of air for a few minutes and he ceases to live.

Our governments exercise some supervision of the food and water supply of the people, but the air is "free" to all, and it is left to each one to regulate the quantity and quality in her home.

Air laden with the foulest and most poisonous substances can be inhaled without immediate knowledge of the conditions, but the effects are seen later in headache, drowsiness, and other warning symptoms that, in the case of habitually unventilated dwellings, results in deficient nutrition, loss of vigor, of body and mind and of the power to resist disease.

WE USE DIRTY AIR

We reject dirty food for our stomach while using dirty air for our lungs, organs far more delicately constructed than the digestive apparatus and needing careful consideration if we would have the best health and strength.

Go into the large majority of living and sleeping rooms in city or country, especially in winter, and you will find a reason for the spread of the white plague which is slaying thousands of our young people all over the land.

Fresh air, then, is a law of our well being. The average adult contaminates about 5,000 cubic inches of air with every breath, and in ordinary respiration an adult abstracts 16 cubic feet of oxygen from the atmosphere every 24 hours, and adds to it 14 cubic feet of carbonic acid gas in the same time. Nearly one-third of the excretions of the body are eliminated from the lungs and another large proportion through the skin.

Economic considerations frequently lead householders to save fuel at the expense of health; again drafts from open windows are objectionable; also, many persons accustom themselves to an overheated room and catch cold if fresh air is admitted while sitting at work.

Science and invention are coming to our aid to overcome the first two objections, and the last can and will be overcome by the exercise of will power and the desire to be well. Public opinion is coming to favor open windows in sleeping apartments, and the sleeping porch or tent has ceased to be a fad; the arrangements for absolute comfort of body while enjoying fresh, pure air for the lungs has been reduced to a science along those lines.

ARE WE INDIFFERENT?

In this very important matter of fresh air as a necessity for physical health it has seemed that familiarity with the subject has bred indifference.

It is of vital importance to realise that we cannot consume too much pure air, the larger the quantity the greater the amount of life giving oxygen conveyed to all parts of the body, and the larger the lung capacity the better our health and strength.

Don't Know Everything.—A well-known Glasgow west-end resident was walking along the "Rue de Sauchie" (which local Glaswegians will recognise), when a half-drunken man came up to him. Standing in his path the man said: "Mr. ——, you don't know me, do you?" "No," said the gentleman. "I don't," and he tried to pass, with the look of a man who didn't want to know him. "I am the husband of your washerwoman," persisted the half-sober individual. "Well, what have I to do with that?" "You see, you don't know everything," went on the man in a confidential tone. "What don't I know?" "You don't know I'm wearing one of your white shirts!"

FIGHT NEAR TRIPOLI.

Severe Engagement Continues For a Whole Day.

London, Eng., Dec. 22.—A belated despatch reports a fight at Derna on Dec. 16, between the Italians and Turks, in which the casualties were small. No movement is reported from other occupied points. It is said that 15,000 Arabs and Turks have assembled within four or five miles of the Italian trenches at Tobruk.

According to despatches to a news agency, six Italian warships have appeared off Durazzo, on the Albanian coast, and the inhabitants are preparing for flight.

The Porte, in consideration for the cession of the Sollum district of Barca, the eastern division of Tripoli, to Egypt, stipulated that Great Britain use her influence to preserve peace in the Balkans, prevent Italian naval action in Turkish waters, and maintain a benevolent neutrality on the Egyptian frontier. Sollum has been occupied by Egypt, and, it is announced, will be held pending the conclusion of the Turco-Italian war.

Turks Draw Off.

Derna, Tripoli, Dec. 22.—Turkish forces have made several attacks on the Italian soldiers while the latter were engaged in throwing up works outside the town. Reinforcements were sent to the aid of the Italians, and a counter attack resulted in the withdrawal of the Turks. The Italians had three killed and 24 wounded.

Anarchy in Macedonia.

London, Eng., Dec. 22.—A despatch from Saloniki, European Turkey, to a London news agency reports a condition of anarchy throughout Macedonia. Murder, pillage and brigandage are rife. Travel in the country districts is safe only for large armed parties. Twenty-seven assassinations have occurred within the past month within a two hours' journey of Saloniki, all the victims being Greeks.

The Christians, finding it impossible to obtain redress, are organising bands with the object of killing the Turks.

Used Axe Wilfully.

London, Dec. 22.—The coroner's jury, inquiring into the death of Frederick Culver, who died as the result of a wound in his leg, inflicted near a roadhouse, by Dan Reynolds, last night returned a verdict that he had come to his death, by bleeding, from a wound in his left leg, inflicted by a blow from an axe, in the hands of Daniel Reynolds. They also believed that the wound was wilfully inflicted.

A sixteen-year-old son of the prisoner testified that he was drunk at the time and remembered nothing that happened, adding that he had become intoxicated a number of times with his parent.

Watching Gypsy Band.

Brockville, Dec. 22.—The band of fortune telling gypsies, who made trouble for the police in Belleville, tried to work their game here, but unsuccessfully. A wire yesterday was received by Chief Burke, from G. T. Stewart, Toronto Dominion Immigration agent, concerning the band. Stewart is anxious as to their whereabouts and in turn was informed by the chief that they had been ordered out of here and left for the east.

BEFORE GRAND JURY.

Chief of Police of Tiffin, Ohio, Tells What He Knows.

Indianapolis, Dec. 22.—Claude E. Myers, chief of police of Tiffin, O., where 540 pounds of dynamite and other explosives were found hidden in a barn the day after the arrest of John J. McNamara in Indianapolis on last April 22, was the chief witness before the federal grand jury in the investigation of the dynamiting conspiracy yesterday.

He was among those from whom it was said, the investigators expected to learn facts as to who, besides the McNamaras and Ortie E. McManigal, were implicated particularly in the explosions in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana, to carry on which the stores of explosives at Tiffin were used as a base of supply. Information was said to have been obtained by U. S. District Attorney C. W. Miller that the explosions were directed from McNamara's headquarters in Indianapolis, where as secretary-treasurer of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, he had his office, also the suggestion that the destruction of property erected by firms employing non-union men came originally from the city where the explosions afterwards took place.

In connection with Chief Myers' appearance it was learned the district attorney's office had accumulated important data relative to local conditions in the score of cities where structural work was blown up in the last five years.

County Prosecutor Frank P. Baker also was before the grand jury. He was summoned because of his work as prosecutor in conducting before the country grand jury a case involving a series of explosions in Indianapolis. Baker earlier in the day had been fined $50 for contempt, because he interrupted a murder trial in the county court, by dragging in a detective, who was working on the dynamite investigation and whom, Baker says, was "shadowing him."

Seven days' work by the federal jury has developed that the evidence is more voluminous and the number of witnesses to be called from distant cities is greater than was anticipated. The investigation temporarily will stop to-day when the jurors will adjourn until Jan. 3.

I thought it mushroom when I found

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

J. Graham fell down a mine shaft at Cobalt, five hundred feet, and was killed.

The Peabody overall factory at Walkerville was robbed of over $600 worth of goods.

Berlin's municipally-owned street railway and lighting plants yielded increased profits on the year's operations.

John Smith, an Essex farmer, lost his barn, nine horses and other live stock and grain by fire. The total loss is about $10,000.

It is reported at Brockville that Mr. F. H. Gutelius of the C.P.R. is to be appointed head of Government railways at a salary of $20,000.

Reuben Davidson was struck by a train at a crossing west of Galt. Although his horse was killed and the buggy smashed he escaped injury.

Ford A. Mansell was found guilty of false pretences in connection with the flotation of the Canadian Wire Screen Co. The jury disagreed as to F. A. Leuschner.

The British two-masted steamer Hellopes of 1,797 tons, capsized and sank three miles to the south of Penzance yesterday. The crew was saved and landed there.

In the near future the United States should be able not only to supply its own needs, but also to export a considerable amount of potash, said Secretary Wilson yesterday.

All the specie and bullion in the cargo of the P. & O. steamer Delhi, which was wrecked off Cape Spartel last week, were landed yesterday by means of the rocket apparatus.

The Jewish Chronicle says that the leading Jewish institutions in London, Eng., have decided to urge the abrogation of the Anglo-Russian treaty, which differentiates against the English Jews.

Arrests have been made in connection with the Istib massacre in Bulgaria, and that the persons charged with the crime will be court-martialled. The outrages referred to by the Premier occurred on Dec. 4, when a bomb was thrown in a mosque.

Old Wedlock Tangle.

Winnipeg, Dec. 22.—Mrs. Fred Brewer charges the St. Boniface Hospital with refusing to permit her to see her husband because she is a Protestant and he a Catholic.

At the palace it was said the woman was not admitted because she is not Brewer's wife, saying that he had a wife when he married the present Mrs. Brewer. The records show that the first Mrs. Brewer died Dec. 16, 1905, and that he was married again four years later.

The case is being given wide publicity and has caused a sensation. Mrs. Brewer claims the priest was trying to force her to be married again in the Catholic faith.

New York Backs Taft.

New York, Dec. 22.—President Taft went back to Washington early yesterday with assurances that he would have practically solid support from the New York delegation at the coming national convention. Col. Roosevelt's friends seized the occasion of the President's visit to reiterate that his predecessor would not allow his name to be used in opposition to Taft's.

Can't Find Derelict.

Washington, Dec. 22.—After a five-days' search around the Bermuda Islands, the revenue cutter Seneca has given up hope of finding the big derelict five-masted schooner Nathaniel T. Palmer, of Portland, Me. Numerous steamers have reported the Palmer as drifting in the vicinity of the islands.

New Director of G.T.R.

Montreal, Dec. 22.—At a meeting of the directors of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Co. held yesterday, Mr. William Molson MacPherson of Quebec, president of Molson's Bank, and prominent in financial circles, was elected a director in place of Mr. Hugh A. Allan, retired.

Play Censor Quits.

London, Eng., Dec. 22.—It is understood that Mr. Redford, dramatic censor, resigned because Mr. Brookfield was appointed to assist him. Mr. Redford last night declined to discuss the matter, beyond saying: "After all, 17 years of reading bad plays is quite enough for any man."

New Western Freight Rates.

Ottawa, Dec. 22.—The C.N.R. and C.P.R. have been given until April 1, 1913, to frame new schedules of freight rates between Port William, Regina, Moose Jaw and other points west of Manitoba. This order was made by the Board of Railway Commissioners in 1910, when discrimination against these cities in favor of Winnipeg was alleged.

The order was appealed by the companies, but the appeal was dismissed with costs by the Supreme Court.

THERE WILL BE A CONTEST FOR MAYORALTY
J. J. HARTLEY OPPOSES ALD. BRADBURN

Surprise at Nominations this Morning---The Two Candidates Outline Their Platforms and Policies to Ratepayers

WILL BE WARM FIGHT

For Mayor—

William Herbert Bradburn, proposed by T. F. Matthews and Joseph Batten.

John James Hartley, proposed by J. H. Callendar and A. A. McIntyre.

Ald. W. H. Bradburn was not elected Mayor of Peterborough by acclamation at the nominations this morning as was expected. On the contrary he has a fight on his hands and by present appearances, a decidedly warm fight it will be, too. An unexpected candidate appeared in the person of Mr. J. J. Hartley, one of the best known residents of Peterborough, a gentleman who is not lacking in municipal experience, and who is universally esteemed and respected. Furthermore, Mr. Hartley is the official nominee of the Peterborough Temperance and Moral Reform League and his candidature is endorsed and will be strongly supported by that body. The fight will be short, but it will be sharp, and Mr. Bradburn's chances to become Peterborough's next Mayor are by no means as rosy as they were this time yesterday.

Nominations took place at the City Council chamber between 10 and 11 o'clock this morning, with about fifty citizens in attendance. There were only the two nominations for the Mayoralty, and the vacancies for Water Commissioner and Board of Education were filled by acclamation, as noted in another column. City Clerk Armstrong as returning officer, presided, and at 11 o'clock the candidates and their nominators were given an opportunity to address the meeting.

Mr. T. F. Matthews [illegible]

[illegible] Council and always [illegible] that he was an upright man and one to be respected, and a man whose keen sense of business would make him all that could be desired for Mayor, and he took pleasure in seconding the nomination.

Mr J. J. Hartley's nominator was absent, so the seconder, Mr. A. A. McIntyre ,addressed the meeting. He said that Mr. Hartley's record qualified him for the office of Mayor, and it gave him much pleasure in seconding the motion that had been made.

Mr. Bradburn's Address.

Mr. Bradburn, after thanking the mover and seconder, said his interests were all locked up in the city, and it was his desire to see the city advance. "We have seen the city's manufacturies increase in the last few years," said the speaker, "and by good government, we will see it further progress. I would like to mention a few permanent improvements, for instance—the Queen Mary Hospital, the Public Library, the Smith street bridge. Regarding this, I would like to see a little more money spent on this bridge. I would like to see a concrete roadway instead of a gravel roadway across the bridge, and I think it would improve it materially."

"Regarding the hydraulic power, the city, through its council, endeavoured to get power from Burleigh Falls, but when we found out what it would cost, we found it would be too expensive. Some time ago, we took up the question of obtaining power, and asked the Otonabee Power Co .to sell their plant to the city. They refused, and we were blocked. We had the report on the Dickson Co. dam at Lakefield, and we found the cost there would be too great. Then we went to the Hydro Electric [illegible] street to Maria street, and he promised that he would do all in his power to work things out that way, if he was elected. He also spoke of the

PETERBOROUGH DOMESTIC MARRIES MARRIED MAN

Her Husband Young Scotchman Who is Said to Have Left Wife and Children in the Old Country is Arrested in Toronto and Charged With Bigamy and Desertion.

TORONTO, DEC. 22.—The police of Toronto have arrested John Lennox, a young Scotchman, who came to Peterborough last spring and ran away with a domestic named Margaret Cummings, who was brought from Scotland by a Peterborough family. The girl, it is believed, knew that Cummings had a wife and young family in the old country at the [illegible] which [illegible] to Toronto on [illegible] by Morality [illegible] Bloodworth on a charge of [illegible] The warrant was sworn out some time ago, but the police had some difficulty in locating the man.

Lennox came to Canada from Scotland in May, 1910, and subsequently Miss Cummings landed in Peterborough. She at once notified Lennox. They had been friends in Scotland, and some time after the departure of Miss Cummings and Lennox the latter's wife communicated with the police officials here. At the time she only made the charge of desertion.

Inspector Kennedy sent for Lennox, and he agreed to send his wife in Scotland a monthly allowance. He did this for a short time, and [illegible] the inspector that he had decided to discontinue it. Letters came from Scotland hinting a possible second marriage, and Inspector Kennedy started out to look for Lennox.

The man had left his previous position, and was also said to have left the city, but was located yesterday by Constable Bloodworth. Lennox and Miss Cummings were married in Cooke's Church a year ago, and she will be summoned as a witness when Cummings appears in court today. The man had children by both wives, and the family in Scotland is said to be destitute.

DENOMINATIONS RE-UNITE TO REBUILD A CHURCH

READING, MASS., DEC. 22.—A movement was launched Sunday in the interests of rebuilding the Old South Methodist church. A fund has been started by citizens of other faiths to help the society rebuild its burned edifice along the same lines.

The Methodist Society will receive $11,900 in insurance, but does not feel financially able to carry out what seems to be the wish of the entire community that the church be rebuilt on the old site, and that its exterior be a replica of the historic edifice. Already $2,000 has been pledged and many other substantial offers from citizens in general, have been made. The Methodist Sunday School pledged $500 yesterday, the Ladies' Aid Society $1,000, a cheque for $100 from the First Church of Christ, Scientist, was received before sunrise on the morning the church was burned.

It is estimated that to rebuild the church along the former lines $30,000 will be necessary.

NORTH WARD.

W. J. JOHNSTON, contractor.
DAVID H. KERNEGHAN, grocer.
WM .LANGFORD, contractor's clerk.

EAST WARD.

J. C. ANDERSON, bookkeeper, nominated by Wm. Scott and Malcolm McIntyre.

Above is the list of candidates nominated for the Council of Peterborough for 1912. A glance over the list will show that there will be a contest in every ward in the city except the East, if those nominated make the necessary qualifications and decide to stay in the field. In East City, Ald. Anderson is returned to the Council unopposed, and with Ald. Morgan will look after the interests of the transriver section for another year.

It looks like a fight, however, for the other five vacancies. In the South Ward, where one is to be elected, there were five nominated this morning, including Ald. Buller. Of the others, Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., has already been in the Council, but the other three are new men in the municipal field.

In the Centre Ward there are two battles. In this ward, owing to the resignation of Ald. NO CONTEST FOR BOARD OF EDUCATION OR FOR THE WATER COMMISSIONERS

Chairman T. F. Matthews Goes in by Acclamation as do the Five Retiring Members of the Board of Education--Mr. Matthews Addresses the Rate Payers.

FOR WATER COMMISSIONER.

Mr. T. F. Matthews, nominated by W. G. Morrow and H. C. Stabler, elected by acclamation.

FOR BOARD OF EDUCATION

J. W. Miller, nominated by J. B. McWilliams and Jas. C. Graham.

George Burnham, M.D., nominated by Jas. G. Graham and Geo. H. Duncan.

John Crane, nominated by W. H. Bradburn and Geo. H. Duncan.

William Henry Hill, nominated by W. G. Morrow and Geo. H. Duncan.

ELECTED BY ACCLAMATION.

At the Municipal elections this morning, the vacancies in the Water Commissioners and Board of Education were filled by acclamation. Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of the Water Commissioners, was returned unopposed, and the personnel of that body will, therefore, remain as it has been since its inauguration. No new candidates were placed in the field for the Board of Education, and as a result, Messrs. John Crane, W. H. Hill, T. H. Adams, Col. Miller, and Dr. Burnham are elected by acclamation for two years and the Board will be entirely the same as this year.

Mr. Matthews Address.

Mr. Matthews read the following address:

I wish to thank the mover and seconder of my nomination as Water Commissioner for 1912, and in doing so, to take this opportunity of making a few remarks:

First of all, I desire to express the regret of the Commissioners, owing to the death of our late Superintendent, Mr. W. Henderson. Those of us who knew him best were aware of his sterling character, of his fidelity to the work of the city entrusted to him, and of his ability to carry on such work to satisfactory completion.

It may not be out of place to mention that I have served the city for ten years, having been first elected in 1902. During that time, I, with the other Commissioners, have endeavoured to progressively manage the Water Works Department for the city, and in any work we have undertaken, have endeavoured to look forward to and plan for a greater Peterborough. The following comparisons may be interesting:

Mileage of street mains—

1902	1911	Increase	%
17.61	36.47	18.86	107.0

Number of hydrants—

1902	1911	Increase	%
129	246	117	90.8

Number of Services—

1902	1911	Increase	%
1,070	2,222	2,152	201.0

Net Revenue—

1902	1911	Increase	%
$22,957.58	$43,300.41 (estimated)	$20,342.83	88.6

Debenture debt—

1902	1911
$237,000.00	$462,000.00

During the ten years water rates to the consumers have been reduced more than 33 1-3 per cent., as compared with the rates charged by the Water Company. The hydrant rental to the city has been reduced from $35.00 per hydrant per year, to $27.50 or 21 1-2 per cent.

In addition to supplying water at a reduced price, the Water Commissioners have paid to the City Trust Commissioners $65,445.90, as a sinking fund, to be used in retiring debentures, as they become due. The amount paid for interest on debentures during 1911 was $18,197.70, and to the sinking fund, $9,370.33.

The cost of the new dam, pumping machinery and connections, including land purchased, amounts to $139,-158.43. In addition, we have spent on a wing wall on the east side of the river, about $5,000.00. I cannot give you the exact amount, as final settlement with Mr. Conroy, contractor, has not been made.

I believe the city has reason to be proud of its Water Works System. The advice of our late Engineer, together with other eminent engineers, has been followed, and we have now a pumping plant that will answer for many years.

The action of the Commissioners in building a new dam, and their statements, respecting the available power, are now vindicated, as the Canadian General Electric are about to generate more than 1,200 h.p. in addition to the power required for the Water Works System. In a few weeks, it is expected that all work will be completed, when we will be pleased to invite the Mayor, Council and citizens, generally, to look over their property.

The members of the Board of Education did not address the meeting.

RATEPAYER SAYS COUNCIL SHOULD HAVE MORE INFORMATION RE BY-LAW

To the Editor of the Examiner,—

Dear Sir.—I am glad to notice my recent enquiry has started people thinking, and to-night we have two contradictory answers in our evening papers. The Councillors send a letter [illegible] themselves to a certain [illegible] which I believe they are [illegible] tly so, and are only mov[illegible] re to serve the city's best but what effect has their future Councils. How many [illegible] ll be there next year, or [illegible] er, or later years—or supp[illegible] atter comes up next year, [illegible] with as they suggest, and [illegible] how about future Coun[illegible] that the end of it?

Enquirer" in the same issue [illegible] law, "Clause 11, of Hydro[illegible] Laws," and instead of requir[illegible] submission to the people, it [illegible] itly states that "such contract [illegible] any City Council) shall be"—[illegible] may or will—but "shall be legal, [illegible] and BINDING." Read the [illegible] se in yesterday's papers for yourselves.

Now, I ask why did not the Council include the proviso that there should be nothing binding until after the question was again submitted, instead of giving personal pledges? We are all human and liable to err, and it occurs to me that the Council was somewhat lax here.

Why can we not have the law on this matter made plain? We do not want to know what the present Council will do—they will do what they say—but we do want to know what future Councils cannot do.

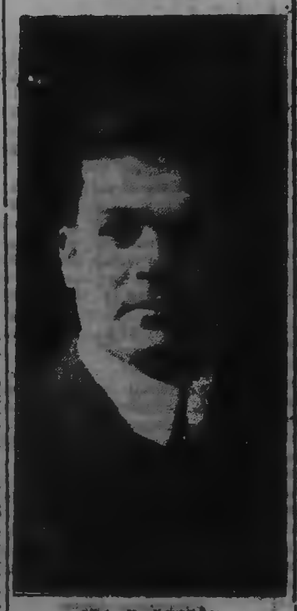
Why should a meritorious proposition, as this appears to be, be subjected to a suspicion of sinister motives, when it could be made perfectly plain?

Why do the Commission want the preliminary vote?—it is said in order to submit estimates and prepare contracts, etc., but if there is nothing binding in this bylaw, if it is an innocent as it appears, why not have these estimates made and contracts prepared before the second proposed bylaw is submitted? If there is nothing ulterior and binding, as section 11 above referred to appears to show, is it not entirely superfluous?

I would suggest that the Council obtain their estimates and have the contract made public and then submit it to the people, for their approval, and if it has merit we will support it. Failing this or an absolute guarantee that the said section 11 is not binding as it states, the ratepayers would be very unwise to support it.

RATEPAYER.

Peterborough, 22nd Dec., 1911.



GEO. N. GORDON,
One of the New Names Proposed For Next Year's Council Roster.

FIRE HALL DINNER

Chief Howard is Host of a Jolly Christmas Banquet for the Fire Laddies Last Night

A GREAT SUCCESS

The firemen's dinner, which bids fair to become an annual affair, was held last night at the Central fire station. It proved to be one of the most successful ever held, and good fellowship reigned over the festive board for two hours. The room in which the banquet was held, was prettily decorated with flags and other Christmas decorations, while the tables were laden down with all the good things that go to make up a genuine Christmas repast.

Rev. W .C. Riddiford, who was present, occupied the head of the table, while Fire Chief Howard sat at his right. Besides the firemen there were several outsiders present, among them being ex-Ald. Batten and others.

An audible sigh of relief and gratification was heard, following the Chief's announcement to the effect that after dinner speeches would be dispensed with.

Just as the men had finished providing for the wants of the inner man, with the exception of some of the long eaters, some practical joker in the building turned in a false alarm. This caused a geenral stampede, as one by one the men took a half hitch on the brass pole and shot thfough to the apparatus room, where the nature of the alarm was discovered.

The dinner was brought to a conclusion by the distribution of a box of cigars supplied by the Chief, and the remainder of the evening was spent in social intercourse.

DENOMINATIONS RE-UNITE TO REBUILD A CHURCH

READING, MASS., DEC. 23.—A movement was launched Sunday in the interests of rebuilding the Old South Methodist church. A fund has been started by citizens of other faiths to help the society rebuild its burned edifice along the same lines.

The Methodist Society will receive $11,900 in insurance, but does not feel financially able to carry out what seems to be the wish of the entire community that the church be rebuilt on the old site, and that its exterior be a replica of the historic edifice. NO CONTEST FOR BOARD OF EDUCATION OR FOR THE WATER COMMISSIONERS

Chairman T. F. Matthews Goes in by Acclamation as do the Five Retiring Members of the Board of Education--Mr. Matthews Addresses the Rate Payers.

FOR WATER COMMISSIONER.

Mr. T. F. Matthews, nominated by W. G. Morrow and H. C. Stabler, elected by acclamation.

FOR BOARD OF EDUCATION

J. W. Miller, nominated by J. B. McWilliams and Jas. C. Graham.

George Burnham, M.D., nominated by Jas. G. Graham and Geo. H. Duncan.

John Crane, nominated by W. H. Bradburn and Geo. H. Duncan.

William Henry Hill, nominated by W. G. Morrow and Geo. H. Duncan.

ELECTED BY ACCLAMATION.

At the Municipal elections this morning, the vacancies in the Water Commissioners and Board of Education were filled by acclamation. Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of the Water Commissioners, was returned unopposed, and the personnel of that body will, therefore, remain as it has been since its inauguration. No new candidates were placed in the field for the Board of Education, and as a result, Messrs. John Crane, W. H. Hill, T. H. Adams, Col. Miller, and Dr. Burnham are elected by acclamation for two years and the Board will be entirely the same as this year.

Mr. Matthews Address.

Mr. Matthews read the following address:

I wish to thank the mover and seconder of my nomination as Water Commissioner for 1912, and in doing so, to take this opportunity of making a few remarks:

First of all, I desire to express the [illegible] the Commissioners, owing [illegible] the Superintendent [illegible]

tion that I have served the [illegible] ten years, having been first elected in 1902. During that time, I, with the other Commissioners, have endeavoured to progressively manage the Water Works Department for the city, and in any work we have undertaken, have endeavoured to look forward to and plan for a greater Peterborough. The following comparisons may be interesting:

Mileage of street mains—

Number of hydrants—

Number of Services—

(estimated)

Debenture debt—
1902	1911
$237,000.00	$462,000.00

During the ten years water rates to the consumers have been reduced more than 33 1-3 per cent., as compared with the rates charged by the Water Company. The hydrant rental to the city has been reduced from $35.00 per hydrant per year, to $27.50 or 21 1-2 per cent.

In addition to supplying water at a reduced price, the Water Commissioners have paid to the City Trust Commissioners $85,445.90, as a sinking fund, to be used in retiring debentures, as they become due. The amount paid for interest on debentures during 1911 was $18,197.70, and to the sinking fund, $9,370.93.

The cost of the new dam, pumping machinery and connections, including land purchased, amounts to $139,358.43. In addition, we have spent on a wing wall on the east side of the river, about $5,000.00. I cannot give you the exact amount, as final settlement with Mr. Conroy, contractor, has not been made.

I believe the city has reason to be proud of its Water Works System. The advice of our late Engineer, together with other eminent engineers, has been followed, and we have now [illegible] plant that will answer [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] weeks, [illegible] will be completed, which we will be pleased to invite the Mayor, Council and citizens, generally, to look over their property.

The members of the Board of Education did not address the meeting.

RATEPAYER SAYS COUNCIL SHOULD HAVE MORE INFORMATION RE BY-LAW

To the Editor of the Examiner,—

Dear Sir.—I am glad to notice my recent enquiry has started people thinking, and to-night we have two contradictory answers in our evening papers. The Councillors send a letter pledging themselvs to a certain course—in which I believe they are honest, strictly so, and are only moved by a desire to serve the city's best interest, but what effect has their pledge on future Councils. How many of them will be there next year, or the year after, or later years—or suppose the matter comes up next year, and is dealt with as they suggest, and is defeated, how about future Councils?. Is that the end of it?

Now, "Enquirer" in the same issue quotes the law, "Clause 11, of Hydro Electric Laws," and instead of requiring [illegible] to the people, it explicitly [illegible] will [illegible] shall be binding in this bylaw, [illegible] cent as it appears, why not have their estimates made and contracts prepared before the second proposed bylaw is submitted? If there is nothing ulterior and binding, as section 11 above referred to appears to show, is it not entirely superfluous?

I would suggest that the Council obtain their estimates and have the contract made public and then submit it to the people, for their approval, and if it has merit we will support it. Failing this or an absolute guarantee that the said section 11 is not binding as it states, the ratepayers would be very unwise to support it.

RATEPAYER.

DINNER

Chief Howard is Host of a Jolly Christmas Banquet for the Fire Laddies Last Night

A GREAT SUCCESS

The firemen's dinner, which bids fair to become an annual affair, was held last night at the Central fire station. It proved to be one of the most successful ever held, and good fellowship reigned over the festive board for two hours. The room in which the banquet was held, was prettily decorated with flags and other Christmas decorations, while the tables were laden down with all the good things that go to make up a genuine Christmas repast.

Rev. W. C. Riddiford, who was present, occupied the head of the table, while Fire Chief Howard sat at his right. Besides the firemen there were several outsiders present, among them being ex-Ald. Batten and others.

An audible sigh of relief and gratification was heard, following the Chief's announcement to the effect that after dinner speeches would be dispensed with.

Just as the men had finished providing for the wants of the inner man, with the exception of some of the long eaters, some practical joker in the building turned in a false alarm. This caused a general stampede, as one by one the men took a half hitch on the brass pole and shot through to the apparatus room, where the nature of the alarm was discovered.

The dinner was brought to a conclusion by the distribution of a box of cigars supplied by the Chief, and the remainder of the evening was spent in social intercourse.

THE MAYORALTY.

Up to this morning at 10 o'clock, it looked as if Alderman Bradburn would have a walk-over in the contest for Mayor. But this NEGLECT OF ONTARIO.

Mail and Empire, printed yesterday an article on "Ontario Rural Growth," dealing incidentally with the decrease of rural population. Its opening sentence contains the severest possible, and most pointed possible condemnation of the Whitney government's neglect of the agricultural and allied interests of the province. The journal states that the decrease of rural population emphasizes the appreciation of Hon. Mr. Borden's policy for contributing to the cost of road making and supplementing provincial work in agricultural education. Why should the "banner agricultural province" of the Dominion, come to the humiliation of having the Federal government help do the duty, the work, of the Provincial government? The neglect of the Ontario government in respect of the agricultural interests of Ontario is one of the chief causes of the decrease of the population in the country districts. Of course, the exodus to the Northwest is responsible for a considerable proportion of this population drift. But that very fact should have stimulated a live Provincial government to supplement the leakage with new tenants of the soil. The late Liberal government, owning the lands in the Northwest, like a faithful trustee, vigorously promoted their settlement. This incidentally created a draft upon Ontario's rural population, one that has been going on for many years. Can it be said that the sleeping government of Ontario has once awakened to the situation, and to a sense of responsibility? For the past seven years, the Ontario government according to its own friends, "has been asleep" amidst the magnificent possibilities of the Ontario north; and instead of doing anything in the way of promoting settlement, has contented itself with whining over the policy of the Laurier government, depriving Ontario of population by opening up the Northwest by a live and practical development propaganda. The Whit-

WILL PETERBOROUGH RATEPAYERS BUY "A PIG IN A POKE?"

The question to be submitted to the electors on Jan. 1st is, taken by itself, as innocent as a baby—

"Are you in favour of obtaining from the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission a supply of electric power?

But it has a baby's possibility of making trouble, unless subject to control. It is easy for the electors to say "yes". The question is an innocent one—but there is a string to it.

"Would you like to have a pig?" Your answer would be "yes"; but the inevitable question would be "What am I to pay for it—I won't buy a 'pig in a poke'"?

Wouldn't that be logical? Wouldn't it be good business—to know the price before you committed yourself to the deal?

If the people say "yes" to the innocent question presented by the City Fathers, there their share in the matter ends.

They will be counting themselves out of the deal. They will be giving the Council of next year and of other years a very dangerous power that they can exercise at will without asking the permission of the people.

The people will be putting into the hands of the Council the power to make any contract for power the Council chooses to make.

They will be giving the Council power to enter into a contract, without asking the permission of the people, who have to pay, no matter what the cost may be.

We are, if we pass the present by-law, to know nothing as to what we are to pay for the power we to enter into any contract they may choose—without giving the ratepayers a say in the matter.

Is that a wise thing to do, to give the Council full power to mortgage Peterborough, with no knowing where the expense will end?

Toronto has spent about two and a half million dollars in getting Hydro-Electric power; and now a demand is made for two million dollars more, and it is estimated that a million dollars more will be required before the city quits paying for cheap power—altogether five million dollars.

There is no objection to getting power for Peterborough through the Hydro-Electric Commission. In the abstract, it is all right. But the people who pay have a right to know, to be given some slight inkling of, what the power will cost in the way of development and installation.

They have a right to be consulted before they are committed to a large, or even, small, expenditure.

They should be assured, before they vote on the by-law, whether or not they will be consulted, on any contract, which may be entered into if they answer "yes" to the by-law.

The present Council in their manifesto say that the people will be consulted. But, as a Council, they will be dead on Jan. 1st, and have no power to bind their successors by a simple, unofficial statement in the newspapers.

The safest way is for the ratepayers, when they come to vote, to ask themselves what they are voting for.

One thing they are voting for

They should not have asked the people to vote "yea" without the strongest proviso, in the by-law itself, that whatever contract might be entered into, should be submitted to the people for approval.

By voting "yes" on the by-law the people will be giving the Council full power to play a lone hand—submitted to the people a two-thirds' majority to pass.

But the Hydro-Electric law permits a city council that has secured the consent of the people to make a contract, to make any contract it chooses without submitting the terms to the people.

TAKE A LESSON FROM MANITOBA.

A lesson as to the wisdom of slow-going in the matter of dealing with public utility proposals, is furnished by the experience of Manitoba with her government-owned telephone system. The Roblin Government justified its purchase of the Bell Telephone System by the assurance that rates would be cut in two. The rates have had, on the contrary, to be doubled, to meet the excessive cost of government management. The new Government telephone rates in Winnipeg will work out as follows:

	Per Year
Four calls a day	$48.00
Ten calls a day	85.00
Twenty calls a day	146.00
Fifty calls a day	329.00
Seventy calls a day	451.00

The people of Winnipeg are in insurrection over the hold-up. How would Peterborough people like a curtailed and costly telephone service like that? The people of Manitoba went into the telephone business blindly, and now they are repenting, but too late. The time for repentance in business transactions is beforehand—by counting the cost and knowing the cost and knowing the extent of the obligation incurred. This is a lesson to the people of Peterborough, in the matter of giving the Council a free hand in making contracts, which the people will have to make good with their good money, without themselves being consulted.

The Relation Of Christmas Festivities To Paganism

Many Christmas customs show an interesting blending of Christian and Pagan ceremonies, and, indeed it is owing to Christmas and to Easter alone that they survive at all. Centuries ago they passed away and became as a dead language, but at each Easter and Christmas they are revived, and, although few understand the significance that once attached to them, they remain a never-failing source of interest to the students of the past. The fashion of feasting heartily on Christmas Day is one we owe to the ancient Britons, who were wont to gorge themselves in honour of some of their gods. When St. Augustine arrived in England to spread the Gospel he carried out Pope Gregory's instructions to blend, as far as possible, the heathen and the new Christian practices, and not to violently oppose customs that were not evil in themselves, even though their observance was associated with heathen rites. So the people were encouraged to kill a great number of oxen and eat them "to the glory of God" as they had formerly eaten them in honour of their Pagan deities.

Christmas Greenery.

Though most of the Christmas customs have a Saxon origin, the use of green for decorative purposes goes much further back than Saxon times, as can be seen at [illegible] Christmas Wassail.

[illegible] cutting the "dark foliage of the sweet tree" on the sixth day of the moon nearest New Year's was solemnly impressive. Dressed in white the officiating priest cut the sprays with a golden sickle and they were reverently laid on a white cloth.

love and kissing and the throb and thrill of young life, was then so regarded that bulls and human beings were sacrificed in its honour. It was supposed to keep away witches, and the people paid the Druids dearly for a bit of it to hang about the neck and so ward off evil.

Some Old Customs Lost.

From some Pagan source probably came the Christian custom of telling fortunes by mistletoe, which is now almost extinct, probably because the hearth stone on which the demonstration was made has also disappeared. Two leaves were chosen, one to represent the lover who was applying to the oracle and the other to represent the object of his affection. As the heat began to shrivel up the leaves they moved, or "jumped," closer together, or farther apart, and the incident was supposed to decide whether the lovers would marry or drift asunder. With the disappearance of the Yule log went a beautiful observance, for the flames were thought to burn out all wrongs jealousies, meanness, and bitterness of the family grouped around it. So, too, we must regret the disappearance of the old fancy that at Christmas the bees recite a litany, the cows kneel in honour of the manger at Bethlehem, and the sheep go in [illegible] procession in commemoration [illegible] of the angles to the shep-

TO MOVE HEAD OFFICE

Union Bank Decides to Move Head Office to Winnipeg—Past Year Best in Bank's History

The Union Bank of Canada, whose 47th annual meeting was held in Quebec on December 13th, is rapidly becoming one of our leadig financial institutions. An examination of the financial report shows that the bank had net earnings for the year of $662,000, equal to 14 per cent. on the average paid-up capital, during the year. These profits show an increase of almost 50 per cent. over the earnings of the previous year.

[illegible] at by the shareholders, namely, the moving of the head office of the bank from Quebec to Winnipeg. This action had been recommended by the directors, owing to the fact that 156 of the 242 branches of the bank were located west of Lake Superior, while 76 were in Ontario. The movement is an important one, as it shows the gradual westward trend of the financial centre of our banks.

Other evidence of the bank's activity are shown by the fact that early in its fiscal year it absorbed the United Empire Bank of Toronto, with its paid-up capital of $559,000 and twelve branches scattered throughout Ontario. Later in the year the Union Bank established a branch in London, England, in order to enable it to more successfully handle the rapidly increasing volume of business between Canada and Great Britain. The showing made by the bank is a remarkable one even in a year when all our banks are showing good increases over their records for the previous year.

Brantford Young Woman Caught on High Level Bridge by Express and Had to Jump

A HORRIBLE ACCIDENT

BRANTFORD, ONT., DEC. 22. — Caught on the Grand Trunk high level bridge, three miles from here by the approaching express last night, Miss Josie Gibson, aged nineteen, and Miss Lena Irving, jumped to the T. H. and B. tracks twenty-five feet below. Miss Gibson was instantly killed and the other girl's skull was fractured, her limbs broken and other internl injuries inflicted. She will probably die. The young women were with a party of others who, with Rev. C. H. Emerson, were going to Cainesville Baptist mission to give a concert. All the rest had a narrow escape. Miss Gibson was a daughter of the principal of the Waterford Public school, and Miss Irving was a Forestville girl. They all resided at the Brantford Y.W.C.A.

"MONEY BY-LAW VOTER" STATES THAT COUNCIL'S STATEMENT IS NOT CANDID

To the Editor of the Examiner,—

Dear Sir: The manifesto issued by the Mayor and City Council on the power question is not candid.

This power bylaw is being submitted as a money blaw. The question asked is:

"Are you in favour of obtaining from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario a supply of electric power?"

If the ratepayers answer Yes, then the City Council under the "Power Commission Amendment Act of 1909" is authorized to enter into any contract with the Commission that the Council sees fit "without submitting a bylaw approving of same for the assent of the electors," and when executed such contract is "legal, valid and binding" upon the city.

The next step the Commission takes is to go ahead and acquire dams, develop them, instal electric machinery, purchase such existing power plants as they see fit, and pay such prices for them as they may see fit, and under the contract set forth in the Power Commission Act the City of Peterborough will be legally liable to pay for every cent of expenditure that the Commission may incur.

Once the electors vote "Yes" upon this question the Hydro-Electric advances the money upon the credit of the town under the Power Commission Act, without consulting the ratepayers and without submitting any further bylaw for the approval of the ratepayers.

The manifesto of the Mayor and City Council creates a false impression when it says the "City Council cannot borrow money for this purpose without again submitting the matter to the ratepayers." This is a mere quibble. The Commission advances the money upon the general credit of the city and the city must pay its debts and perform its contracts the same as any other corporation, even if it is a $500,000 scheme.

It is inconceivable why the City Council have submitted this Bylaw if they do not intend to act upon it. The City Council promises in their manifesto that they are not going to act upon this bylaw; then why shou[illegible] the electors vote for it as a solemn money bylaw. In any event before the Council ask the ratepayers to vote upon a money bylaw they should take the ratepayers into their confidence and show the people that the city can develop electric power and light and sell it at a cheaper price than is now being paid. The ratepayers want to be shown that their power and light will be cheaper.

Yorus truly,
MONEY BYLAW VOTER.

Some people get beyond their means, and it is possible for a city to do the same, and that is just what I believe our city is doing, and where are you going to stop? Our expenditures may increase, and we expect it to increase, but we should not go in debt. I have lived here all my life, and all I have is here. I have worked for what I own, and although I am not a millionaire, I must protect what I have. I am interested in the advance of the city, and I like to see factories coming and all that, but I think it is possible to introduce some economizing project, by which we can stay the tide of expenditure. I think it is now up to the ratepayers to bring it about. Mr. Hartley closed his speech, by thanking his nominators for endorsing his candidature.

"OUR ENGLISH SPEECH" THE SUBJECT OF SPLENDID ADDRESS BY PRINCIPAL PETERSON

Head of McGill University Addressed Members of the Canadian Club of Peterborough Last Night--His Remarks Were Greatly Enjoyed by a Large Attendance.

It was with profound interest that the members of the Canadian Club listened to the words of Dr. W. Peterson, Principal of the McGill University, Montreal, who adressed the meeting held last evening in the Oriental Hotel.

There was an unusually large attendance, due no doubt to the prominence Dr. Peterson has attained by his edifying educational lectures. Though dwelling upon the discrepancies of speech prevailing in the North American continent, he was not unmindful of the good qualities which in some cases assert themselves.

In the absence of Mr. J. E. L. Goodwill, the President, whose indisposition rendered him unable to attend, the chair was occupied by Mr. T. F. Matthews, the Vice-President, and at the head of the room sat Mayor Morrow, the Revs. F. Sawers and H. J. Keith, Judge Huycke, Dr. McCullough and Messrs G. C. Wainwright, treasurer), R. B. Rogers and W. R. Morris. At the conclusion of the dinner and prior to Dr. Petersons' address the chairman announced that the next meeting, to be held on Jan. 4th, would be addressed by Mr. H. P. Ames of Montreal, and the treasurer read a message of greeting from the Canadian Club of the Dominion and one from the club in Vancouver. Dr. Peterson was then formally introduced to the assembly by the chairman, Mr. T. F. Matthews, who said:

"We are particularly fortunate in having wtih us to-night Dr. Peterson, Principal of the McGill University, who has fulfilled the duties of that position for the past thirteen years and who previously held a similar position in Scotland for a period of twelve years. We are all pleased to hear of the campaign in Montreal for the endowment. Those of you who read of it will know that more than a million and a half was raised in a few days. I have very much pleasure in introducing Dr. Peterson.

"I have had," said Dr. Peterson, "a varied and highly valuable experience with these Canadian Clubs. I know them by day and I also know them by night. It is a great privilege to be brought into contact with those who engage in work such as that which exists in the City of Peterborough.'

"There is always a difficulty in the choice of a subject and when I submitted my wares to Mr. Wainwright, he selected one on which I am going to speak to you to-night. When Mr. Wainwright told me he was going to choose "Our English Speech," I had some qualms of conscience. To render such a lecture is difficult without incurring a reputation as a rather superior person.

"It seems to me we are suffering in Canada to a certain degree in our language study. I know no better ally in this fight for good English than the lofty tone, the excellent and renowned thought that inspire our English poetry. People are never tired of asking you "what is the use of this." Such people make a dead set on arithmetic. That is because it is taught in our schools. People never make a dead set on shorthand, nor on the language study which I want to plead is among the best of proved forms of mental discipline. People say it is not words we want, it is things. As if words are not things. Is not a lesson of heroic and self sacrificing life a thing just as much as a material thing? It is a fact that we are in danger in neglecting this discipline. It is very interesting to watch the progress of, say the French language, which is creeping into our English. People say "What are we going to do in the New Year's." New Years is a translation from the French. Then, of course, apart from the French, there is another stream to look at, and that is the stream that comes from the other side. Some are foolish enough to speak as if our English speech would flow like a limpid stream if it were not for the American language. This, of course, is absolute rot. It is like a tree that sheds some leaves and grows others. New conditions arise which call for new methods of expression. If we have to admire anything in the Americans, it is their inventiveness. For instance, the word 'standpat.' This is a word that was for a considerable time ridiculed, but which is now almost universally used. I want to call your attention to the word fix. The word fix carries an undue and excessive burden in our English language. Whatever requires repairs, it all means 'fix.' I saw in a store some days ago, 'ladies' fixings.' (Laughter.) Far be it from me to try to discover what these embellishments are. Then some say lay down; they should say 'lie down.'

"A lady once went to her medical adviser and said, I can neither 'lay' nor 'set.' The doctor replied, 'May I suggest that you should try roosting.'

"We have traced the word 'guess' from the English language. You find it in Chaucer and in other famous literature. An American, entertaining a Scotch friend in Philadelphia, was asked to visit Edinburgh. He did so, and on entering the hotel was asked what he would have. I guess I'll have a Scotch and soda replied the visitor. Said the Scotchman 'Guess again.' Such words as car (coach) sleeper, (sleeping carriage), railroad (railway) for rent (to let) are all incorrect. We hear it said, 'Get off the track,' when in the old land it would be 'Get off the rails.' There seems to be an attempt to invent educational rules to which I beg none of you will ever bow the knee.

"'I am feeling very bad to-day.' On hearing that statement one might be more inclined to call in a clergyman than a doctor. 'You are looking good to-day, Bill,' is another saying. I am only showing you how we should keep our language as pure as possible. Oh, let us stick to the straight, forward 'yes' and 'no' for what comes more than that is evil. It will be bad when we have to say 'Yep'. I was reading something the other day, when I saw 'disassociate.' Why did not the writer say 'dissociate' and be done with it? 'I am not going to stand for it.' Here it is again; you don't stand for bad treatment, you stand it. Therefore you will not stand it. The trouble about all this is that parents and children think they know English well enough—we have not got in the newer lands the sentiment of the older lands. Down in the States they think nothing of illiteracy of speech, if the speaker has made his pile. Now, it is here that poetry, in my judgment, comes in. We are apt in these modern times to regard poetry a waste of time, but let us take our stand that English must be the foundation stone of all language raised. In its lofty style and in its rhythm, poetry rises upon the ordinary language of conversation. The march of music and the regular metre impresses itself on the reader, and he who has the lilt of it on his mind and heart, is not so apt as another to speak the low and degraded form of words. Poetry makes itself emotional, sympathetic, and portrays love and admiration, and in addition, it inspires beautiful thought.

In concluding his lecture, Dr. Peterson read verses from Joachim Miller's "Columbus," Richard Hovey's "At the End of the Day," and some verses from the Works of Henry Newboldt, and in reference to the last mentioned, which dealt with cricket, he said: "I am afraid that our hockey players have not learned to love the game above the prize. The idea of clean athletics in the minds of young people, develops proper ideas later in life.

In thanking the lecturer, the chairman said: "I think I am a very brave man to attempt to convey the thanks of the gathering to Dr. Peterson after such a lecture. I will not ask anyone to propose a vote of thanks to the lecturer for the Canadian Club is indebted to Dr. Peterson for his excellent address, which I am sure will bear fruit in better English, and (turning to Dr. Peterson) on behalf of the Canadian Club, I extend you thanks."

LIBRARY WAS PRESENTED TO PROTESTANT HOME

Knights of Pythias Formally Hand Over the Books Won in the Recent Library Voting Contest.

AN INTERESTING EVENT

At a meeting of the Knights of Pythias and directors of the Protestant Home, held in the Knights of Pythias Hall, on Simcoe street, the sectional book case and library, won by the Society in the library voting contest, was presented to the Protestant Home.

Owing to the inclement weather there were only a few attended. Mr. J. J. Allin presided very acceptably as chairman, and made the speech of the evening, in presenting the magnificent gift.

Mr. Allin's address was as follows:

"It gives me pleasure to be able to welcome you this evening. It is one of the interesting periods of Pythian life to announce that after some months of strenuous work on the part of the friends of this order, it has been officially announced that the library is to go to Marathon Lodge; but before turning over this library to you as a gift from us, I wish to crave a few minutes of your time and describe to you the origin of Pythianism. Our Order was founded in Washington, D.C., in the year 1865, by Justin Rathbin, at a time when friendship was something to be regarded—when the country to the south of us was in the midst of war, in which brother was arrayed against brother in that mighty conflict which resulted in the victory of the North, no more opportune time could be found to give birth to our Order. It is founded on the Rock of Friendship, Charity and Benevolence, and Mr. Rathbin went back to the ancient days of Grecian history to obtain the reason.

King Dionysius reigned over ancient Syracuse, a despot and a tyrant, ruling by terror rather than by love. There were two Senators, Daman and Pythias, and the love between them was great. Daman, one of these Senators, had incurred the displeasure of his King, and was to be executed. Pythias, hearing that Daman was in difficulty, and knowing his love of home and friends, prayed that Dionysius would grant a respite of four hours, that he might bid good bye to his wife and loved ones. Pythias' request was made with so much fervor that the heart of Dionysius was touched and Daman was given his freedom for the four hours and Pythias was cast in the dungeon in his stead, and Daman left for his home. The last of the four hours is at hand and Pythias is led to the execution block to take the place of his friend. He is jeered and taunted with the seeming falseness of his friend, when, behold in the distance, riding like the wind, Daman returned and Dionysius, touched by such love and friendship, pardoned Daman, and begged the Senators, Daman and Pythias, that he might be allowed to share their love and friendship. This is the origin of the Knights of Pythias. I take very much pleasure in presenting, on behalf of Marathon Lodge, No. 39, Knights of Pythias of Peterborough, this sectional bookcase and library, and trust that it may be the means of brightening many hours of the ones who have the privilege to be connected with your Home.

Mr. Aylmer made a neat speech on behalf of the Home, in which he expressed his extreme pleasure in accepting the magnificent gift. He said that by Spring the new Protestant Home would be completed, and they would be comfortably situated, when they would be in a position where they could thoroughly appreciate the present. On behalf of the Directors, he thanked them for the handsome gift, and stated that it was a most acceptable present, and would be a source of pleasure to the inmates of the Home.

The chairman then called upon Dr. Wilson, who stated that it had been a very pleasing effort on the part of the Society to win the contest, which they did, by about 900,000 votes. He stated that when the Society entered the contest, they did so with the intention of presenting the prize to a place where it was most needed and best suited, and he believed that they had done so.

Mr. J. B. McWilliams was next called upon. He stated he was glad of the chance to express his genuine appreciation of the handsome gift, and he was sure that all the members of the Home would be greatly pleased to receive it. He concluded by congratulating the Knights of Pythias on having won out in the contest.

Mr. Frank Jacobi was the last speaker called. He made a brief address, after which the proceedings were brought to a close.

The library consists of a set of Scott's Waverly Novels, fifteen volumes of Shakespeare's works; some of Mrs. Craik's and Mary Bradford Whitney's works, Goldsmith and Whittier's poems, the works of Geo. Eliott, Annie Sherwood and other well-known authors.

WEDDING BELLS

ANDERSON—MADILL.

The home of Mr. Joseph Madill was the scene of a pretty wedding on Wednesday, Dec. 20, when his only remaining daughter, Maude, was united to Alfred Anderson, South Monaghan. The ceremony was conducted by Rev. F. W. White, B.A., in the presence of only the immediate relatives. After a dainty luncheon, the contracting parties took train to Cavanville to Toronto, Buffalo and other parts. The bride travelled in a navy blue coat suit with hat to match. The best wishes of their many friends go with them for a happy and prosperous wedded life.

Everything in Furs obtained of us will be found of the highest quality, perfect in fit and right up-to-date.

PERSIA GIVES IN

Russia's Demands Backed up by England Were Too Much and Shuster Will Be Dismissed.

TROUBLE IS OVER

Special to The Examiner:

TEHERAN, PERSIA, DEC. 22.—The dictatorship of W. Morgan Shuster is at an end. Russia's demand, backed up by England and an army of Russian soldiers marching on this place, has had its effect and Russia was to-day notified that Persia would comply with all her demands, including the dismissal of the American soldier of fortune, who has played such a prominent part in the world's events in the last few days.

DR. CROTHERS' SUDDEN DEATH

Former Pastor of George Street Methodist Church Dies of Heart Failure

Special Wire to The Examiner.

PRESTON, ONT., DEC. 22.— Rev. Dr. W. J. Crothers, pastor of the Methodist church here, dropped dead at 8 o'clock from heart failure. The deceased came here from St. Catharines in July last.

Peterborough people will be shocked to learn of the death of Rev. Dr. Crothers, who occupied the pulpit of the George street Methodist church for four years, leaving four and a half years ago to go to St. Catharines, from where he was transferred to Preston this year.

CHRISTMAS DAY AT "THE GRAND"

The Colonial Repertoire Co. will open a two days' engagement at The Grand next week, opening with a matinee on Christmas Day, when they will present two intensely funny sketches entitled "Two Dutch Admirals," and "Casey From Klondyke". Musical numbers will be introduced through the entire performance, including "That Mysterious Rag," by the dainty little comedienne Miss Edie Crossman and Gerald Ruck, America's noted tenor. Popular prices will prevail for the entire engagement, 10c, 20c, 30c, and audiences that will tax the capacity of the Grand are promised. The seat sale opened this morning.

Case Dismissed

Wage Case Aired in Police Court this Morning—Was Dismissed Without Costs

Mr. Highland, a former employee of the Canadian General Electric Co., charged the Company in the Police Court, this morning, with nonpayment of $27.12 1-2 wages, earned by him. Mr. L. M. Hayes appeared for the Company. After considerable evidence had been taken, the case was dismissed without costs.

Highland stated that he was working by the hour, and he was out of work a lot, not being able to secure material. For this reason he quit, and brought suit against the Company, because they would not pay, what he considered, the full amount of his wages.

G. H. BALFOUR,
General Manager.

During the past year twenty-four branches and agencies of the Bank have been opened in the following provinces: New Brunswick, 1; Quebec, 3; Ontario, 9; Saskatchewan, 5; Alberta 3; British Columbia, 4; England, 1.

Two branches in Alberta and one each in Ontario, which proved unproductive, have been closed. The total number of branches is now 242.

During the year the capital of the Bank has been increased from $4,000,000 to $4,914,120. The premium arising from the disposal of new stock has been credited to the Rest Account.

The customary inspections of the head office and of all branches and agencies of the Bank have been made.

Quebec, December 18, 1911.

JOHN SHARPLES,
President.

Before moving the adoption of the report, the President addressed the Meeting, giving the Shareholders further particulars as to the increase of paid up capital by $914,120. Increase in number of Shareholders by 615, making a total of over 2,475. Mentioning specially the absorption of the United Empire Bank of Canada on April 1, which added twenty branches in the richest portion of Ontario, where this Bank was previously unrepresented. He also spoke in regard to the proposed removal of the head office from Quebec to Winnipeg, as recommended by the Directors, after considering the matter for two years, and which was to be voted on by the Shareholders later. Mr. Sharples, commenting on the hearty support which he had at all times received from the Board of Directors and the Executive Officers of the Bank, stated that the condition of his health would not permit of his continuing to discharge the important duties of President of the Bank after its removal to Winnipeg.

Another important event had been the opening of a branch in London, England, which was undertaken after the most careful consideration of the Board, and the personal visit to London by the General Manager and the Assistant General Manager. Mr. F. W. Ashe, formerly Eastern Superintendent, was appointed manager of this branch, and the results to date have exceeded expectations.

It was then moved by the Hon. John Sharples, and seconded by Mr. William Price, that the Report of the Directors, now read, be adopted and printed for distribution among the Shareholders. Carried.

The General Manager addressed the meeting, referring particularly to the figures as shown by the Balance Sheet, and giving additional details as to the policy of the Bank in various matters of interest to the Shareholders, mentioning in particular the opening of twenty-four additional branches during the year, making a total of 242, as follows:—

New Brunswick	1
Nova Scotia	1
Ontario	76
Quebec	7
Manitoba	39
Saskatchewan	67
Alberta	39
British Columbia	11
London, England	1

Mr. Balfour expressed his regret at the decision of the Hon. John Sharples to retire from his duties as President at a future date, and said that he was voicing the feeling of the Directors, Shareholders and Officials in expressing the hope that he would long be spared to exert that keen interest in the Institution which he has displayed during the past seventeen years as Director, Vice-President, and President of the Bank.

After the adoption of the Report, Mr. R. T. Riley, in a short address, stated that it was the wish of the Directors that when Mr. Sharples finds it necessary to retire from the Presidency of the Bank that he be tendered the position of Honorary President. He also spoke specially in reference to the Western Division, in which there are now 155 Branches with a staff of 765.

Mr. Samuel Barker, M.P., of Hamilton, also addressed the meeting, congratulating the Shareholders on the Report presented to the meeting, thanking the President and Directors, the General Manager and other Officers of the Bank for their efforts on its behalf, and expressing his approval of the proposed removal of the Head Office to Winnipeg.

At the request of the President, the Secretary then read the draft bill, now before the House of Commons, for the purpose of amending the Bank's charter, and moving the Head Office of the Bank from Quebec to Winnipeg.

It was then moved by Mr. William Price, seconded by Col. J. F. Turnbull, and unanimously resolved that the action of the Directors in applying for the foregoing amendment to the Bank's charter be and hereby is approved.

Moved by Mr. R. T. Riley, seconded by Mr. E. H. A. DuVernet: "That the Meeting now proceed to the election of Directors for the ensuing year, and that the ballot box for the receipt of votes be kept open until a quarter past four o'clock, or until five minutes have elapsed without a vote being offered, during which time proceedings be suspended. Carried.

The Scrutineers appointed at the Meeting reported the following gentlemen duly elected as Directors for the ensuing year: Hon. John Sharples, Messrs. Wm. Price, E. J. Hale, Wm. Shaw, George H. Thomson, R. T. Riley, E. L. Drewry, W. R. Allan, F. E. Kenaston, John Galt, M. Bull, Samuel Barker, M.P.; E. H. A. DuVernet, K.C.; George P. Reid, and Stephen Haas.

At a subsequent Meeting of the newly-elected Board the Hon. John Sharples was elected President, and Mr. Wm. Price, Vice-President.

THE WEATHER

The unseasonable and un-Christmaslike weather still continues, and there seems to be no prospect of any decided change. The weather is mild from one side of the continent on the other, with rain and light snowfalls in places. Highest temperature yesterday, 30 degrees; lowest, 18 degrees.—W. P.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

WE often think we would not like to have other people to be able to read our minds.

And yet how many times, if folks only could see each other's minds instead of their deeds, their motives instead of their acts, misunderstandings which embitter might be avoided, and hearts which break might be whole.

Let me tell you of a little resolution which the man-who-thinks and his wife adopted not long after they were married and to which he gives credit, in part, at least, for their unusually happy married life.

A misunderstanding had arisen between them. His wife had planned with two old friends of theirs an outing for a coming holiday which she had thought he would greatly enjoy. The opportunity to plan it had occurred when she could not consult with him, and feeling sure of his approval she had ventured to go ahead with the arrangements. Unfortunately he had planned an inter view with some business friends for that morning and when he came home tired and hungry after an especially trying day and she told him, he spoke out with sharp disapproval. She, too, happened to be unusually tired and nervous, and the result was a quarrel of which the bitterness and duration was quite disproportionate to its cause.

After the storm had finally blown over, and the air had become beautifully clear and sweet, as it always does after a thunderstorm, they sat down and talked things over. They reviewed all the little troubles they had had from the beginning, for this misunderstanding was the latest and worst of several similar ones, and they found that almost all these misunderstandings were caused simply by one party doing something entirely without unkind intent which, for some reason happened to hurt or annoy the other. Practically, none of the trouble had a suspicion of unkind motive behind it.

And the conclusion of their talk was this resolution—"We are going to try to look at motives as well as deeds. We are going to try to get the point of view behind words as well as the words themselves. We promise each other to make a solemn effort to do this, before we accuse or blame each other."

It is to this resolution that the man-who-thinks gives much of the credit for their happy union.

"Even in love," says Stevenson, "there are unlovely humors; ambiguous acts, unpardonable words, may yet have sprung from a kind sentiment. If the injured one could read your heart you may be sure that he would understand and pardon; but alas! the heart cannot be shown—it has to be demonstrated in words. Do you think it is a hard thing to write poetry? Why this is to write poetry of a high, if not the highest order."

It is, to be sure, a more difficult thing than most of us realize, to make our words and deeds duly portray our hearts. We don't appreciate this, because we fancy that any misunderstanding which arises is due to the other party's stupidity or perversity, instead of our own feebleness at translating ourselves.

But if only those who live in any close intimacy would promise each other to try to understand, would make some resolutions like that of the man-who-thinks, don't you believe it would be easier?

I do.

Of course, we shouldn't always remember the resolution, and even when we did remember and did try to carry it out, we shouldn't always be able to understand, and even when we did understand, we should sometimes find thoughts and motives that weren't kind or unselfish. But even so, I'm sure such an effort would help a little—would diminish somewhat the painful sum of misunderstandings that embitter and hearts that break.

Aren't you?

A POPULAR TRAVELLER

Once more a Peterborough citizen is "in the limelight." The current issue of "Wine and Spirit Journal" contains a portrait of Mr. Stanley Coon, formerly of this city, but now on the road in the interests of Corby's Distillery. The Journal notes that Mr. Coon is one of the most popular travellers on his circuit. Mr. Coon's many friends here will remember him as a son-in-law of Mr. Edwards, former proprietor of the Crystal.

ALL SAINTS' SUNDAY SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENT

The annual Christmas entertainment of the Sunday School of All Saints' Church was held last night in the Parish Hall, and was a most successful and enjoyable event, with a large attendance of pupils and a good representation of parents present. Tea was served at 6.30 o'clock and the programme, which consisted of readings, recitations, dialogues, etc., was commenced at 8 o'clock. A special feature of the programme was the "Fairy Crowning" by Miss Ruby Cranfield, and eleven little girls, which was splendidly presented, a great deal of the credit being due to Miss Rush, who had the training of the children in charge. Instead of receiving gifts themselves, the children brought donations of toques, mittens, gloves, books, toys, etc., which will be sent to Rev. Canon Dixon of Holy Trinity Church, Toronto, who will see that they are distributed among the poor children in Toronto's slums. The whole entertainment was the most successful held by the school, an appreciated feature being the good behaviour of the children.

Mr. John Edgar, superintendent of the Sunday School presided.

On Sunday afternoon there will be a special Christmas service for children, which will be addressed by the visiting clergyman.

OBITUARY

ELIZABETH ADAMSON.

Death visited the home of Mr. Robert Adamson of Lot 9, Con. 9, Otonabee, this morning, and claimed his daughter, Elizabeth, aged thirteen years.

The funeral will take place on Monday, Dec. 25th. A service will be held at the house at 1.30, after which, at 2 o'clock, the funeral cortege will proceed to the Pine Grove Cemetery, Keene, for interment.

AUSTIN J. FORD.

The death of Mr. A. J. Ford, Fortescue, Cavendish township, took place on Sunday evening, after a few weeks' illness.

Mr. Ford had reached the age of 69 years and 6 months, and was well and favourably known in Kinmount, and vicinity, he having been a resident of Cavandish township for more than a quarter of a century, where he made a success of life and became one of the central figures in his neighbourhood. At his home was established the Fortescue postoffice. He was obliging and painstaking in the interests of his neighbours.

He was predeceased by his wife several years ago and is survived by eight stalwart sons and two daughters. The daughters are Mrs. John Maxwell, of Gooderham, and Mrs. Wm. Peacock of Fortescue.

The funeral took place on Wednesday to Kinmount cemetery and was very largely attended.—Minden Echo

Mr. Ford was well known in this city, where he had a host of friends. He was a staunch Liberal and for many years had acted in the official capacity of Returning Officer for his district. Deceased had held the position of postmaster up to the time of his demise. He was one of the first pioneers of the district in which he lived, and his death will be a distinct loss to the community.

OTTAWAS LOOK LIKE BEST BET FOR THE N.H.A.

OTTAWA, DEC. 21.—With the Toronto teams out of the league it looks like a walk-away for the Ottawas. Ottawa will have practically the same team on the ice this season as last, and, with the training and experience of the players should win, hands down. While the breaking up of the Torontos and Tecumsehs will allow the other teams to sign a few good men that the two teams had on their list, they had no world-beaters on either team, and the acquisition of their men by other clubs will not make any appreciable difference to the strength of the other clubs.

Canadiens Have Chance.

The Canadiens look to be the most formidable organization. They have lost their two best men, Lalonde and Poulin, both of whom have taken the westward trip to the Patrick's league. This will make a big hole in their forward line, and they should not be as fast as they were last year at this point. For goal they still have Vezina, one of the best in the game. Ernie Dubeau will hold down point, with Jack Laviolette at cover. This will be the same defence as last season, and looks fairly strong. On the forward line they have Pitre at centre, Payan at left wing and Berlanguette on the right boards. Con. Corbeau, Patsy Beguin, Delaire, Bougie and possibly Jerry Laflamme of the St. Michael's, Toronto, team, will be carried as spares. George Kennedy says that his team has been training for the last month, and will give the Ottawas a run for their money.

Wanderers Very Weak.

Wanderers line-up is still problematical, but they should again have the veteran Riley Hern, in the nets. Riley announced that he would drop out if he could get anyone to take his place, but as yet no one has been signed for the job. Art Ross will be at point with "Pud" Glass at cover. Fred Taylor is expected to play centre, and the two Cleghorns will hold down the wings, Sprague at left and Odie at right. For spares they have Bernier and Rankin. It is likely that they will also have a couple of players from the two Toronto teams, but as yet the men have not been divided up. Wanderers will have a fair defence, but that forward line, while they look good on paper, may not turn out to be up to much. They will need the practice badly.

Quebec Not Improved.

Paddy Moran is the "white hope" of the Quebec outfit. He is the ancient Capital have been able to hang onto. Quebec will have one advantage over the other teams. They have had ice there for some time, and the men should be in good condition. Barney Holden will be on the job at point, with Joe Hall, the "bad man," at cover. On the forward line they have Dunderdale, McDonald, Mallen and Prodgers. They also claim Odie Cleghorn, but it is only an outside chance that he will be out with them. Quebec are on the lookout for men, and are picking up some promising youngsters from the city league or the Ancient Capital.

Ottawa at Full Strength.

With the team that Ottawa can put on the ice it looks as if the league will resolve itself into a cry of "too much Ottawa" from the other cities. With the exception of Bruce Ridpath, the Ottawas have the same team on the ice this year as they had last. Percy Lesueur, Fred Lake, Hamby Shore, Jack Darragh, Albert Kerr, Marty Walsh, Skeene Ronan, Eddie Gerard and possibly a couple of other amateurs, will be on the list this season.

Defence Good.

While all the teams are fairly strong on the defence none of them have anything to write home about on the forward line. Ottawa has the same line that was strong enough to win the Stanley Cup while the other teams are all weakened. Wanderers have lost four of their best, and Canadiens bade farewell to any chance of the championship at the same time that they bade farewell to Lalonde and Poulin. Quebec have never been in the hunt in recent years and this year should prove no exception. On the defence also Ottawa have a big edge. Percy Lesueur is the king of them all in the nets. Fred Lake, at point, is a veteran, and Hamby Shore, at cover, can look after all that comes along. From present appearances Ottawa has a big margin on the other teams at every position, Fred Taylor being the only star left outside of the local ranks.

WALTER KNOX AFTER THE ALL-ROUND CHAMPIONSHIP

TUESDAY, DEC. 22.—Walter R. Knox, the Canuck athlete, who was so successful in Scotland last season returned to-day from the West Shining Tree gold district, in New Ontario, where he has several good claims. He is accompanied by his brother, W. C. Knox, who is interested in Gowganda.

Knox wants to take Tom Longboat back to Scotland with him next year and says that if the Indian will go, he can campaign him there all summer at the pro. meets and get nice money.

"I'm going to the old country next year if all is well, to challenge Jock McKenzie, the all-round pro. champion, for his title, and if I beat him, which I a mconfident of doing, I will then take up the challenge of Webster, the Australian," said Knox. "McKenzie wants to compete for glory, but Webber wants a $500 side bet, for an all-round card, which includes swimming, cycling, physical culture, weight lifting, and athletics. Now, he has enough athletics on the card for me to win, and, in addition I can swim and cylce well, while I doubt if he can beat me at weight lifting."

Knox says that the Scotch "pro" authorities are very severe on athletes who compete under assumed names, or who pull off crooked deals.

"The Jedbow Club followed one runner six months, and when they found out who he was prosecuted him, and he got six months," said Knox.

"Well, you competed under the name of Charlie Sterns?"

"Yes, but they allow you to have a running nam de plume if you tell them who you really are," was the reply. "I did that. I certainly will go back to Scotland and I'll run in the Powderhall handicap January 1, 113, if everything is O.K. Longboat can make big money if he can win this year's marathon, but I think the cold rain and frost will affect him in this year's race."

Feb. 23, T. A. S. at Campbellford.

HOCKEY

Hockey players are reminded of the work-out to-night at the Y.M.C.A. at 7.30 o'clock, which will be the last until Wednesday evening next. Only two weeks away is the first game of the season, and judging by to-day's weather there will be very little ice practice. The teams will have to be picked from those who have been training out at the Y.M.C.A. and are in condition as there will be little opportunity of judging of a player's ability on the ice. It is up to the men who want to play to regularly attend the Y.M.C.A. workout.

ENJOYABLE PROMENADE

Pupils of Business College Hold Enjoyable Concert and Promenade.

A very enjoyable function took place at the Business College last night, when the pupils held a promenade and social evening, as an appropriate close to the term. There was a large number attended and splendid music was supplied for the evening by an orchestra consisting of Miss Smith, Mr. Haggard and Mr. Wm. Miller.

Mr. Logan, Principal, presided very acceptably as chairman.

A programme of unusual merit, followed by a promenade and social evening, including dainty refreshments, constituted the events of the evening. The numbers on the programme were as follows:

Vocal solo—Miss Stella Sherwin.
Instrumental—The Misses McKee.
Violin solo—Mr. Haggard.
Instrumental—Miss Gladys Patterson.
Recitation—Miss K. V. McCabe.
Vocal solo—Mr. James Rabelley.
Reading—Miss E. Mullegan.

Tommy Burns

From the Sydney Referee

Tommy burns is a prosperous business man nowadays, and looks it. He runs a haberdashery store at Calgary, in the Province of Alberta, Canada, which is paying handsomely. Thus much I gathered during a chat with the world's ex-champion boxer directly he landed from the Canadian-Australian liner, R.M.S. Makura, last Saturday morning.

A large number of the many friends Tommy made during his lengthy sojourn here a year or so ago were on the wharf to greet him, and the handshakes were warm indeed, while a big crowd cheered.

Burns has filled out a good deal, but he looks uncommonly well.

Questioned regarding those cablegrams to the effect that he would like to enter the ring again in opposition to Johnson, the visitor said he would not mind a ten-round go on clean-break lines just to convince himself as to whether he or Johnson had the greater skill, if it could be arranged; but having learned a moment or two before that Johnson had retired, he felt satisfied another meeting was impossible. "Still," remarked Burns, with a smile, "Johnson may not really be retiring.

"No, I am not here to engage in contests of any kind. I promised myself this trip some months ago, and would have started out before but for taking a hand in politics to the extent of doing my utmost to get an anti-reciprocity man in, and I succeeded. I like Americans, but, being a Canadian, I am a Briton, and know that we can get very much more from the old country than from our neighbours."

Questioned regarding business matters, Tommy said never once since embarking in commercial pursuits had he looked back. His haberdashery store is a veritable gold mine, and he has made considerable money by turning over real estate and in other directions.

"Things have gone so well with me," continued the ex-boxer, "that my good fortune is often referred to. My brother Eddie seems to have been born under the same lucky star. I started him in a garage with a couple of automobiles, and the venture prospered exceedingly from the very beginning. When I left Eddie was handling more than £100 a month, and indications were for considerable improvement. Before coming away on this trip I approved of plans and made arrangements for the erection of a home to cost in the neighbourhood of £5,000."

On his way to Australia Tommy had a great reception in Auckland, New Zealand, where several good sports took him in hand.

NEW YEAR'S AND XMAS RATES

Baseball Gossip

Arthur Irwin, who is a close student of baseball rules, says the proposition to modify the foul strike rule in order to increase batting and lessen the effectiveness of pitching will not go through both major leagues. Irwin admits that the rule prevents hard hitting in many instances, but he says it cannot be changed without lengthening the time cosumed in playing games.

"The foul strike rule was passed for the purpose of shortening the games so that the fans could get home at a reasonably early hour. A modification would mean a return to the former evils. There are players in both leagues who can foul off as many pitched balls as they want to and with the present rule changed they will cause unnecessary delays. There's one change that might be made, however, that of calling balls fouls that go behind the catcher within a certain radius of the home plate."

Irwin insists, too, that the raised pitcher's box is necessary because it belongs to a sytem of drainage for the infield.

Connie Mack, whose opinion on baseball matters is worth something, says Harry Wolverton, the Highlanders' new manager, this compliment: "Wolverton has a fine personality. He has a way peculiarly his own of getting along with ball players. If a man doesn't hustle Wolverton will come down on him as hard as any manager. But he isn't a bull-doser by any means. He has just enough executive ability to make him a first-class manager. He was a tip-top player and knows every angle of the game. You cannot develop a champion team in one season, but I feel sure that Wolverton will have a winner next season. He has new material to begin with and his aggressiveness will help a lot."

John McGraw, when asked in Havana one day last week to outline his plans for next season, was quoted as saying that he would make no changes in the Giants' regular line-up. "We had a good team this year," said the manager, "and the men will greatly improve next season. It is wise to let well enough alone. Some of the young players lacked experience during the recent campaign, and that was why we lost the world's series. I am not worrying about the future. The Giants will be in the fight of 1912 from the jump."

The Boston National League Club was sold to the Ward-Gaffney-Carroll syndicate for $192,000, including $18,000 in debts. For 945 shares $174,004 was paid, $1,000 less than the estimated price published in last Thursday's Sun. If Ward and company had failed to exercise their option George Stallings, the Buffalo manager, had three men in line who were ready to pay $200,000 for the property. Ward, however, stole a march on everybody when he signed a contract on Dec. 9th to take over the stock three days later.

the Eastern League. I cannot help but feel, however, that traditions are worth something, and a change of name means to a large extent the loss of tradition. Still, Edward Barrow and his old league under a new name are deserving of all success, and they should have it, too, as Mr. Barrow has proved himself a good executive and was deserving of re-election for a five-year term.

HOCKEY

Hockey players are reminded of the work-out to-night at the Y.M.C.A. at 7.30 o'clock, which will be the last until Wednesday evening next. Only two weeks away is the first game of the season, and judging by to-day's weather there will be very little ice practice. The teams will have to be picked from those who have been training out at the Y.M.C.A. and are in condition as there will be little opportunity of judging of a player's ability on the ice. It is up to the men who want to play to regularly attend the Y.M.C.A. workout.

Grand Display of Christmas Meats —AT— Cox's Meat Market

RAILWAY NOTES

New levers have been installed at the Street Railway Co's interlocking plant where the track crosses that of the G.T.R. and over them a house is in the course of construction. This building will be a great convenience to the men who attend the levers, as previously they were exposed to the elements.

HARRY BRADSHAW'S XMAS BILL OF FARE

As usual, at this festive season, Harry Bradshaw has provided an abundance of good things for housekeepers. His trim, brimful grocery, fruit and fish store, 352-354 Charlotte street, is fully primed for the biggest kind of rush business. Everybody who wishes to lay in a choice supply of Christmas delicacies for the table will find the goods and the prices right. Don't miss the fine, fresh staple groceries, new raisins, nuts, dates, figs, mince meat, etc. Feast your eyes on the big California oranges—they are extra fancy; also, Florida oranges, Malaga grapes, bananas, lemons, grape fruit, cranberries, etc. Allan's sweet apple cider, 10c. per qt. Finest select oysters only 60c. quart, from reliable packers, and the ice boxes are packed with lake and sea fish. Anything you want in fresh vegetables, potatoes, fine crisp Canadian celery, apples, etc. Store open in the evenings. Both 'phones 271. Get busy 3d-145.

ENJOYABLE PROMENADE

Pupils of Business College Hold Enjoyable Concert and Promenade.

A very enjoyable function took place at the Business College last night, when the pupils held a promenade and social evening, as an appropriate close to the term. There was a large number attended and splendid music was supplied for the evening by an orchestra consisting of Miss Smith, Mr. Haggard and Mr. Wm. Miller.

Mr. Logan, Principal, presided very acceptably as chairman.

A programme of unusual merit, followed by a promenade and social evening, including dainty refreshments, constituted the events of the evening. The numbers on the programme were as follows:

Vocal solo—Miss Stella Sherwin.
Instrumental—The Misses McKee
Violin solo—Mr. Haggard.
Instrumental—Miss Gladys Patterson.
Recitation—Miss K. V. McCabe.
Vocal solo—Mr. James Rahelley.
Reading—Miss E. Mullegan.

Tommy Burns

From the Sydney Referee

Tommy burns is a prosperous business man nowadays, and looks it. He runs a haberdashery store at Calgary, in the Province of Alberta, Canada, which is paying handsomely. Thus much I gathered during a chat with the world's ex-champion boxer directly he landed from the Canadian-Australian liner, R.M.S. Makura, last Saturday morning.

A large number of the many friends Tommy made during his lengthy sojourn here a year or so ago were on the wharf to greet him, and the handshakes were warm indeed, while a big crowd cheered.

Burns has filled out a good deal, but he looks uncommonly well.

Questioned regarding those cablegrams to the effect that he would like to enter the ring again in opposition to Johnson, the visitor said he would not mind a ten-round go on clean-break lines just to convince himself as to whether he or Johnson had the greater skill, if it could be arranged; but having learned a moment or two before that Johnson had retired, he felt satisfied another meeting was impossible. "Still," remarked Burns, with a smile, "Johnson may not really be retiring.

"No, I am not here to engage in contests of any kind. I promised myself this trip some months ago, and would have started out before but for taking a hand in politics to the extent of doing my utmost to get an anti-reciprocity man in, and I succeeded. I like Americans, but, being a Canadian, I am a Briton, and know that we can get very much more from the old country than from our neighbours."

Questioned regarding business matters, Tommy said never once since embarking in commercial pursuits had he looked back. His haberdashery store is a veritable gold mine, and he has made considerable money by turning over real estate and in other directions.

"Things have gone so well with me," continued the ex-boxer, "that my good fortune is often referred to. My brother Eddie seems to have been born under the same lucky star. I started him in a garage with a couple of automobiles, and the venture prospered exceedingly from the very beginning. When I left Eddie was handling more than £100 a month, and indications were for considerable improvement. Before coming away on this trip I approved of plans and made arrangements for the erection of a home to cost in the neighbourhood of £5,000."

On his way to Australia Tommy had a great reception in Auckland, New Zealand, where several good sports took him in hand.

Baseball Gossip

Arthur Irwin, who is a close student of baseball rules, says the proposition to modify the foul strike rule in order to increase batting and lessen the effectiveness of pitching will not go through both major leagues. Irwin admits that the rule prevents hard hitting in many instances, but he says it cannot be changed without lengthening the time cosumed in playing games.

"The foul strike rule was passed for the purpose of shortening the games so that the fans could get home at a reasonably early hour. A modification would mean a return to the former evils. There are players in both leagues who can foul off as many pitched balls as they want to and with the present rule changed they will cause unnecessary delays. There's one change that might be made, however, that of calling balls fouls that go behind the catcher within a certain radius of the home plate."

Irwin insists, too, that the raised pitcher's box is necessary because it belongs to a sytem of drainage for the infield.

Connie Mack, whose opinion on baseball matters is worth something, pays Harry Wolverton, the Highlanders' new manager, this compliment: "Wolverton has a fine personality. He has a way peculiarly his own of getting along with ball players. If a man doesn't hustle Wolverton will come down on him as hard as any manager. But he isn't a bull-dozer by any means. He has just enough executive ability to make him a first-class manager. He was a tip-top player and knows every angle of the game. You cannot develop a champion team in one season, but I feel sure that Wolverton will have a winner next season. He has new material to begin with and his aggressiveness will help a lot."

John McGraw, when asked in Havana one day last week to outline his plans for next season, was quoted as saying that he would make no changes in the Giants' regular line-up. "We had a good team this year," said the manager, "and the men will greatly improve next season. It is wise to let well enough alone. Some of the young players lacked experience during the recent campaign, and that was why we lost the world's series. I am not worrying about the future. The Giants will be in the fight of 1912 from the jump."

The Boston National League Club was sold to the Ward-Gaffney-Carroll syndicate for $192,000, including $18,000 in debts. For 945 shares $174,001 was paid, $1,000 less than the estimated price published in last Thursday's Sun. If Ward and company had failed to exercise their option George Stallings, the Buffalo manager, had three men in line who were ready to pay $200,000 for the property. Ward, however, stole a march on everybody when he signed a contract on Dec. 9th to take over the stock three days later.

the Eastern League. I cannot help but feel, however, that traditions are worth something, and a change of name means to a large extent the loss of tradition. Still, Edward Barrow and his old league under a new name are deserving of all success, and they should have it, too, as Mr. Barrow has proved himself a good executive and was deserving of re-election for a five-year term.

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

CONVICTED OF SWINDLE

ALBION, DEC. 20.—District Attorney John C. Knickerbocker, of this village, secured a well-earned victory when he convicted Herbert M. Whiting, a nursery agent of Geneva, N. Y., and Boston, Mass., who has done many thousands of dollars worth of business in the Western New York counties, and has been indicted by two Orleans County Grand Juries for his unlawful acts. When arraigned in the criminal term of Supreme Court in Buffalo, Thursday, Whiting withdrew his former plea of not guilty, and pleaded guilty as charged in the indictment. He paid the fine, which was imposed by Judge Wheeler.

The Whiting case has attracted more than ordinary attention in Orleans, Monroe, Niagara, and other counties in this locality where Whiting has done business. In Orleans County alone he is said to have disposed of over $20,000 worth of nursery stock. The Orleans and Monroe County Fruit Growers' Association, and individual farmers, have held several meetings and combined in fighting the attempt of Whiting to collect for the nursery stock, which, it has been claimed, was sold under misrepresentation.

Whiting, it is claimed, did business under the assumed name of "The Whiting Nursery Company". The Orleans County Grand Jury in June, 1910, handed up four counts against Whiting for alleged violations.

On February 27, 1911, the Grand Jury returned an indictment against Whiting, charging him with a misdemeanor in, as alleged, having conducted a business under an assumed name.

The sales were made in the towns of Albion, Barre, Carlton, Gaines, Murray and Ridgeway in Orleans County, while Whiting was representing himself as an agent, and one of the firm of the "Whiting Nursery Co." (so called). It later developed that he was the company and that he had not complied with the law in having a certificate in the Orleans, or any other County Clerk's office in New York State, setting forth the name under which the business was conducted.

Many farmers who ordered stock of Whiting, claimed that their orders in some cases, had been raised from one to one dozen, that the stock delivered was not that of a rare specimen of tree, or some greatly valued fruit, and that the stock was affected with San Jose scale and, in some cases, dead.

August 14, 1911, Justice Charles Pooley sent the case to trial in Supreme Court in Buffalo. When the case was presented in Buffalo yesterday Whiting was represented by Attorney Charles B. Sears. The former plea of not guilty was withdrawn, and Whiting pleaded guilty to the indictment, as charged. Judge Wheeler stated that he did not consider that any one had been seriously injured by Whiting's acts, and he would not impose the extreme penalty of the law, which would be a fine of $500, or one year in state prison, or both fine and imprisonment, so Whiting was discharged after the payment of a fine of $5.

Whiting is now said to be doing business in one of the western counties of the state.

KIT'S COLUMN

THE TURKEY'S CHRISTMAS CAROL

How blest, how envied, were our life,
Could we but escape the poulterer's knife!
But man, curst man, on turkeys preys,
And Christmas shortens all our days.
Sometimes with oysters we combine,
Sometimes assist the savoury chine;
From the low peasant to the lord,
The turkey smokes on every board.

If a vote were taken as to the most famous Christmas dinners, which that you know of, remember, or have read of would have the majority? Would it be that of jolly Mr. Pepys revelling for hours upon "a goose pye and a turkey pye," or the Royal dinner at Sandringham or Buckingham Palace with the boar's head carried in state, the roast cygnets reared on the lovely backwaters of the Thames, the peacock dressed in his plumage, the mince and plum pudding?

I think an overwhelming majority would go to a dinner of two courses, plainly served in a humble room, where "an active little crutch" made music on the floor. The very soul of Christmas lives like an evergreen in Dickens, and though the Fat Boy might tempt you with beckonings and chuckles to spend Christmas at jovial Mr. Wardles, with the immortal Pickwick, it is at Bob Cratchits most of us linger longest. You may read all sorts of beautiful Christmas stories, ghost stories, in which dim old wardrobes and curtained four-posters cut an old-world figure; stories of daring and adventure, of kissing under the mistletoe and lovers' dear vows; of Christmas banquets and Christmas cheer, but these will entertain you less than those young Cratchits who "stuffed spoons into their mouths lest they should shriek for goose"—for down the dim aisles of Time for many and many an age to come will ring the sweet, clear, tender note of The Christmas Carol.

And here is the place for our annual Christmas toast. Fill your glasses with anything you please, but drink standing::

To the memory of Charles Dickens.

To him whose big heart understood human nature and pitied and loved it even in its weakness: To him who preached charity and love towards one another, especially at this holy, God-given time:: To him who left the Spirit of Christmas living for ever in his books to cheer and hearten the poorest of us when that blessed time comes: To him more especially because of the centenary which is at hand:: To him, that for the blessing which he left, and the gospel that he taught, his spirit may be blessed to-day.

Gentlemen: Charles Dickens. May his memory remain green for ever.

It is the eleventh hour. But there is still time. If, therefore, you have forgotten any whom you should remember, think of them now. If you have not paid your Christmas dues to your poorer brother, pay them now. If, like Scrooge, you have refused to put your hand in your pocket because there are "plenty of public charities;" because you say "Let the other fools do that sort of thing;" because "indiscriminate giving is against my principles;" or because of any other reason you can rake up to save your purse—wake up from your dream, as Scrooge did, and out of what you have—no matter how little—give something. And give it with the real, hearty, genuine Christmas spirit, not thinking of reward or return, not even thinking comfortably of the joy of giving—but altogether and absolutely in the name of Him who came shivering into the world in the manger and was warmed by the breath of the poor, humble beasts in the stable—in His name and for Love of Him and of His Mother, Mary.

Christmas may not be so picturesque in our methods of keeping it as it was in the olden time, but it is still the most democratic feast of any. Many of the pretty old customs have been lost, but some still obtain in old-world nooks of those wonderful islands called British.

At home in Ireland we always placed lighted candles in the windows on Christmas Eve, when the dark fell. Every house, great and small, shews some glimmer of light because of the blessed legend that the Christ-child is out there in the dark and cold, and the candle flame will show Him the way that He may not stumble. Often and often the hushed children gathered round old Betty listening to hear the sound of His little faltering feet, the small hearts filled with childish reverent sorrow. I can see as I write the withered face of the old woman, the light from the candle in her hand dancing and weaving shadows upon it, and the cluster of quiet children hearkening to the beat of the wind in the great oaks outside, and the sighing of the weeping willows.

Mystery, and legend and poetry! And Judas is allowed to visit the earth for this one night—so Betty would whisper. And "if wan of ye looks in the looking glass this night ye'll see him over your shoulder or the divil himself, maybe, an' he'll let a screech out of him at ye—the Lord be good to us!" And "wan of thim," seized one time with a mad desire to see the divil, did look, to be sure, "an' let a screech out of her" that frightened the whole house, though she saw nothing but her own terrified little face with eyes as black as black! I think it was this legend of the wandering Christ-child which Kipling had in mind when he wrote:

"Then said the soul of Judas that betrayed Him,
Lord, has Thou forgotten Thy covenant with me?
How once a year I go
To cool me on the floe;
And Ye take away my day of mercy
If Ye take away the sea."

An old quaint custom kept up in Devonshire is wassailing the apple trees. After a feast at the farmer's house, the lads and lasses go to the orchard and hang a cake on the nearest fork of an apple tree, and then pour a jug of cider over it. This is supposed to ensure a good crop of apples next season. Another Devonshire custom is to put a heap of sugar at the entrance to each hive on Christmas morning "so that the bees will know it is Christ's birthday. The ashen faggot is burnt on Christmas Day in Devonshire, the legend running that the Child at Bethlehem was first washed and dressed by a fire of ash wood. Gipsies on the other hand burn the ash logs on the Eve for a different reason: They say that the Ivy and and Holly and Pine Tree never told a word where our Saviour was hiding Himself in the Garden of Gethsemane, so they keep alive all winter, and look green all the year round. But the ash told of Him, so it has to remain dead, and gipsies burn it on the eve of the great birthday.

Now be sure that you buy—if you can (which is that untold "other story")—two bundles of holly—one of the prickly kind and one of the smooth. Buy these separately and compare them when you get home. Should the spiked holly make the larger heap the husband shall rule the house and wife for the coming year, but if the smooth holly be the bigger, then the wife rules the roost.

But you must play fair in the buying.

There is one faithful servant whom no one should forget on Christmas day—the postman. In rain, storm or blizzard, or that dead, still, cold weather which freezes the marrow, he is out on his rounds going from door to door. He never fails us, whether his news be good or bad. If he could have his way he would never bring any but happy messages. Few of us there are who do not, one day or another, watch eagerly for his coming, and he never fails us. He is such a common, daily sort of occurrence, so to put it, that he is more likely than others to be forgotten. But he should not be. His salary is none too large and his family always is. He never asks, and is the quietest, most unobtrusive of all our public servitors. On Christmas Day it is our privilege to hand him an envelope with a silver lining. But go one better and give it to him on the Saturday before Christmas.

"A Wellwisher" finds after a delay that may cause him some laughter—a place for himself and his plaint here—Dare one suggest—with timidity and respect—that possibly the "maid" might be eliminated.

Dear Kit,—I know you will think me a back number when you read this. But I can't stand it any longer. Every day I read in the papers appeals for the poor, suffering children and women folk, but nobody ever thinks or is mindful of my poor old woman's suffering by not having a set of furs and a sealskin jacket to wear when she goes uptown to look at the nice things which the poor suffering people of this city are going to get thrown at them by some "philanscoopist" people who with their boundless generosity deal out so many good things which they have either borrowed or begged. Now, as I was saying, my old lady hasn't got a set of furs, nor a sealskin jacket either, while the hired girl sports both; and that is one reason my old lady has to stay at home Sundays and the "maid" goes to church. Now I ask you if there are any people more deserving of the solicitude of these sympathisers of the poor than such people as we are? Nobody seems to care for us. They think we are rich. Well, if $75 a month is riches, we have that, as long as I can attend the office. Now, that has to keep five persons, and I will show you how we spend it:

Rent costs	$23.00 per month
"Maid"	12.00 per month
Coal and light	10.00 per month
Church	2.00 per month
Street car	2.00 per month
Newspapers	1.00 per month
Insurance	2.50 per month
Boots for family	3.00 per month
Clothes for family	3.00 per month
Clothes or self	2.50 per month
Bread and flour	4.00 per month
Meat and vegetables,	8.00 per month
	$75.00

You will see there are not many luxuries in this, and nothing for renewals of furniture. Yet this family is among the "respectable class." They do not expect "charitable" people to buy their children boots and shoes and underclothing, nor buy them medicine and pay the doctors. Yet as a class I think they are more worthy of consideration and sympathy than the professional cadgers who are becoming so numerous in our city. These self-respecting and self-supporting people I have referred to are even being dunned constantly by the societies and people who minister to the cadging class. Can't you say a word or two, Kit, in behalf of the hundreds of overworked and worried self-respecting and self-supporting housekeeping class referred to? And tell the "philanscoopers" to let up a little in their sympathies for the domestic servant, the poor but elegant and haughty shop girl and typist, and professional cadgers. The latter people have few or no social or civic responsibilities, and are well able, or ought to be, to look after themselves when they are in health. Let the housekeeping class I have referred to have more consideration, even if the servant or "lady help" or cadgers should get a little less.

Wishing you the compliments of the season and many happy years.

A WELLWISHER.

Those of you who have read that amazing story, "The History of Sir Richard Calmady," may welcome a new book from Lucas Melet, the author of it. "Adrian Savage" is a more finished production than the former book. It is not so brutal, not so direct—I might say coarse, as is the terrible story of the misshapen Sir Richard, and it has all, and more of the tenderness, the joyous appreciation of that which is lovely, and the just recognition in the shaping of life which went so far to make Sir Richard Calmady a bit of a master-fiction. The story in its artistic completeness, reminds one of the Greek tragedies. I cannot even hint at it here. To review properly such a book would require the filling of more than one column. In a mere paragraph all that one can say is that this novel, with its wonderfully subtle analyses of life and character, and its strong vein of somewhat sardonic humour, is one that gradually takes such hold on the imagination, that there is no laying down the book. And yet when one began it, it appeared—after lighter reading—a bit boresome and verbose. One looked at its four hundred and odd pages askance. What greater tribute can be paid to any book or any author, than that after the first reading one began all over again, lingering over certain passages, haunted anew by the Ibsen woman, Joanna Smyrthwaite, gripped by the horror of Rene Dax, pausing to walk in her secret garden with Anastasia Beauchamp, and at times scenting the golden gorse on the moorland and listening to the hush of the sea. A strong, vivid, brilliant book. An admirable and finished literary effort.

Having but this way of reaching my readers and certain shadowy old friends of many years' standing, I have but the same way of sending a message of thanks to them for the many kind letters and remembrances I am receiving this Christmas as in Christmases past. And it is the oldest message of all I send—Peace and goodwill—A Merrie Christmas to all—a little bit of happiness on Christmas Day to everyone. As the old doggerel hath it:

God bless the master of the house,
And the good wife also,
And all the bonnie little bairns
That round the table go.
For it is at this joyful time
That strangers travel far and near:
So a jolly Christmas I wish to you,
And a happy and fair New Year.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

December 24th, 1911.
(Copyright, 1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

CHRISTMAS LESSON

Jesus Born in Bethlehem.—Matt. ii.: 1-12.

Golden Text—Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.—Matt. ii.: 11.

1. Verses 1-2—Did God directly plan that Jesus should be born in a manger at Bethlehem? Why or why not

2. How did the wise men from the East know of the place and birth of Jesus?

3. Who were these wise men?

4. What reason is there to suppose that God revealed Himself in those days to the wise and devout men of other nations, as well as to those of the Jews?

5. Who was this Herod, and how long had he been King of Judea?

6. What does the lowly birth of Jesus signify to the world?

7. What did it presage that the wise men, scholars, philosophers, astronomers, about four million trees every year," said this dealer. "New York and New England alone account for about 1,500,000. The supply for this corner of the country comes principally from the hills of Maine and New Hampshire and from the Adirondacks, Berkshires and Catskills. The middle west gets its trees mainly from Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin."

8. God revealed the birth of Jesus by an angel to the shepherds and by a star to the wise men; would this indicate that the shepherds had the keener sense of the unseen? Why?

9. Does God to-day reveal Himself to any, other than by natural methods? Give your reasons.

10. Verse 3—Why had God not advised the wise men, the prophets and priests of Jerusalem of the birth of Christ?

11. Why were Herod and "all Jerusalem" troubled when they heard of the birth of Jesus?

12. If people are troubled when they stand in the presence of the supernatural, or the unusual, is that any indication that their consciences are not right with God? Why?

13. Verses 4-6—From what book did the priests and scribes quote? (See Mic. v., 2 et seq.)

14. What evidence is there that the prophet Micah had the birth of Jesus in mind when he penned his prophecy as quoted by these priests and scribes?

15. How much practical use do even the leaders in religious thought make of scripture prophecies, that are not yet fulfilled?

16. Verses 7-8—What reason is there to think that bad men generally hide their fears and jealousies when they seek to ruin the objects of their envy?

17. What cases, beside this, can you cite where wickedness has been concealed under a mask of great piety?

18. Verses 9-12—Is there any reason to think that Joseph, before his relationship to Christ, ever had converse with angels?

19. Does close relationship to Christ always give the ability to see and hear God? Give your reasons.

20. May we always have warning from God of impending danger to us or ours? Why?

21. How may we know when it is our duty to face danger or to fly from it?

22. If this holy family had to face such serious trouble, what does that indicate for the rest of us, and why is it?

23. Is it absolutely sae for us to follow the leadings of God as Joseph did?

24. When and how did God recall this holy family from Egypt?

HALF MILLION TREES

New York, Dec. 18.—New York city will use nearly half a million Christmas trees this year and the "ultimate" consumer will pay for them $250,000, or an average of fifty cents a tree. West street, where the steamers from New England dock, smells like a balsam forest these days, for the Christmas tree season is at its height, and thousands of the small firs are piled up beside the boat landings waiting for distribution to the retail trade.

"There appears to be no falling off in the demand for trees," said a dealer who handles thirty or forty thousand of them here every winter. "On the contrary, their popularity is increasing so that already there is a shortage in the supply. It takes from ten to fifteen years to raise a tree big enough to use, and those in the more accessible forests are fast being cut out.

J. W. BROWETT
Optometrist

Q. Why is it that glasses are worn so much more now than years ago?

A. Years ago the science of optics or correcting errors of sight was not understood as it is to-day; only old persons or those near-sighted wore Glasses. Now we correct with lenses all errors of sight.

Q. Why is it that cheap glasses do not give satisfaction?

A. Cheap glasses are so faulty in construction and are of such poor quality that they distort the vision and cause pain in the eyes. The optical glass used by us is brilliant, clear and perfect, insuring comfort and ease to the wearer.

Q. Can my headaches be relieved with glasses?

A. A personal visit will be necessary. Let us talk it over.

MILITANT SUFFRAGETTE HEN

All Salina is trying to answer the question of what kind of a chicken is the one belonging to the flock of Mrs. F. K. Baier's home, South Second Street, East Side.

It lays eggs, and therefore it isn't a rooster. It has fighting spurs and a good-sized comb, and therefore isn't a hen.

Frank Baier discovered the strange bird—that is, discovered the freak make-up of it.

It was always wanting to fight. It would generally pick on a rooster and would whip he rooster every time. But it didn't crow.—Salina, Kansas, Despatch to Chicago Inter-Ocean.

MICHAEL GODWIN'S CHRISTMAS BOX

(Short Story.)

BY KATHARINE TYNAN.

Michael Godwin's farm lay tucked away comfortably in a hollow of the South Downs. The downs swept upwards in all directions around it, and beyond was the sea. The sound of it, as it beat against the face of the cliff and tore the shingle screaming from the little strands only to fling it high as it came back again, reached Godwin's farm as a subdued murmur. The farm was a pretty place, especially in summer, when the chalk downs were covered with a thick carpet of beautiful wild flowers. But it was very lonely. Mr. Hurst, the Vicar, coming to see Michael at bare intervals, had said to him that such a solitude was only fit for a beast or a god. His kindly eyes, directed on Michael as he said it, took out of the words any suggestion of offence.

Michael Godwin only answered that the solitude did him well enough. There was old Nance in the kitchen to care for the house and him, and when he wanted talk there weren't many had more interesting things to tell than old Simon, who had kept the sheep on Godwin's farm, man and boy, for fifty years.

It was quite true. No one knew better than the Vicar how wise old Simon was and what things he could impart once he was won out of his silence. Still, it did not seem right that Michael Godwin should be content. He was a big, handsome giant of a fellow, showing his Saxon ancestry by his mass of fair hair, his blue eyes and fair skin, as well as by his name. Of course, there had been a trouble in his past. The girl he had loved and would have married had deserted him on his wedding eve for a life of gilded disgrace up in London. It had made a misogynist of the man; yet, oddly enough, it had not soured the sweetness of his nature. Solitary he might be and forbidding to his fellow-man; but the beasts could have told of his gentleness; and there was something in his face—wise with the wisdom of the fields and the open spaces—that forbade fear in the hearts of children or animals or wandering beggars or old people.

When he was not engaged in his farming work he liked to dig and plant in his garden, and he had made it a rich place of flowers. His little house, ivy-covered, the diamond-paned windows looking out from the overhanging eaves like kind old eyes under beetling brows, was as clean and comfortable as the heart of man or woman could desire. A thousand plies that because he had been ill-treated by a worthless hussy, Michael Godwin should condemn himself to a life of loneliness, and shut the door of his little paradise against the woman and the children who might have made his life happy for him.

The Vicar sighed to himself, remembering how the girls would look after Michael's stalwart figure as it strode through the villages or the town on market days. But Michael had no eyes for them. He would transact his business as quickly as might be, and back to his solitude again.

There were very often wrecks on that coast, and then no one could say that Michael Godwin led a selfish existence; for he was always out as soon as the bomb summoned the lifeboatmen, and he was among the first in the boats. But when he was looked for to receive praise and thanks, he was not to be found.

A good many people besides Mr. Hurst were of opinion that it was a thousand pities Michael Godwin could not forget the past and find a good girl to console him.

Only he himself knew that there was a core of bitterness in the peace he had acquired in his beloved solitude. He was not the healthy, sane person he was to be, cut off from the human needs and desires. He wanted his children about his knees like any other man. Only Lizzie had given him a sickening of life, and of women above all. No other woman should play him such a trick again. He had no belief in the general badness of women, as another man might have had in his place. His memory of his mother forbade that. Only his heart had shut fast against women. He had locked it and flung away the key. He could never love a woman again, he said to himself; and so he must grow old and die alone; and Godwin's Farm, which had been Godwins' from Saxon times, must pass to strangers.

One evening of late September the sea-fog came in and covered all the downs, shrouding Godwin's Farm and its lit windows in a soft, clinging haze. It was nothing unusual; but on this afternoon the fog had come suddenly. About eight o'clock in the evening Simon reported a sheep missing. He had been out on the downs searching, he and Buller, the finest sheepdog in these parts, but for once Buller had failed. The sheep must be lying in some deep ditch or other—perhaps fallen over the cliffs into the sea; perhaps on her back, somewhere, poor lass, unable to get up because of the weight of wool.

Michael Godwin took the lantern from the shepherd's hand and bidding him have his supper, called the dog to him and went out. It was not a safe night to be abroad unless one knew one's way very well. Even then, if one lost one's head and forgot to listen for the boom of the sea, one might quite easily stumble over the cliff's edge.

Michael Godwin and the dog went along with careful footsteps quietly through the fog pausing now and again to listen for the bleating of a sheep. It seemed to Michael Godwin that he had been hours in the fog. The air was pierced now and again by the sound of foghorns and signals from the vessels going down channel, and the great siren at the lighthouse blared her melancholy note at intervals, while he moved hither and thither, he and the dog, in a solitude of fog.

He was on the point of giving it up when he came upon the sheep. She was held fast by her wool and her horns in a thorny thicket. It took some time to extricate her, but once she was set free she was nothing the worse. As soon as she was released she set off running in the direction of home. Before Michael Godwin could lift the lantern at his feet the fog had swallowed her up. The sound of her bleating was faint in the distance.

The dog made no attempt to follow her. Indeed, while Michael had been working to extricate the sheep he had disappeared, gone off on some expedition of his own. But he had come back again and was rubbing himself against the man's legs. When Michael Godwin turned in the direction the sheep had taken, away from the noise of the sea, the dog intercepted him with so evident an intention of turning him back that the man could not but take notice.

"What is it, old Buller?" he asked. "What is it?" and felt that the dog must have some meaning for his behaviour, being always so wise and reasonable.

The dog ran a little way into the white obscurity towards the cliffs, came back and fawned on his master, then repeated the performance.

"There must be something," Michael Godwin said to himself, and followed the dog.

It required care and surefootedness to take the way the dog led, for the path went down, precipitously under Michael's foot, and he suspected that he was going down the side of one of the fissures in the chalk that made a little bay or chine. Below him, in the dark, he could hear the sea churning, and he was very glad that he had brought with him the shepherd's crook, which was a help to him in making the precipitous descent.

Although he was well used to these narrow and steep paths, yet he stumbled once or twice, as he felt for the path in the darkness under his feet. The lantern threw fitful shadows on the face of the chine as he went down. Now and again the dog came back to look for him and then ran on before into the darkness.

At last the path ended on a floor of mixed sand and shingle, with great lumps of chalk scattered about it. The sea only entered at high tide. It was now up to the mouth of the chine, and the air was filled with the thunder and reverberation of it against the cliff and the noise it made as it dragged down the stones of the beach.

Now he saw by the lantern light the thing the dog had led him to—at first a dark heap—of seaweed it might be; then, as he came nearer, a white face with a bleeding cut upon it revealed by the lantern-light. Good heavens! it was a drowned woman. One arm was flung out, the other held something closely against her breast; her long black hair lay over her pale cheek. The waves as they came up caught her—set her floating and receded from her.

He stooped over the woman. Then he set down the lantern, and putting his two hands under her arms lifted her a little higher beyond the reach of the waves. Why, poor soul, it was a child she had in her arms, a baby of, as Michael judged, about a year old.

She could not have been very long in the water else she had been more battered and bruised. Except for the cut upon her forehead, from which the blood slowly oozed, she was apparently uninjured. Her cold cheek was smooth under her heavy hair. Her eyes were closed and her face had a terrified expression. Was she dead? He had no means of knowing; but he said to himself that if she had any life remaining in her, or if the child had, the little spark would soon be extinguished unless they were taken to shelter and a fire.

He swung the lantern on the handle of the crook and began the ascent again by one of the innumerable paths the sheep had been making from time immemorial. It was no easy task to drag the woman on his one arm up the steep ascent, but he did not dare relinquish the lantern lest he should wander round in the fog all night.
